H. E. McHugh, one of our most popular business men was married today at Emmet, Michigan, to Helen Cogley of that place.

After the wedding trip to West Virginia, they will return to this city, and after November 15 will make their home for the winter with A. Powers.

A host of friends join in wishing this young couple success and will be glad to welcome them as residents of our city.

AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

Prominent Charlevoix Business Man Dies Friday Morning

Leaves Wife and One Small Child—Member of Masonic Order.

Friday morning our citizens were surprised on hearing that Levi Shea, who had been sick for a few days, had passed away early that morning. Mr. Shea was one of our best known business men, his chief characteristic being his uniform good nature and he will be much missed in the daily life of the city.

Levi Shea was born August 22, 1879, in Ontario, being one of a family of nine, three girls and six boys, of which he is the first one to be called by death. He came to this country over twelve years ago and learned the trade of harness maker of his uncle, James Oldham. About five years ago he came to Charlevoix and started business for himself.

Mr. Shea was married New Year's 1907, to Miss Catherine Finn of St. Louis, Missouri, who with one child, John, Jr., two years old, as well as his father, brothers and sisters are left behind. The funeral was held Tuesday at the Congregational church under the auspices of the Masonic Order of which Mr. Shea was a member, Rev. H. A. Patnam officiating. Mr. Shea was also a member of the I. O. F. at Fort William, Ontario.

Those from a distance attending the funeral were William and John Shea, father and brother of Bracebridge, Ontario, Mrs. Shea's mother, Mrs. Finn of St. Louis, James Oldham and wife and John Oldham Jr. of Petoskey.

During the hours of the funeral the business places of the city were closed as a mark of respect to one who was most highly thought of by his business associates.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic Theater has been the popular play house during the last few days. Last week the vaudeville attraction was very pleasing and enjoyable to everyone.

This week the Frank Zee-Rell Stock Company are producing some very clever playlets, and good vaudeville specialties as well. Mr. Zee-Rell, in himself, is a whole show in his impersonations of a child. Each member of the company seem to please and are able to depict each respective part as though the parts were written for them.

During the rest of the week this company will play the following bills nightly: Thursday, "The Merry Widow." Friday, "School-days." Saturday, "The Katzenjammer Kids." Saturday Matinee.

Next week the Colonel Mack Stock Company will play on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, changing program every evening. This company comes here well recommended and will undoubtedly be as pleasing as the past vaudeville ventures of the new management.

COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE

State of Michigan Should Have Such an Official

SAYS VICE-PRESIDENT A. P. PATRIARCHE

Pere Marquette Official Tells How It Would Help State

Development Bureaus are Duplicating Work—What is Being Done in Canada and Wisconsin.

"Michigan should have a commissioner of agriculture," declared Arthur P. Patriarche, vice-president of the Pere Marquette railway, whose peculiar work in the railway field has to do mainly with the traffic department. "What is more, the commissioner of agriculture should be an appointive office, for in this way only the best qualified man in the state could then be chosen for the berth.

"The trouble with the present system, as far as it relates to agriculture, is that now there is no official head to this important branch of our citizenship, no continuity of policy or no co-ordinating force to gather up the scattered threads. This work now devolves upon the secretary of state, who is usually a professional man, generally unqualified by education or out of touch with the conditions that are so vital to agriculture life.

"For instance, just at present, there are four societies acting independently, but doing great and important work for Michigan. I refer to the Western Michigan Development bureau, the Northern Michigan Development bureau and North Eastern Michigan Development bureau and the Fennville Fruit association.

"Now all these societies are doing splendid work. In some cases they are doing splendid work. In some cases they are duplicating one another's work. They are, however, restricted to their own particular fields necessarily. They cannot be expected to do the pioneer work in experimental agriculture which the modern state now performs.

"The federal government is by the constitution restricted in its work in behalf of agriculture almost to an advisory capacity alone. It is doing good work by means of its farm bulletins, its distribution of seeds and the other functions which it performs, but it cannot get down to a study of local conditions.

"It is necessarily restricted to an agronomic policy which takes in the United States as a whole. In this respect, for instance, the federal limitations are much more closely defined than are those of the department of agriculture in the Dominion of Canada, in the French republic and elsewhere.

"The rivalry between states has been keen. Michigan has been left in the lurch at times until the associations I have mentioned started their respective propagandas. The Ottawa farmer is getting more from provincial and federal governments than our Michigan farmers are getting.

"They are not afraid to spend either. The state of Wisconsin is expending from $100,000 to $200,000 annually in behalf of agriculture. The total agricultural levy in Michigan for one year amounted to $213,710. Now Michigan and Wisconsin have many analogous points. Originally, both states were covered with the same kind of timber, their respective soils are similar, their populations, their respective areas add their respective cultures are most identical.

"The year that Michigan had $213,710 on agriculture the province of Ontario voted $213,511.30 for the same purposes. I am not going to venture an opinion on just what Michigan should expend on this important branch of our state economy, but I think that the present outlay is altogether too small."

Circus Bareback Riders.

The career of a bareback rider with a circus is limited to about ten years. It is short not so much because these men and women lose their agility, but because they lose their nerve.

The tension and agitation are so strained and marked that it is only a few riders who are able to perform their startling feats more than a decade.

Recklessness and daring die when youth ripens into age, and as all riders, as a rule, marry young added responsibility, coupled with a lively sense of danger, cause them to retire or else seek some less strenuous life.

These riders are well paid, the majority of them commanding from $150 to $250 a week.—Jamestown Post.

UNITED DOCTORS

Of Minneapolis, Minnesota

An Association of Prominent Physicians Giving FREE Medical Services to the Sick and Medicines at Cost

Coming to Charlevoix at Baker's Inn, Monday, November 6th ONE DAY ONLY

The Northwestern United Doctors duly organized and licensed by the state for the purpose of treating diseases, deformities and all curable ailments without surgical operation. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in this locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are absolutely sure and certain in their effect.

By their developed system no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, or cancer. They were among the first in America to do away with the knife, blood and pain in the successful treatment and cure of these dangerous diseases.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys and bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bedwetting, leg ulcers, epilepsy, or fits, etc., all treated with gratifying success. Consumption, asthma, bronchitis and catarrhal diseases absolutely cured with combination of medicine, hygiene, diet, exercise and the important, uses and advantages of clothes, occupation, etc. Many cases of deafness are frequently cured in sixty days. Cataracts, granulated lids and old weak, watery, sore eyes treated after a fashion that knows no fail. In long standing deep-seated, chronic diseases of men and women, and slow growths and undeveloped children's diseases, a treatment that is absolutely certain in its effects can be had and depended upon. Thousands of patients throughout the Northwest attest the ability of the Northwestern United Doctors to cure these dread diseases.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others have told you, no matter what experience you have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to treat with the Northwestern United Doctors Specialists. Even if your case is incurable they will give you such advice that will relieve you and stay the disease. There is no string tied to this proposition, they mean just what they say and will do to your advantage what they contend. Every specialist is prominent in his line and stands at the head of the profession.

Do not put off this duty you owe yourself, your friends, and your relatives, as a visit this time costs you nothing and may save your life.

If you have kidney or bladder trouble, bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

Remember this free offer is for this trip only.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER, AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE room in the Fourth National bank of Springfield, Ill., in which the new vault had been constructed, was a large, somewhat irregularly shaped room, opening from the assistant cashier's office, and one directly opposite, which led to a narrow hallway opening into the main hall.

Along this narrow hallway were doors opening into the offices of various officials of the bank. The vaults in which were kept the currency and negotiable papers, bonds, stocks, notes, etc., were on the floor below, and the new vault built against the wall at the rear of the room was designed as a receptacle for the bank's books of account. Therefore it had a larger interior than an ordinary vault, and as the shelves had not yet been built in there were several feet of free space inside, which would be occupied by books and records later on.

The huge steel ribbed door had been left invitingly open by the workmen engaged in adding the finishing touches, and consequently it afforded an unequalled source of delight to Bobby and Kitty, whose active imaginations readily converted the interior of the vault into the cave of daring smugglers who, presumably gone on a desperate enterprise, had left deserted their secret cavern and the precious contraband articles which, Bobby assured Kitty, were surely to be found there. So what was there for a high spirited little girl to do, when her brother, who never failed at asserting his superiority over a mere girl and the superiority of the "men folk" in general, insisted that she go first into the yawning blackness of the big safe? Surely she must maintain the traditions of the fearlessness of her sex as she knew them and "take the dare" which Bobby forced upon her.

Slowly into the steel bound shadow she went, her waxen faced doll clutched tightly against her throbbing bosom—yet in she went. Suddenly the huge door scraped shut. All was blackness. As she screamed in her fright she heard the click of the metal bars as Bobby playfully turned the handles. Then all was silent, save for the moans of the little girl as she lurched blindly toward the door of the safe and scratched the metal thickness with her tiny nails.

The dolly fell to the floor, the ends of the soft little fingers began to bleed from frenzied contact with the bars that ribbed the interior of the safe door, and after a few moments the wee girl's form sank limply to the bottom of the vault, where she gasped convulsively to breathe in the air that was gradually losing its life supporting qualities. Not many minutes would elapse ere she had consumed all the precious oxygen in the suffocating interior of the necessarily air tight vault.

As Jimmy Valentine dashed into the vault room he cried to Red Flanagan, who was at his heels: "Go get one of the clerks to run for some sandpaper. Pumice stone is too soft for this job. My fingers are not in shape for a trick like this. Go! Red!"

Red turned and dashed away on his urgent errand. Well he knew just how necessary it was for Jimmy Valentine to have sandpaper to rescue Kitty if it were true that the skin on his fingers had grown calloused or had reached even its natural thickness.

Jimmy Valentine pulled manfully at the handles of the vault door. Perhaps, after all, the combination had not been turned and only the door's weight held it in place. But the metal barrier would not move. He pressed his ear to the hairlike crack. He heard the sound as of a little body falling to the floor and the faint moans of the prisoner calling, "Bobby, Bobby, Bobby!"

Valentine bent over the combination, peered sharply at it, then began to twirl the cylinders gently. Around and then back he turned the knob. No: it was of no use. Nothing could be done until the sandpaper arrived. His fingers had lost their sensitiveness and hence their cunning, and in the meantime Valentine well knew the prisoner was consuming whatever of the priceless air that remained.

The door leading from his office swung open, and again Red Flanagan darted in. He hung himself on the vault room floor directly below Valentine's knees and held his ear close to the crack of the safe door.

"Think you can make it, Jimmy?" he gasped.

"Guess so; never failed on a lock like this. Why, in God's name, don't that fool come with that sandpaper?" Valentine was desperate at the delay. "He's gone to n—here he is!" cried Red as he heard hurrying footsteps in the assistant cashier's office. Red jumped to his feet and out into Valentine's room. He seized the roll of sandpaper from the messenger's hands.

"What are you going to do with it?" asked the inquisitive clerk. Red shoved him away and darted back toward the vault room.

"None of your business," he cried, "and keep out of here."

"Give it here. What is it?" exclaimed Valentine as Red ran to him.

"No. 4."

"That's best. Is the bank empty?" "Yes, thank God, Mr. Lane has gone. There's no one here to pipe what we're doing—and even if there was we'd just internally have to go through with it—for that girl Kitty!" "Shut up!" cried Valentine nervously. He bent over and rubbed his fingers briskly across the gritty surface of one of the sheets of sandpaper which Red had handed him—rubbed until the white flesh showed pink. Red stood and watched him breathlessly. The sound of Valentine's fingers scraping back and forth across the face of the sandpaper seemed to his feverish brain the physical demonstration of an evil being, appalled him as a sinister omen of impending doom. He had heard a story of his old grandmother's, when a young lad, that of tea when a person was going to die a mysterious tick, tick, tick would be heard in the faded house, the sound coming as though from a mysterious watch concealed in the wall—the "death tick." As the sound of the scraping fingers continued the zip, zip, zip, zip echoed from the walls and smote into Red's ears and into Red's brain—an ominous reminder of that long forgotten tale.

THE FACE OF GEORGE DOYLE APPEARED IN THE DOORWAY

And, strangely enough, Red's premonition of the presence of an unseen menace was not without foundation in fact. It may be that this active career in the underworld had developed in him that sixth sense of the habitual thief which sometimes gives him warning of approaching dangers.

As Red stood there fascinatedly watching the rapid play of Valentine's fingers the door leading into the narrow hallway suddenly opened—opened just enough to allow the sound of the scraping fingers to reach the ear pressed against the crack between the door and the jam. A few inches more of space—and the face of George Doyle appeared in the doorway.

As the door on opening swung toward the rear of the chamber toward the vault, Doyle, shielded by it, was enabled to put one foot over the sill and stand half within the vault room. Pressing himself close against the door, he could watch in the darkened, shadowy room the operations of Red Flanagan and Mr. Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine.

He saw the sheet of sandpaper flutter to the floor; he saw Valentine flick his fingers with his tongue to ease the burning pain that throbed through them; he saw Red Flanagan drop on his knees and crouch against the door of the giant safe; he saw Valentine step forward, seize the combination with the tips of his fingers, press his ear against the vault and gently, caressingly, ever so gently, twirl the shining nickel knob of the combination.

George Doyle had his dearest wish gratified. At last he saw the great Jimmy Valentine at work.

Scientific Management.

The general manager of a great industry in passing through one of his shops was suddenly struck with the idea that a way might be found to utilize the daily tons of waste from timber and steel, says the Woman's World. Shortly afterward he employed a young chemist to enter the plant and devote his time to experiments with these chips and scraps and shavings. Although at work less than one year, the chemist has found that 500,000 lbs. resulted from the scientist's investigations. A few years ago the business men held the student in contempt and collected his "theories." Today they are largely depending upon him to earn their dividends.

Airing a Room.

In airing a room there are two things to be remembered—first, that the pure air must be allowed to escape, and, secondly, that fresh air must be admitted. Impure air in a room is always warm and will therefore rise toward the ceiling, when it will escape if the window is opened at the top, while cold fresh air will enter through the lower part of the window when opened.

Love at First Sight

And a Courtship Begun Under Difficulties

By MILDRED BAKER.
 Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Eggleston met his fate in a very unromantic place, a street car. He entered the car, took a seat, fumbled in his vest pocket for a nickel, paid the conductor for his ride, and a bell announced that the Public Service company had come by its own. Then Eggleston began to look about him.

Directly opposite sat the girl who was destined to stir up a commotion in Eggleston's heart. It was a certain expression on her face that won him—not melancholy exactly, but something akin to melancholy. Her features also attracted him. Beauty is a matter of opinion, and to Eggleston she was beautiful. Her eyes were blue and her hair was blond with a tint of gold in it. Her figure was symmetrical.

Though Eggleston was conscious of being whirled he did not know how badly he was hit, else he would have left the car when the girl left it and learned where she could be found with a view to making her acquaintance. As it was he let her go out from him into the great world and as soon as he had done so considered himself a fool. The car started on, and he made frantic signs to the conductor to stop, but there was no stop till the next crossing, and by the time Eggleston got back to where the girl had left, the car she had disappeared.

Eggleston was seized with one of those inexplicable impulses, ideas, desires or whatever they are to possess this particular woman. It was with him an ideal attraction, and it was overpowering. He swore a big oath that he would marry his street car girl and no other. This was ridiculous, for there was little chance of his meeting her again and no way by which he could find her. The consequence was that he was more than likely to go through life a single man.

But luck favored him. After pining two years for his lost love that he had never seen but once, and that in a street car, he stumbled on her under far more ideal circumstances. She was sitting on a rock at the seashore, the waves rolling in on either side of her. Eggleston approached her from the side, and when he came within a few yards of her she turned, looked at him and again directed her gaze out upon the boundless ocean.

Eggleston stood still, thinking what to do. He was determined that she should not escape him again, but dreaded to shock her by forcing an acquaintance. Nevertheless he made up his mind to take the risk of speaking to her.

"Pardon me," he said. "I see that you are wrapt in this great ocean. Beautiful today, are you going tomorrow, I myself?"

He paused, expecting her to turn her face to his. When full time had elapsed for her to do so, and she did not, when instead she turned her back to him and looked in the opposite direction, his heart sank. His advance had been repelled.

"What?" he exclaimed inwardly. "Why could I not have waited for an introduction? I had everything my own way, and now I have made a mess of it."

Crushing under the rebuff, he slunk away. His first impulse was to take a train and get as far from the place and the girl as possible. But this was only momentary. He resolved to stay, not conquer or die. From afar he watched her sitting on the rock till she arose and went to her hotel.

The same evening Eggleston recommended on the board walk, hoping and at the same time dreading to meet her who had repelled his advances. She was walking there with another girl, who looked something like her and might be her sister. The two sauntered along slowly, languidly, neither speaking to the other. As Eggleston's charmer approached she cast a momentary glance at him, then turned her eyes upon some other object. He plainly saw a look of hauteur in her face, but this might have been the result of sensitiveness on his part, which led him to imagine that he saw what was not there.

Eggleston looked for the girl the next day, but failed to find her. She had gone. However he heard her name and the city in which she lived. But he considered himself no better off than when he had lost her in the crowd. He questioned if he was not worse off. He was in the position of one who had endeavored to force an acquaintance upon a girl and had received a rebuff.

Fortuna favored him again. He was at an evening function and suddenly came upon the object of supreme interest to him. She was sitting alone. How could one who was so charming to him be a "wallflower"? He hunted for some one to introduce him to her, but found no one. He applied to the host, who replied: "All my guests are supposed to know one another when under my roof. I introduce no one." Considering Eggleston's sensitive condition, he was cowed. He went back to the place where he had left the girl, resolved on an attempt to placate her, and saw her walk out of the room. She went to the library, and he followed her. She took a book from a shelf and opened it. Eggleston stood a few feet behind her.

"If you don't forgive me," he blurted, "I shall commit suicide."

He waited for a reply, but received none. Presently the girl turned and looked at him. Then she turned again to her book without a word.

This second rebuff took away all the courage there was in Eggleston. Again he slunk away, this time not only with pain but bitterness in his heart. In some respects our minds are merely human machines, as our bodies are, and prone, like machinery, to get into conditions where they will not work properly. Eggleston's mind was at this time like a runaway auto. The power couldn't be turned off and there was danger of a smash. He had fallen in love with a girl at sight, had attempted to make her acquaintance without an introduction, been rebuffed, had asked forgiveness, been ignored, and was now in a desperate condition. In other words, he was running away with himself.

He at once left the house where he had met with this second rebuff, went to his room and walked the floor till morning. He was sure he had seen a look of contempt on the girl's face. He was not sure but that there was mingled with this look a threat meaning "If you force yourself on me again I shall surely turn you over to the police." Nevertheless, the mere thought of that wildly sensational condition which will begot more of the passion of love in a given time than any other cause. One moment he would calm himself down to a realization of the fact that he was in an abnormal condition, the next another paroxysm would sweep over him, and he would consider the property of blowing out his brains. This may seem overdrawn, but we must remember the many actual suicides by young men or girls as a result of this very love frenzy.

But he survived. Gradually he came down to a condition where he could take thought upon the matter and lay a plan for future procedure. He would endeavor to gain the services of a third person, through whom he might gain forgiveness from the woman who considered herself insulted. The only person he knew who was surely acquainted with the girl was Charlie Ricketts, at whose house he had met her. He wrote Ricketts a note asking for a private interview. His request was granted, and Eggleston told him the whole story. He had not gone far before Ricketts endeavored to put in a word, but Eggleston insisted on telling it all before receiving any comment.

When the story was finished Ricketts offered to introduce his friend to the young lady, guaranteeing that she would listen to an explanation and the lover would be treated with consideration. "He added that it would be better for Eggleston to be his own defender, and Ricketts would not enter upon the subject with the girl."

A few days later Ricketts wrote Eggleston, saying that he had arranged with the young lady that the latter should call on her on a certain evening. At the time appointed Eggleston called and sent in his card with a wildly beating heart. He was ushered into a cozy reception room, where he found the lady of his love. She rose as he entered with a reassuring smile, but said no word of welcome. Inviting Eggleston to a seat, she took up an ear trumpet lying on a table and, adjusting the small end to her ear, waited for him to talk into the other end.

There may be such a thing as too sudden a relief. Like a flash it occurred to Eggleston that on neither of the two occasions he had addressed her and she heard him. He had come to her to explain what he supposed she considered an insult. His intention was to tell her frankly that his excuse was the great love he had conceived for her, but this unadvised situation was too much for him. He didn't know what to say. The small end of the tube was in the girl's ear; his mouth was in position to speak into the other. The girl was waiting for him to begin, but he couldn't begin. Desperate, scarcely knowing what he said, he shouted:

"It's a hot evening."

These four words were the beginning of a courtship that had been going on in Eggleston for a long while, but of which the lady was not conscious. They have been long married, and Eggleston jokes about his first words to his wife—the first, at least, she heard—having been so commonplace. But he has never forgiven Charlie Ricketts for not having told him before he met her that she was deaf as a doorknob. Charlie says he tried to do so, but Eggleston wouldn't listen to him.

If there is any moral to this story it is that it is the listeners and not the talkers who win. Eggleston should have suffered Ricketts to tell him that the girl was deaf.

Moore's Range

IMPORTANT features of a Moore's Range are—first—Moore's Glass Oven Door

All you need do is glance occasionally at your food through the glass oven door and you can see how it's coming along.

Then there's Moore's exact temperature thermometer—the most sensitive oven thermometer made. Mrs. Rorer's Thermometer Guide tells how long and at what temperature to cook food.

Moore's controller damper holds a certain fixed heat at a certain temperature as long as you wish.

Moore's Range has been described as an absolutely controllable cooking machine.

Mrs. Cookright and Mrs. Careworn.

Mrs. Careworn—"I had an awful time last evening. Mrs. Cookright, you know my husband likes a broiled steak—Well, I tried my best to broil on my stove—finally I burnt it up—filled my kitchen with smoke and John had no steak at all. And—my, but wasn't he angry when he had to go out and buy another—which I fried—and fried very poorly at that."

Mrs. Cookright—"Well Mrs. Careworn—you certainly are to be pitied for your troubles—particularly when you needn't have any such as you describe at all. Now my answer is Moore's Range—Here's one—see the hinged top? When I get a good bed of glowing coals I open the hinged top—just so—put in my steak—the upper lids help to cover it and keep the heat in—and every scrap of smoke goes up the chimney."

Hog Notes.

If the pigs are uneasy there is something wrong. Find out the cause and remove it.

In no case should the sows be allowed to run at large when fall litters are expected.

A hog seems to get more enjoyment gnawing an ear of corn than it does eating it any other way.

Clean water, salt and charcoal should be kept where the hogs can partake of them whenever they desire.

The sows chosen for breeding should be selected from the best animals in the best available herd in the farmer's neighborhood.

Fighting the Hatpin.

Another step has been taken in Prussia against the use of long hat pins, according to the Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph. The railway administration of Saxony has given orders to its officials that women whose headresses are untrussed by those weapons are to be requested to remove them, and if they decline they shall be prevented from traveling by trains and be called upon to leave the stations. If they refuse to acquiesce they will render themselves liable to a fine. "Possibly the Prussian officials are the only ones in the world who could carry out these instructions without feeling of embarrassment," says the Daily Telegraph.

THE ORIGIN OF ROCKS.

How Geologists Divide the Three General Classes.

The geologist divides rocks into three general classes—igneous rocks, originating from the molten magma forced upward from the bowels of the earth, such as granite and the various lavas; sedimentary rocks, consisting of disintegrated particles of the igneous rocks which have been reformed into rocks themselves, such as sandstone, and metamorphic rocks, consisting of igneous or sedimentary rocks whose composition has been greatly changed by intense heat, chemical action or other causes—as, for instance, a limestone that has been changed to marble.

Sedimentary rocks, as stated in the geologic atlas of the United States geological survey, are usually made up of layers or beds which can be easily separated. These layers are called strata, and rocks deposited in such layers are termed stratified. The surface of the earth is not immovable. Over wide regions it very slowly rises or sinks with reference to the sea, and shore lines are thereby changed. As a result of upward movement marine sedimentary rocks may become part of the land, and most of our land areas are, in fact, occupied by rocks originally deposited as sediments in the sea.

Sandstone is perhaps the simplest example of a sedimentary rock. Obviously sandstone was once sand, and again each grain of sand was once a part of some older rock. This sand was first eroded and then deposited and either subjected to great pressure by overlying masses or perhaps thousands of feet thick or cemented together by chemical solutions. Where the stone was formed by simple pressure it contains a large proportion of open spaces and thus becomes an ideal water bearer. Some sandstones will carry as much as six quarts of water to the cubic foot of stone. In other varieties the interstices may have been filled with cementing material so that the rock may be for all practical purposes almost as dense as granite.

Literary Notes

Burbank Outdone.

Burbank, that wonderful botanical wizard who is constantly surprising agriculturists and scientists with his new kinds of fruits and flowers, will have to look to his laurels, for Jerome H. Remick & Co., the music publishers, have just announced the publication of the Red Rose Rag.

The public at present demand everything ragged or shredded, from the wheat that they eat to the songs that they sing.

Measra Madden and Wenrich are responsible for this latest syncopated-stop-and-pick-it-up-lose-it-and-find-it-guess-what-I-am-playing rag, ragged, raggedly song.

Rag time music, which was despised some years ago by the critics, has come to stay, because it has been taken up by the people. It is a blend of the Spanish, Creole, Cuban, Mexican and New Orleans form of rhythm. You cannot describe it any other way. There are so many different ways of rending a melody into fragments, and each composer breaks it up to suit himself. Wenrich has created a wonderful melody for the Red Rose Rag, and we believe that Madden has started a new craze in lyric writing with his play on the letters of the alphabet.

Talk about your rag-time music! Why, the singing of this song gives your whole system a syncopated feeling that makes you forget all your troubles. In order to give our readers an idea of Madden's new lyric, we append the choros of the Red Rose Rag.

CHORUS.

Pick a pinky petal for your papa's pride,
Beg a burning blossom for your budding bride.
Woo me with that wonderful wiggle wag,
Tip to toes to tease me, and to tickle, too.
Do that dainty dance like dandy doodle doo.

CITIZENS' LECTURE AND ENTERTAINMENT COURSE

The best Series of Entertainments Charlevoix has yet Heard
Five Numbers Including Judge Alden
COURSE OPENS NOVEMBER 15TH WITH THE ANITAS

John B. Ratto will appear on December 14. Mr. Lybarger on January 2. The Musical Favorites on February 1, and Hon. George D. Alden on March 8.

The Anita Orchestra

The Anita Ladies Orchestra who are to appear on this course will present a varied and extremely interesting program. The personnel is made up of artists of unquestioned standing and ability.

Mrs. Ratto, Director is the leader; Miss Parker, violinist; Miss McVicker, soprano; Miss Housh, flutist; Miss D'Amico, contralto; Miss B. J. Hupel, pianist.

They will play songs with actions for the quartette and for a soloist. The songs will be "The Raggedy" from "The Tales of Hoffman" and "Sally Song" from "Roses in Toyland," "Kiss Me," "The Girl," and "When my Prayers are Said."

which are very charming and have delighted their audiences since their first start-out.

Each of the orchestra there will be an arrangement of popular songs as well as serious numbers. One of which is an arrangement of "Let's Dream of Love," "In the Shadows," and a march called "Marching" by Trickhans, and a characteristic dance called "Dance on the Ice." This last number is a masterpiece of the orchestra.

Character Studies from Life

John B. Ratto presents a deeply unique and interesting entertainment. He impersonates in "make-up" many different characters in every day life. While his programs in this line are miscellaneous, each number, naturally and logically follows the preceding one, combining to make a grand panorama of associated characters.

A novelty also in itself is the fact that Mr. Ratto "make-up" for each characterization before the audience. He pencils in full view of the audience, telling an appropriate story all the while. Pencilling finished, he turns quickly to the table in front to adjust his wig, facing about to surprise you with the accuracy of the presentation.

LEE FRANCIS LYBARGER

There are really very few men in America today who are making a better impression as they go from place to place on the Lyceum platform than Lee Francis Lybarger.

At the recent convention of the International Lyceum Association composed of most of the best talent of the country, he was a hit every time he spoke.

Mr. Lybarger is an orator rather than an entertainer. He has rightly been styled a modern Patrick Henry. He holds the magical power of word painting. Above all, and as a basis of his work, Mr. Lybarger is the typical "Man of Science."

The Musical Favorites

For Versatility the Musical Favorites, another number on this forthcoming course, have few equals. They will play the Saxophone, Xylophone, Piano, Violin, Cello, three Bells and three Mandolins, while Arthur Love still further varies the program with poems and readings. Arthur Love, Lena L. Love, George L. McNeely and Nina McNeely are the company.

Hon. Geo. D. Alden

Judge George D. Alden holds the unique distinction of being the only man in the country with whom the Redpath Bureau has made a five year contract.

This record in itself shows the assurance which the Bureau has that he is one of the most successful and popular lecturers on the platform. His lectures are different, not only in subject, but in the general make-up from those of any other man. For example, he is a poet and weaves into his lectures, to the great delight of his audience, original poems which fairly sparkle with both humor and keen logic.

Tickets for the entire Course of five numbers will be sold to Adults for $1.50 and to Students of the public schools for $1.00. Reserve seat charge will be the same as last year. Tickets will be on sale at the Central Drug Store and at the Ivy Drug Store on November 1. Get your tickets early and help the Committee by every means possible.

Grange Column

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange met in regular session, October 17, with an attendance of thirty-nine members and one visitor.

Worthy Master Stroud called the grange to order with all officers present.

Three candidates were initiated in the first and second degrees.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with readings, speaking and singing.

Grange closed in form to meet again October 31. All members are requested to be present.

Foley's Kidney Remedy vs. a Hopeless Case.

Hon. Ark. J. E. Freeman says: "I had a severe case of kidney trouble and could not work and my case seemed hopeless. One large bottle of Foley's Kidney Remedy cured me and I have never been bothered since. I always recommend it." Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

Horton Bay Grange No. 338.

Horton Bay Grange met in regular session, Friday evening, Oct. 20. Meeting called to order by East Master George Long. After the usual form of business, the first and second degrees were conferred on one candidate.

Literary program consisted of a short talk on grange fire insurance by J. C. Karcher.

Reading—Albert Bathke.
Reading—Ray Karcher.
Reading—Mrs. George Long.
Music—Alva Vanhusen.

Grange closed in form with two visitors and twelve members. The next meeting will be November 3.

After exposure and when you feel a cold coming on, take Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It checks and relieves. Use no substitutes. The genuine in a yellow package always. Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.

Ironton Grange, No. 707, met in regular form October 17, 1911, with an attendance of fifty-one members and two visitors.

Peter Knudsen reported $102.50 from grain and canned fruit and E. H. Clark reported $16.00 from fruit at the fair.

The Ladies' auxiliary reported $1.00 from plowing match, of which $90.00 was given to help pay on the grange hall. Ten dollars remained in the treasury of the Ladies' auxiliary. Brother John Knudsen reported $11.00 cleared from dance at plowing match. Brother Meggison gave a report of the county convention.

After recess the grange was turned over to the lecturer. Lecturer's program consisted of songs, recitations and readings.

As we could not have all the races at the plowing match there were three or four prizes that were not given out for good of the order. They were auctioned off. Grange then closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

After the grange some of the ladies surprised the members by serving coffee, cake, cookies and sandwiches, which were enjoyed very much by all present.

Norwood Grange No. 1291

Norwood Grange met November 17, with an attendance of twenty-one. The master and overseer being absent the lecturer presided.

The grange decided to buy the hall and the executive committee was instructed to close the deal.

The rest of the time was taken up in preparing for the fair. Fruit and vegetables will be received at the town hall, any time between 1:00 and 7:00 o'clock p. m. The program follows:

and navy. This map represents the entire world. Different colors show at once the possessions of twelve great powers. Submarine cables, railways, steamship lines, mail routes, are all distinctly traceable. The naval and military forces of the various nations are indicated by miniature flags. Those representing the United States bear the names of commanders and are really shifted as the forces move from place to place. The cavalry, artillery and infantry are represented by flags of their respective colors—yellow, red and white—giving the number of the regiment and the letter of the troop, battery or company. Even the smallest hospital corps is marked by a flag red cross. Ships of every class are shown by red, white and blue flags bearing the name of each and number at her guns.—Harper's Weekly.

Mineral Wool Clothing.
Now Thomas A. Edison is telling us that one day we shall find clothing "dirt cheap" for the reason that the sources of mineral wool are inexhaustible and processes are under way by which it will be rolled off its "scratchiness," be spun, woven, dyed and turned into the niftiest kind of garments. Mineral wool or mineral cotton is produced by turning a jet of steam through liquid slag from a furnace. Under the influence of the steam the hot slag is blown into fine white threads. Until Mr. Edison mentioned its coming adaptability for clothing mineral wool has been valuable as a nonconductor of heat and as such has been used as a covering for boilers and steam and hot water pipes. Which suggests that a mineral all wool overcoat may be all right in a hard winter, while an undershirt of even mineral cotton might be uncomfortably warm in August.—Chicago Tribune.

Attorney Hughey Jennings.
Hughey Jennings came out of a coal mine without much education or much of anything else. He saw "a hazzard" a chance for something better, and he worked both on and off the field to improve himself and his people. After he got through playing ball because his arm wore out he coached Cornell, studying law at the same time and eventually graduating. When he is not leading his team and tearing up grass on the base lines he is the head of the firm of Jennings & Jennings, attorneys, at Scranton, Pa., near where he crawled out of an anthracite mine to become leader of two great baseball clubs. He is quite a skillful lawyer, and they say when he sticks up one leg, doubles his fists and yells "E-yah!" at a jury the opposing attorney quits. —Hugh Fullerton in American Magazine.

Wagner's Parentage.
Discussing the recently published autobiography of Richard Wagner, the Oesterreichische Wochenschrift says that no one will ever know whether the truth has been published as to the master's parentage. "It is a fact, though, that he was registered at school as Richard Geyer and did not take the name Wagner until he was fourteen years old," says this authority. "It is also a fact that the recently published history was seen in manuscript by Mottl years ago at Wahnfried. In his original form Ludwig Geyer was named as Wagner's father. Geyer's portrait hung in the villa next to that of Wagner's mother, and there was no portrait of the Saxon police attorney, Wagner, to be seen anywhere."

CHARLEVOIX WINS FROM BOYNE CITY

Saturday's Football Game Was a Fine Exhibition

SCORE STOOD EIGHT TO NOTHING

Charlevoix Team Showed Marked Improvement

No Team in Northern Michigan Deserves
More Credit—Features of the Game—Play Potosky Saturday.

In Saturday's game between Charlevoix and Boyne City, the home team was victorious, the score being 8 to 0. This game was one of the best ever played on the local grounds, and we have reason to feel proud of our boys.

Charlevoix won the toss and chose to defend the west goal. Boyne kicked to Charlevoix and Charlevoix returned the ball to the forty yard line. Charlevoix by a series of end runs and line plunges worked the ball down to Boyne's twenty yard line. Kirby drop-kicked the goal easily. Score Charlevoix, 3; Boyne, 0. In the remainder of the first half Charlevoix had the ball in Boyne's territory, but was unable to score. The first half ended with the ball in our possession on Boyne's twenty yard line.

In the second half Boyne seemed to take a brace and Charlevoix was unable to make consistent plays, owing to the accurate tackling of the opposing team. During this half there was considerable punting but the high wind made this feature of no use.

Charlevoix's last touch down came in the last three minutes of play, when the boys by consistent gaining through Boyne's line and brilliant end runs, placed the ball on Boyne's five yard line.

Poole was sent through the line for a touch down. The work of Durance at left end was at all times very good.

Charlevoix shows a marked improvement since their last game and there was not a time during the game that our boys were in danger of being served on. On the whole the home team played perfect football and there is no team in northern Michigan who deserves more credit or support than they.

The line up was as follows:
Charlevoix Position Boyne City
Durance.....L.E.....Berman
J. Papineau.....L.T.....Bailey
McGeagh.....L.G.....Johnson
Thomas.....C.....Speltz
G. Papineau.....R.E.....Conts

THEY WERE ELEVEN

Charlevoix Boys Have Meeting in Detroit

True Report of all Proceedings That Should be Published.

Saturday was a sort of jubilee day in Detroit and I was elected to the office of secretary to duly report the proceedings, minus that which should not be published. Eleven Charlevoix boys were present, which was a good attendance, considering there was no "call to arms" issued.

Saturday two Charlevoix boys started out for a walk. In their ramble around the city they met another fellow hailing from the same place. After the customary slinking hands and reply to questions of what they were doing here, the question came up of when all they had seen. As many like company, the three strolled on until they came to a building, in the process of construction. As it was the noon hour, and the men came from their work, another Charlevoix boy stepped into the ranks and invited the three weary travelers to his home for dinner. The invitation was quickly accepted, and a run was made to catch a car for fear the invitation would be withdrawn. Dinner being over with, the question came up of "what shall we do this afternoon." A show was decided on and away we went. After the show as we strolled down Woodward ave., four strong, we met another. He was on his way to meet another and it was decided to surprise the sixth member. At this point it became necessary to have a leader as the crowd on the streets was getting larger and it was feared by some of the more timid ones, that someone might get lost. Before a half a dozen blocks were travelled, every member tried to be leader, and at the city hall a halt was called. There another recruit was added and he attempted to lead. It was here decided that a banquet was in order and accordingly the "Punch-a-train" Hotel was selected, as only the highest class place would be good enough for such a notable gathering as this. After a bunch of tooth-picks and stubs of matches we adjourned to the smoking room and toasts were in order. Someone bought cigars and we stepped in side and lighted them. (It might be well to mention that this was an open-air meeting.)

Among the number present was the Hon. Joseph Pfister, a retired sailor, of the great and glorious Uncle Sam's navy. In reply to a question put to him, "Of all the places you have been which do you like the best?" He answered "Charlevoix looks good to me." At this juncture the chairman was unable to maintain order, and an adjournment was taken to meet the Ann Arbor car which brought a delegation from that city. What happened after that is past history, but a mighty pleasant time was had by all, and many regrets were expressed at the close of the meeting.

DISTRICT CONVENTION

Of W. C. T. U. Held in East Jordan
Last Week

Delegates to Number of Sixty Present From all Over District.

At the close of the eleventh district of the W. C. T. U. in the M. E. church about sixty members were present, and the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"That we hereby express our sincere thanks to the W. C. T. U. and the citizens of East Jordan for the kind entertainment given to this convention in so many thoughtful ways, for the use of the church, for the delightful music, and all that has contributed to make this meeting a pleasant and profitable one."

The above meetings lasted two days, October 24 and 25, and were held in the Methodist Episcopal church. A great deal of business was done, enthusiasm in the cause of temperance and purity generated, that will not be without influence on the electors in the coming spring, when the wet and dry fight for victory ensues. The address of Miss Biltz, who has lately returned from Europe, was powerful and convincing and profoundly interested all present. The church orchestra and the high school chorists gave excellent selections. Miss Belding conducting the latter. Three young ladies and one young man, Miss Grace Howard being our representative, competed for the grand gold medal during the closing meeting of the eleventh district in the M. E. church. Miss Rena Nasker won the medal, and takes it to Frankfort—East Jordan. Entrance.

SECOND COUNT NOVEMBER 17

Fifteen Dollars in Gold Goes to Candidates Making Largest Gain in Votes Since First Count

Special Prizes to be Awarded Has no Bearing on Who'll be the Winner at the Final Count

On Friday evening, November 17, at 7:30 o'clock, the ballot box in the Courier's popularity voting contest will be closed for the second count in the big battle for leadership in one of the most interesting events which has been pulled off in Charlevoix. In this contest the candidates who have made the GREATEST GAINS since their first count at a month ago will receive $15 in gold as prizes. No matter what your standing may have been at the conclusion of the first count, if you make a greater gain over that count than any other candidate you will win the $15; and the one making the next highest gain will get the $5. For instance, if you had but 25 votes in the count made October 19, and you make a larger "gain" than the leader you will get the money. If you make a gain of 15,000 or 20,000 or 25,000 votes and the leader in the first count makes a gain of only one less than you, you will have the special prizes attached for yourself. So get busy and bring in all the votes possible between now and the 17th of next month.

A little exertion and hustling among the contestants is what is required to win, and the one who is the most active and who uses the best judgment and business sense in her canvass is the one who will land the prize. It will come without the expenditure of a penny to the one who captures the prize, but eternal hustling will be the price of it. Are you going to win it? Or are you going to take a vacation and let the other girl beat you to it? And probably by a very few votes at that.

Whatever number of votes you may have in the second count will be placed on your credit in the final count which will be made in December, but if you make the greatest gain NOW you will land the $15 which is offered as special prizes at the count on November 17. And all the votes cast during the entire contest will determine who is to get the piano—these special counts cutting no figure in the grand final round-up. There is nobody so far ahead, according to the first count, but what a little hustling on the part of the other contestants would place them right up among the leaders. New subscribers are what count the most in this contest, because every new subscriber brought in the person bringing it in is entitled to 600 votes, and 500 votes are given for each renewal, while 400 are given with each back subscription.

Bear in mind that the ballot box will be closed at 7:30 o'clock Friday evening, November 17. Be sure and have all your votes in by that time so you will have had a fair chance to show what your standing is. As soon as the ballot box is closed the count will be made and the result announced as quickly as it is known.

And remember the special bonuses offered made in connection with this contest.

For every seven yearly new subscriptions we will give 10,000 extra votes, making a total of 14,200.

For every seven yearly renewals of subscriptions 8,000 extra votes, making 11,500.

For every seven back subscriptions 6,000 extra votes, making a total of 8,800.

For every forty merchants' coupons brought to this office and counted by the publisher or his assistant, he will give 500 extra votes. This will make a total of 1,500 votes in all.

These coupons may be collected from any and all merchants who are in the contest.

Remember the $15 in gold goes to the ones making the GREATEST GAINS in the number of votes. The following merchants give a coupon with each and every one dollar cash purchase to those who ask for them. Get your tickets when you buy the goods.

J. L. Crane, dry goods and carpets.
C. R. Bellinger, jewelry and cut glass.

Palace Clothing Store, clothing and furnishing goods.

Benj. Brown, harness, bicycles, trunks, etc.

Stanley Wildern, jewelry and music.

M. A. Levinson & Co., dry goods, clothing, furnishing goods, etc.

W. C. Bellinger, curios and bargain goods.

F. S. Blanchard, hardware, paints, oils and cutlery.

A. E. Mason, groceries and shoes.

F. O. Bellinger, jewelry and optometrist.

S. M. See & Sons, furniture, wall paper, rugs, etc.

In addition to the nominations already published Miss Anna Driggitt of Charlevoix has been placed in nomination.

Following is the standing of the candidates at the first count:

Mrs. Amos Webster.....	30 025
Edith Adams.....	25 075
Mrs. Lee Smith.....	18 125
Anna Madill.....	15 250
Paye Wagner.....	12 275
Mrs. Sam Straw.....	7 775

Ida Felling.....	200
Margaret Priggen.....	175
Florence Elliot.....	50
Hattie Handlin.....	50
Gladys Fineout.....	50
Boggie Swinton.....	25

Signed, Will E. Hampton,
J. M. Feltz,
I. M. DeVoe.

Now girls get busy and get subscriptions while the bonuses are hanging for these are positively the largest bonuses that will be given for these clubs of subscriptions and may be withdrawn at any time.

LECTURE COURSE IS ARRANGED

Secretary DeVoe Is Busy With the Advertising

THE FIRST NUMBER NOVEMBER 15TH

Two Musicals, Two Lectures, and One Impersonator

Judge Alden, Who Made a Hit Last Winter, Will Be Here Again—Tickets Will be on Sale Nov. 1.

Secretary DeVoe has been busy the past week looking after the advertising and attending to the sale of tickets for this winter's lecture course.

Five numbers have been arranged for two musicals, one impersonator and two lectures. All the attractions were booked through Redpath Lyceum Bureau, the oldest and largest bureau in the world.

The course will open on Nov. 15, with the Anita Singing Orchestra, consisting of Mrs. Ralph Onnhar, leader; Miss Parker, violinist; Miss McAleer, soprano; Miss Hensch, flutist; Miss Dehne, contralto; Miss Bendaleit, pianist.

December 14, the attraction will be John H. Ratto, impersonator. Mr. Ratto presents a unique and pleasing entertainment, and no one should miss this number. Mr. Ratto is a psychologist. He studies his audience before opening his program, to suit the tastes of those before him. While most of his program is of a humorous nature, here and there he slips in a touch of the darker side of life, that never fails to score heavily and bring handkerchiefs to the eyes of many.

January 2, will occur the first lecture, by Lee Francis Lybarger. Mr. Lybarger has been styled a modern Patrick Henry. He holds the rapt attention of his audience with ease.

The musical favorites will appear on the evening of February 11. The company consists of four people and have been for years appearing before pleased audiences.

March 8, Hon. George B. Alden, will close the course. Judge Alden made the hit of the course last winter, and needs no introduction to a Charlevoix audience. His new lecture is entitled "The Powder and the Match," and gives him full opportunity to display his wonderful power.

Tickets for the course will be placed on sale November 1, and, by purchasing your tickets early, you will aid the committee very much.

ARCHULETA-REED

Former Charlevoix Girl Married in New Mexico.

Almost in the shadows of the grand old Rocky mountains, in the Methodist church, of Solomons, New Mexico, Miss Rita Reed and Carlos R. Archuleta were united in the holy bonds of wedlock by Reverend Macbarger, October 10, 1911.

Miss Rita Reed was a Charlevoix girl from the time she was one year old until twenty-three years of age, was a graduate of the high school of this city, in the class of 1902, has taught school in Kansas and also in New Mexico.

In March 1907, she took up a homestead in east Solomons county, New Mexico, near Solomons.

Mr. Archuleta is a practical and successful sheep ranch man. Miss Reed's many friends wish her years of unbounded success and happiness.

Now you are changing your insurance see me before placing your risks, Myrtle Yodng.

Miss Lyla Taylor and Mr. Raymond Bennett, members of last year's class, called at the normal last Thursday forenoon. They both spoke on the points that they found to be of most value to them in their school work. Miss Taylor is teaching south of town, and Mr. Bennett east of town to the Hopyard district.

The normal room has been furnished with new slate blackboards.

Last week the class observed the work of the second grade reading, in Miss Sweeney's room. Also the work of the first grade reading was observed in Miss Jarvis' room.

ROAD BUILDING IN OHIO.

"Boosters" Successful In Getting Legislation to Pass.

The Ohio Good Roads Federation has won part of the fight which it started in January, when it proposed the following legislative plans:

First.—The reorganization of the highway department and creation of the bureau of construction, maintenance and repairs and bridges.

Second.—State supervision of all roads constructed in whole or in part by state aid money.

Third.—The perpetual maintenance of state aid roads by the highway department.

Fourth.—The inauguration of the inter-county system of roads connecting important commercial centers in the state and making all necessary surveys and estimates for the same.

Fifth.—A levy of one-half mill on the taxable property of the state to create a fund available in 1913 to construct the inter-county system.

All of the above, with the exception of the latter, are provided for in senate bill 165 by Senator McGuire, which is now a law.
The road enthusiasts will now go forth with renewed energy in a state wide campaign for the proper construction and maintenance of roads, for the economical expenditure of all moneys appropriated for road purposes, and will present to the constitutional convention which will assemble next January a plan to raise money necessary to complete the inter-county system, which plan will equitably distribute the cost of the same on all the taxpayers of the state.

CONFIRMED PROOF

Residents of Charlevoix Cannot Doubt What Has Been Twice Proved.

In gratitude for complete relief from aches and pains of bad backs—from distressing kidney troubles—thousands have publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills. Residents of this vicinity who so testified years ago, now say their cures were permanent. This testimony doubly proves the worth of Doan's Kidney Pills to Charlevoix kidney sufferers.

Peter H. Pettenz, 833 W. First St., Cheboygan, Michigan, says: "I gladly confirm the public statement my wife gave in my behalf in August 1906, telling of my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills. The facts given at that time were correct in every particular. Doan's Kidney Pills were of greater benefit to me than any other kidney medicine I ever used. Whenever I have a lame back or notice that my kidneys are not doing their work properly, I take a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills and relief follows."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McMunn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

NORTHWESTERN UNITED DOCTORS

Of Minneapolis, Minnesota

An Association of Prominent Physicians Giving FREE Medical Services to the Sick and Medicines at Cost

Coming to Charlevoix at Baker's Inn, Monday, November 6th ONE DAY ONLY

The Northwestern United Doctors, duly organized and licensed by the state for the purpose of treating diseases, deformities and all curable ailments without surgical operation. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in this locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are absolutely sure and certain in their effect.

By their developed system, no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, hernias, goiter, piles or cancer. They were among the first in America to do away with the knife, blood and pain in the successful treatment and cure of these dangerous diseases.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys and bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bedwetting, leg ulcers, epilepsy, or fits, etc., all treated with gratifying success. Consumption, asthma, bronchitis, and catarrhal diseases absolutely cured with combination of medicine, hygiene, diet, exercise and the important uses and advantages of clothes, occupation, etc. Many cases of deafness are frequently cured in sixty days. Cataract, granulated lids, and old weak, watery sore eyes treated after a fashion that knows no fail. In long standing deep-seated, chronic diseases of men and women, and show growths and undeveloped children's diseases, a treatment that is absolutely certain in its effect can be had and depended upon. Thousands of patients throughout the Northwest attest the ability of the Northwestern United Doctors to cure these dread diseases.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others have told you, no matter what experience you have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to treat with the Northwestern United Doctors Specialists. Even if your case is incurable they will give you such advice that will relieve you and stay the disease. There is no string tied to this proposition, they mean just what they say and will do to your advantage what they intend. Every specialist is prominent in his line and stands at the head of the profession.

Do not put off this duty you owe yourself, your friends and your relatives, as a visit this time costs you nothing and may save your life.

If you have kidney or bladder trouble, bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

Remember this free offer is for this trip only.

Married ladies must come with their husbands and minors with their parents.

DR. A. B. SPINNEY will be at BAKER'S INN, Charlevoix, FRIDAY, November 10, 8 a. m. to 8 p. m.

Dr. A. B. Spinney of Detroit, a specialist of 52 years' experience in treating chronic diseases, will give free consultation and be at the above named place on said date.

SICK PEOPLE SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understanding of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for 100 dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either of the Sanitariums as below. No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY. Faithfully yours,

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D.

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE

CHAPTER XVII.
AFTER a few moments Valentine shook his head angrily and drew back a step from the safe.

"Red, got a handkerchief?" he snapped.
"Yes."

"Well, get moving. Come on—blindfold me so that I can't see, so that every nerve will be centered on hearing the tumblers click—you know—the old gag."

"Sure thing."
Red scrambled to his feet and hastily tied a handkerchief tightly around Valentine's head, completely covering his eyes. Valentine stopped back to the vault, and Red crouched again at his feet.

Definitely, intently, the ex-convict manipulated the intricate mechanism of the vault.

"Hurry, Jimmy, that kid," urged Red, to whom the suspense was becoming unbearable.

"D-n you, be quiet! If you say another word I'll knock your head off—my hands are like leather."
He again sandpapered his fingers. "You're bleeding!" exclaimed Red.
"What of it?" returning to his task.
"Don't talk, I tell you. I heard it click—I missed it again!" turning the combination slowly—"but I felt it that time—I felt the dog lift!" Valentine was intensely excited. "Red, there it is! Hurry with a match!"

Red, well acquainted with the duties required of him, by reason of the thorough education he had received from Valentine in the past, had been waiting expectantly with a match ready for the striking. At the word he illuminated the combination's dial with a tiny flame.

"What is it?" cried Valentine.
The other stretched himself upward and peered at the numbers on the metal saucer—

"It points to twenty-one!" he exclaimed.

Valentine again drew away from the vault.

"Sandpaper!" he cried. Red handed him another sheet. He rubbed his fingers softly across it. His raw, bleeding flesh could not stand more than the slightest contact with the rasping surface. "I'll feel every jar clean to my eyeballs now," he added. He turned the dial back and then forward and then four complete reverse revolutions. "That's the way to get them, Red"—two more forward revolutions—"bare, bleeding nerves"—a half turn back—"raw, throbbing nerves—a toothache in every finger end—eh, Red—there—match!"

After a moment:
"Fifty-two!"

"How many bolts did this door have?" asked Valentine. "Did you notice?" He went on turning the dial.
"Twelve."

"Thought so," jubilantly. "Can you hear her any more, Red?"
Red's ear was pressed against the crack of the vault door.

"No. And God knows I don't want to. Honest, Jimmy, I don't believe it."

"Oh, yes, you do. So long as she calls we know she's alive"—turning the dial slowly back—there we are again. If this is eleven I know this old rotation—match!"

"Eleven!" shrieked Red joyously after a moment of racking suspense. "I've got it! I've got it!" cried Valentine. "If this is it, Red"—reversing the dial again—"she's ours in another minute. Match!"

Red struck another match.

A half turn of the dial forward. Valentine's sharp ear detected the sound as though another bolt had drawn back. "Here we are again! Match!"

"Forty-two!" exclaimed Red.
"That's it—forty-two—that's what it should be. Do you hear Kitty now?"
"No. Good God, Jimmy, suppose, after all, she's dead?"

Two more turns of the dial. "Keep your nerve, old pal—there—match!"

To George Doyle, standing in the doorway, the scene was one of gripping interest. The consummate, almost uncanny, skill of Jimmy Valentine was something to cause in the detective, experienced even as he was with resourceful and intelligent cracksmen, a thrill of genuine admiration. No wonder Valentine had proved the despair of the safe makers, the baffling officials and the slouts of half a dozen states. And a lieutenant governor had pardoned him!

As Doyle surveyed intently the operations of Red Flanagan and Jimmy Valentine in their superhuman effort to rescue their beloved little playmate, Kitty Lane, from the stifling clutches of the steel vault he became aware of a sudden though very slight change in the darkened room, the windows of which, opening into a shaft, gave almost as light as all to the lustrous eyes. He glanced across the room to the point from which the light seemed to come and saw—that the door leading from the assistant cashier's office had been partly opened. Next, to his utter amazement, he saw a plumed hat thrust forward into the opening, and then a girlish figure appeared. The figure halted and turned its face toward the vault where Red Flanagan and Jimmy Valentine were at work.

In practically the same position as himself, though at the opposite side of the room, Doyle recognized that the girl could watch the operations of the two expert cracksmen without detection unless either of them should neglect his work and glance in her direction, and, as he thoroughly appreciated, both Valentine and Flanagan were too intent on their mission of rescue to turn for an instant from their task.

As Red struck the match at the latest command of Valentine Doyle saw the girl bend forward to better gain a view of the proceedings. The side of her face was illumined by the light in the assistant cashier's office, and—could it be true?—yes, Doyle was positive that the form of the witness in the opposite doorway was none other than that of the young girl who had seen Jimmy Valentine in Warden Handler's office at Sing Sing and who had prevailed on the lieutenant governor to obtain his release.

Doyle's memory had not betrayed him. It was Rose Lane, who, returning to her lover's office in quest of him, had opened the door of the vault room and had, just as Doyle had done, caught him "red handed." She moved forward a step, as though to speak, but her attention was attracted by Doyle, who moved slightly. She saw him put his fingers to his lips, counselling silence. The girl therefore stood mute, watching the man she fondly loved "cop the gopher" in the bank that between them she and her father owned.

"One," announced Red as the match flared into a blue bright sulphurous gleam.

"That's it! That's the old rotation!" cried Valentine enthusiastically. "Ten off the first"—turning the combination—"then one—two—and three"—turning the dial on the reverse—"then back. Match!"

"Twenty-one!" was Red's frenzied response.

Valentine tossed his head back triumphantly.

"Twenty-one, that's it!" he almost shrieked. "That's it—I've done the trick!"

Valentine tore the bandage from his eyes and, groping forward, gripped the handles of the vault doors in his hands. He threw his weight back and tugged mightily. At first the eight inch steel barrier refused to move. Red, who had lunged to one side out of the way of his superior, gazed apprehensively at Valentine, fearing that after all there had been some mistake.

Then, of a sudden, the crack in the black, sheer, forbidding face of the great safe widened, and Valentine's body, tensely set, fell back as the ponderous door swung open.

And as it did so a wee, white clad body, crouching against the heavy door, rolled out on to the vault room floor and lay limp and apparently lifeless before Red Flanagan and Jimmy Valentine.

"Get that kid," cried Valentine to Red. "She's out, but I think she'll live. She needs air and a doctor, quick!" With these words the ex-convict, almost overcome by the excitement and the nervous strain under which he had been laboring, leaned exhaustedly against the cold steel walls of the vault.

Red lurched forward, seized the motionless form of Kitty in his arms and clutched it to his breast.

"She's dead," he choked, looking down into her white, drawn face, her closed eyes and the lips from which the blood had fled.

"No; she'll be all right in five minutes," instructed Valentine with as much force as he could muster. "Take her to the doctor on the corner."

Red straightened and with his helpless burden dashed through the door of the assistant cashier's room—only to come face to face with Rose Lane, who, in an agonized impulse, had drawn back into the office, hardly knowing what to do.

CHAPTER XVIII.

VALENTINE, as yet unaware of the presence of Rose Lane, leaned against the side of the vault, gasping for breath and endeavoring to gain firm control of himself.

As for Red, on being confronted by Rose Lane he stopped short and gasped in alarm. "Then you saw us do it—you saw Valentine at work?"

The girl cut him short with an upraised hand. "Kitty, hurry, hurry!" she warned him in a low voice.

"Don't worry, miss. She'll be all right in a few minutes!" he cried over his shoulder. The girl moved again toward the doorway whence she had retreated a moment before.

Valentine, still oblivious to the nearness of Rose, raised his hands along the edge of the vault door, his back toward the entrance leading to the room. "I beat you! I beat you and saved the little girl from you!" he murmured. Up and down he pressed his hands against the enameled metal. "I beat you! I beat you!"

Slowly he turned away, and as he raised his eyes they met the implacable, scornful gaze of George Doyle. Valentine started back. In the shadowy vault room he thought his eyes had played him false, that he saw only a vision conjured into a temporary existence by overwrought nerves and a correspondingly disordered

MODERN ROADMAKING.

Efforts in England to Meet Motor and Trolley Car Traffic.

The following illustrates the efforts in England to meet in roadmaking the conditions imposed by motor and trolley car traffic:

A new and direct roadway is proposed between West Hartlepool and Middlesbrough, near Newcastle, in the county of Northumberland, a direct line of seven and three-fourth miles in designing the roadway the engineers in charge have given attention to the possible development in both heavy slow and fast vehicular and motor traffic, each of which demands separate consideration and possible different methods of road surface treatment.

The plan accordingly provides for a center footpath nine feet in width, on the east side of the footpath a tread for motor and light fast traffic twenty-four feet in width and on the west side of the footpath a tread for heavy slow traffic twenty-two feet in width. This gives a width for highway purposes of fifty-five feet. The plan further shows on the westernmost side of the footpath a width of fourteen feet reserved for light railway or trolley purposes, making a total width of road of one hundred and sixty-nine feet.

A scheme similar to this will doubtless control future roadmaking in England, and existing roads may be reconstructed on a corresponding plan.

One of the chief advantages in separating the several kinds of traffic would be in permitting different methods of surfacing the roads to be used and those best adapted to the traffic accommodated. Another advantage would be the lessening of the chances of accidents. A third advantage would be the greater speed permissible to fast traveling. Consul, Walter C. Hamlin, Hull, England.

New England Leads in Granite.

The New England states continue to produce more granite than any other area of equal size in the country, although as individual states Wisconsin and California are heavy producers.

According to figures supplied by Ernest F. Burchard of the United States geological survey, New England produced granite in 1909 to the value of $9,471,715 as compared with $10,551,287 for the whole United States. Of all the states Vermont led in 1909, with a production of $2,811,711. Massachusetts was second, with $2,760,450 and Maine was third, with $1,900,554.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

brain. He pressed his hand to his forehead. Then the "vision" moved toward him. Yes, it was George Doyle.

The ex-convict stood transfixed, as though an unwilling witness of a terrible inspiring tragedy. And to him the denouement was all of that. Doyle stood, his hands clasped behind his back, waiting for the other to speak.

Valentine, worn out by the strain of the day's events, was in no mood to continue the fight against the cool calculating, fine adding detective. "So this is the end, Doyle," he said, with a wan, forced smile on his drawn lips. "The jig is up. Isn't that about it?"

The detective moved closer to the human prey for whom he had so long and so patiently and so far as the government was concerned, had so extensively sought.

"Looks that way to me, Jimmy. But, remember, back there in Albany, I told you I'd get you some day unless you would do me a favor or two. Always remember that I gave you a chance to keep out of the 'pen' and you turned it down."

Valentine hung his head. Yes, he would never cease to remember the alternative of becoming a "stool pigeon" that the detective had offered him the alternative of "peaching" on old Bill Avery and going out free—scot free until Doyle should command him to "turn up" some other friend and companion.

"Come, Doyle, make a quick job of this," was his answer. "You win after all. I'll go without."

The detective interrupted Valentine by holding his head and pointing to one side. The ex-convict turned to see Rose Lane, in whose affectionate embrace he had lingered but a few minutes before on that memorable afternoon.

A deadly pallor overspread the girl's cheeks. She drew near to the two men, her hands clasped nervously against her heaving bosom.

"You saw," exclaimed the distressed young assistant cashier, pouring searchingly at the girl, and with an involuntary twitch of his elbow indicating the opened vault.

Rose nodded her head gravely, stared at the man she had loved and then at the threatening form of the detective. Valentine strode to her, clutched a pink rose from a bouquet fastened at the girl's girdle. He pressed it in both his hands.

"You won't mind my having that flower, I know," he said brokenly. "I am going to be gone a long time—and this I want you to know and remember through all years—my love for you is the only clean thing I ever knew. It is complete, and it will never end."

As he concluded he wheeled to face the detective.

"That's all, Doyle," he said in hardy, audible tones.

The central office man saw the real significance of the situation. No one with the slightest morsel of intelligence could doubt that the beautiful young girl before him was suffering as only a true woman can when the one she loves is torn bodily from her forever. As for Valentine—well, there must be something good in him after all, reasoned Doyle. If a girl like the banker's daughter could venture her whole life's happiness on the chance of his "going straight"—the detective shifted uneasily on his feet as Valentine turned to him.

"Er—didn't you have an engagement with—er—this young lady?" he queried hesitatingly.

Rose caught a ray of encouragement in his tones.

"Yes! Yes!" she cried, springing forward, her cheeks now aglow with the inspiration given by a newborn hope, "and it was an engagement that means my happiness, my love, my life and his life!" She reached forth her hands beseechingly toward Doyle.

The officer glanced quickly behind him and around the room, making sure that there were no other witnesses to his words.

"Then"—he hesitated—"then I guess we'll just wait the state of Massachusetts."

Valentine grasped the arm of his long time foe.

"You mean—you mean just what, Doyle?" he exclaimed excitedly.

"I mean that the lady needs you more than Massachusetts does. You had me going, all right, for awhile there today, Jimmy. But just to retain your respect don't think that I fell for that double negative photograph. With an abrupt "Good-bye," the detective swung around and disappeared through the door by which he had entered—went out forever from the life of Jimmy Valentine.

Valentine addressed the girl with justifiable trepidation.

"You understand"—indicating the doorway through which Doyle had made his exit—"you know who—that he was?"

Rose Lane dug herself into Valentine's arms.

"I only know I love you," she cried passionately.

He held her in fervid embrace.

"And knowing the truth about me that I?"

"Perhaps I always knew," she whispered fondly. "But if a woman loves who rejects that which does not fit into her dream, but if she loves as I?"

Valentine smothered her words with his kisses. Then, raising his lips from hers for a single moment, he exclaimed in a voice that rang with the determination of a man who would yield his life ere he broke his sacred promise:

"I'll live for you, Rose—all for you. And you'll learn that I am a man once more—a man among men of honor."

FREE IF IT FAILS

Your Money Back If You are not Satisfied with the Medicine We Recommend.

We are so positive that our remedy will permanently relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine at our expense should it fail to produce satisfactory results.

It is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Laxatives or cathartics do much harm. They cause a reaction, irritate, and weaken the bowels and tend to make constipation more chronic. Besides, their use becomes a habit that is dangerous.

Constipation is caused by a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or descending colon. To expect permanent relief you must therefore tone up and strengthen these organs and restore them to healthier activity.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our recommendation. They are exceedingly pleasant to take, being eaten like candy, and are ideal for children, delicate persons, and old folks, as well as for the robust. They act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels.

They apparently have a neutral action on other associate organs or glands. They do not purge, cause excessive looseness, nor create any inconvenience whatever. They may be taken at any time, day or night. They will positively relieve chronic or habitual constipation, if not of surgical variety, and the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, if taken with regularity for a reasonable length of time.

12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents; 84 tablets, 50 cents. Sold in Charlevoix only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

NOTICE—SEALED BIDS.

Notice is hereby given that the city clerk will accept sealed proposals for the establishment and construction of a sewer in North street, commencing at Dixon street, thence south on North street to Chicago street, thence east on Chicago street to main entrance of Chicago Road, thence to and including twelve clock noon, the 14th day of November, 1911, which proposals must be accompanied by a certified check to the City of Charlevoix for one hundred dollars, and also the names of the bondsmen who will execute a bond to the City of Charlevoix for five hundred dollars, $500, should the contractor's sealed proposal be accepted.

All plans, specifications and diagrams of the proposed work will be on exhibition at the City Clerk's office. The proposed work to be commenced within not less than ten days after notice from the Board of Public Works to commence the work, and the work shall be completed within sixty working days, including strikes and holidays, and for every day used in the completion of the work exceeding the sixty working days, the contractor shall forfeit to the City of Charlevoix the sum of ten dollars, ($10.00). The Board of Public Works reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, default having been made in the conditions of certain mortgage made and executed on the 10th day of April, A. D., 1902, by Clifford Poppen and Flora Poppen, husband and wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert E. Mason of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 2nd, A. D., 1902, in Liber 3rd of Mortgages, on page 42.

Also default having been made in the conditions of certain mortgage made and executed the 24th day of August, A. D., 1908, by Clifford Poppen and Flora Poppen, husband and wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to John Harnage of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 2nd, A. D., 1908, in Liber 3rd of Mortgages, on page 42.

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due and unpaid on both of said mortgages on the date of this notice is the sum of $125.33 principal and interest, (the sum of $125.33 and $42.30 respectively), and the further sum of $2.14 for taxes, and $3.08 interest on taxes paid by the mortgagor under the terms of the mortgage, and the further sum of $2.75 for insurance, and $1.52 interest on insurance paid by the mortgagor under the terms of the mortgage, and an attorney's fee of $2.00 as provided in said mortgages, and whereas, no suit or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgages, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgages, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgages will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, public auction to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for said county is held, on the 24th day of December, A. D., 1911, at ten o'clock in the forenoon (standard time). Said premises are described as follows: Lot number twelve of Block number thirteen of the original plat of said village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan.

Dated, September 2nd, 1911.

A TIP FOR COUNTIES.

The bond plan is the economical, equitable and intelligent method to provide permanent municipal improvements, and the same can be said of good road construction. The county which is building roads by special taxes is making a mistake by doing it in a piecemeal fashion when a bond issue by the entire county will provide a lump sum for systematic road building. The plan of voting road bonds by township is nearly equally as bad, for roads should be constructed by counties in accordance with systematic plans, taking care of all townships and making it decidedly more economical for them than for each township to maintain its own expensive road building services and equipment.

This is on the side, but the opportunity is too fine for us to let it slip without making known the truth to counties, which are going to build good roads by some hark or croak. There is the slipshod way and the right way. Don't fiddle—Wilmington (N. C.) Star.

ASHAMED OF HER FACE

"I was ashamed of my face," writes Miss Richard of North Carolina. "It was all full of pimples and scars, but after using D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema I can say that now there is no sign of that Eczema and that was three years ago."

This is but one of thousands of cases in which D. D. D. has simply washed away the skin trouble. D. D. D. cleanses the skin of the terms of Eczema, Psoriasis and other serious skin diseases; stops the itch instantly, and when used with D. D. D. soap the cure seems to be permanent. Nothing like D. D. D. for the complexion.

CAUSES MUCH DISEASE

Advice About Stomach Troubles and How to Relieve Them.

Do not neglect indigestion which may lead to all sorts of ills and complications. An eminent physician once said that ninety-five per cent of all the ills of the human body have their origin in a disordered stomach.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be among the most dependable remedies known for the relief of indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is very prompt. Their use with persistency and regularly for a short time tends to bring about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets help in insure healthy appetite, to aid digestion, and thus promote nutrition.

As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. Remember you can obtain them in Charlevoix only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

The Savag's Proverbs.

The proverbs of savages are shrewd and pithy. The Hanouts say, "The thief catches himself," the Yorubas, "He who injures another injures himself," the Wolofs, "Before healing others heal yourself." In Acra they say, "Nobody is twice a fool," among the Ojib, "The moon does not grow full in a day," "The poor man has no friends."

A Pashto proverb says, "A feather does not stick without gum." Others are, "A crab does not bring forth a bird," "A razor cannot shave itself," "Cross the river before you abuse the crocodile," "Perseverance always triumphs," "The thread follows the needle," and "Preparation is better than afterthought."—Westminster Gazette.

Grange Column

Harmony Grange, No. 1451.

Harmony Grange, No. 1451 is still very much alive, as the meeting of last week Tuesday evening attested. A meeting consisting of O. D. Willson, H. L. Willson and Mrs. E. J. Coykendall was appointed to draft a resolution to be presented to State Grange by our delegate. It asks for the continuation of their efforts to institute a co-operative trade bulletin, and that an appropriation be made if necessary. Also to draft any other resolutions that may be favored by Harmony Grange.

Roll call was responded to by members giving the name of their farms, or, if not named, an appropriate or favored name. Next meeting roll call will be answered to by members naming some improvement they would like to see accomplished in the community. And it is hoped that mere naming will not end it, but that steps will be taken to accomplish at least the one most needed.

The program which was well carried out, consisted largely of discussions. The subject discussed mostly was pertaining to developing the possibilities of the grange, for improving the community as well as the individual members, financially as well as socially and educationally.

Coughing at Night

Means loss of sleep which is bad for everyone. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound stops the cough at once, relieves the tickling and dryness in the throat, and heals the inflamed membranes. Prevents a cold from developing into bronchitis or pneumonia. Keep always in the house. Refuse substitutes.

Wilson Grange, No. 719.

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, October 28, with an attendance of 54 members, the attraction being the hunt supper.

During the business session one application was received and one other applicant was elected. Grange elected E. S. Brintnall life insurance agent and Leon Frost was installed as secretary. In the hunt contest the score stood 636 to 615 in favor of Captain Davis.

A masquerade dance and oyster supper will be held at the hall on Thanksgiving eve.

After a discussion of ways and means for holding an auction sale and a fine program the members adjourned to partake of a bountiful supper to which all did very ample justice.

Marion Center Grange, No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session, October 23, with an attendance of nineteen members and one visitor.

All officers were present except steward, chaplain and secretary. The several county fair committees reported premiums, and turned $70 over to the secretary.

Literary program consisted of the following:

Reading—Brother Rodgers. Instrumental Music—Sister Ward.

Reading—Brother Ingalls. Grange closed in form to meet again November 8.

RAMBO-O'BRIEN

Charlevoix Girl Marries Philadelphia Gentleman.

Miss Mattie O'Brien, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O'Brien of this city and H. Potter Rambo of Philadelphia, were married Saturday, October 21, at the country residence of A. Hamilton Smith of Portland, Oregon.

The house was artistically decorated with autumn leaves, Oregon grapes and roses. The bride wore a gown of white crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Mrs. Billy Wiston of Chicago acted as matron of honor and wore a gown of gray messaline, while Howard Chandler of Chicago was the best man.

Mrs. Smith with whom the bride has visited during the summer months, was groomed in cream silk.

An orchestra played during the entire evening and after the ceremony a buffet lunch was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Rambo will make their home in Portland, Oregon.

The bride is a well known Charlevoix girl and has a host of friends who wish them a long life of wedded happiness.

AUCTION SALES.

The auction sale season is again with us and the farmers of Charlevoix county appreciate the fact that the Charlevoix Courier is the medium through the use of which they are assured to crowd. The Courier makes dates for you with any auctioneer you may desire. "You cannot have a successful auction without a crowd of buyers, and you cannot secure that with auction bills. These never reach people except over a limited territory. The neighbors may come in to visit without any idea of buying anything. A man is not going ten or fifteen miles to an auction simply for the fun of it. He goes for the business and it is men of that class that make an auction 'hum.' Such men are not going to let $5 to $10 stand in the way of getting a horse that they have come that distance to purchase. Enough may be made on the sale of one animal to twice pay for all the cost of advertising. There is not an up-to-date auctioneer in the country but will tell you that the only way to have a successful auction is to advertise in a paper thoroughly covering the territory. Our charge for such service is very reasonable."

HOW TO OBTAIN GOOD HIGHWAYS

Bond Issue Plan For Counties a Remedy For Present Evils.

QUICKER AND BETTER ROADS.

Direct Tax Method Might Do For the Time Being, but the Issuing of Bonds Will Insure Good Thoroughfares For Generations to Come. Many Southern Counties Using Plan.

A study of the problems connected with the development of our nation has shown that we take first rank in civil government, manufactures, commerce and in the world's affairs generally, yet improved public road construction, the one phase of our American life upon which depend more than any other the certain prosperity and social comfort of a large majority of our citizens, has been neglected to a degree that is almost beyond the power of conception, says Dr. J. H. Pratt, state geologist of North Carolina.

The old method of obtaining revenue for the construction of roads was by levying a labor tax, which required all able-bodied male residents of a state between certain ages to work on the public highways within their respective townships for a certain number of days per annum, but in lieu of this labor they could pay a certain amount for each day that they were required to work. While thousands of miles of public roads have been built by this means, there are but few miles of graded or improved roads constructed, and it is practically impossible to construct a system of good roads in this way. If it does not give good improved roads how can they be obtained?

"Public roads are public necessities, and the benefits to be derived from their construction in the various counties composing the state are not only of great value to each county, but also to the state. Public roads are ready to serve all classes, they are common property of all the people, and all the people have the right and privilege to use them. Therefore why should not all the people bear some of the expense?"

To carry out this work to the quickest and to the best advantage the county should issue bonds in order to secure the necessary funds.

It is a fair and equitable arrangement that future generations should pay for a portion of the improvements of our public roads, as they derive as great a benefit as the present generation. Two many have an idea that to bond their county will mean a very large increase in their taxes without their deriving any material benefits from their expenditures, not realizing that the increase in the value of property and the decrease in the cost of the maintenance of the roads and the wear and tear on horses, wagons and harness is so much money saved.

The issuing of bonds makes available funds in sufficient quantity to render possible the accomplishment of definite and desirable results.

They give almost immediately the benefit of good roads, while the payment for them is deferred for many years until the county has progressed in material wealth to enable it to pay the bonds without unnecessary inconvenience.

They obviate the necessity for a high road tax while accomplishing the results for which such a tax would be levied. Let us consider briefly what a $100,000 bond issue would cost a county: In the first place, I believe the bonds could be sold at bearing 4 1/2 per cent interest. This will mean that the interest on the issue of $100,000 will be $4,500 per annum. It will also be necessary to put by a sinking fund to take care of these bonds on maturity. Such a sum as is necessary can be put by each year at 5 per cent interest and at the end of forty years will cover the bond issue. The amount that it will be necessary to put aside each year for this purpose will be $323. This makes a total of $4,823 that a county will have to raise each year to take care of this bond issue. This amount will not be as much as it would be necessary to raise by a high tax, 30 cents to 50 cents, which some counties have levied in providing the money for road construction. Suppose the assessed property valuation is $3,000,000, a tax of only 20 cents on the dollar would yield $600,000 annually, which would be sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds, create a sinking fund and leave enough money, $10,000, for the maintenance of the improved road and to keep in repair the roads in the county that are not being permanently improved.

This twenty cent tax is a small tax for good roads work and if this tax was levied without bond issue it would usually all be spent in maintenance of the roads without permanently improving any of them.

If a county or a township decides to try and raise the necessary revenue for good roads construction by a direct tax on the $100 worth of property it would require an exceedingly high tax to accomplish the desired result, unless there was situated in the county a large city whose accumulated wealth could be taxed for good road work in the county. Counties situated in this way could probably raise a revenue sufficient to construct improved roads throughout the county with a tax not running over 50 cents on the $100 worth of property. The counties, however, without large cities or towns should issue bonds for good roads construction.

BI-ANNUAL ELECTION OF OFFICERS

Hon. William Mears of Boyne Falls Re-elected Master

Changes in Most of the Other Officers—Mr. and Mrs. Martin Ruhling Elected Delegates.

Despite the extremely bad weather there were members of six subordinate granges who met in pomona session with Peninsula Grange, November 2, 1911. The bi-annual election of officers resulted as follows:

Master—William Mears, Boyne Falls, Mich.
Overseer—John Knudsen, East Jordan, Mich.
Lecturer—Walter Black, Charlevoix.
Steward—William Steinberg, East Jordan.
Assistant Steward—Arthur Gaunt, Chaplain—Viola Heller, East Jordan.
Treasurer—Henry Black, Sr., Charlevoix.
Secretary—Leo D. Willson, Boyne City.
Gate Keeper—Fred Heller, East Jordan.
Caree—Ursula Crawford, East Jordan.
Pomona—Blanche Wallace, Bay Shore.
Flora—Emma Todd, East Jordan.
Lady Assistant Steward—Fannie Knudsen.
Member Executive Committee—Nat Burns.
Pomona Delegate to Michigan State Grange—Mr. and Mrs. Martin Ruhling, East Jordan.

In the evening all officers elect were installed. R. A. Brintnall, acting as installing officer. It was decided to place the building fund at interest until time to commence work on hall next year. The committee appointed returned favorable reports regarding the general condition of the grange in our county. Harmony Grange was declared the banner grange for the third quarter. Two applicants for fifth degree were obligated and instructed in that degree. Having declined a re-election retiring, secretary R. A. Brintnall was accorded a unanimous vote of thanks for the manner in which his past service had been rendered. The next meeting will be held with Rock Elm Grange, next February.

NOW ON EXHIBITION

The Western Michigan Development Bureau's Display

At Grand Rapids' Apple Show, Chicago, Detroit and Lansing

The fruits which are to advertise Western Michigan this fall and winter have now been gathered by the Western Michigan Development Bureau. The apple will be the most prominent in the collection. A total of 618 bushels of finest show apples ever grown in the state have been secured and are now being arranged for display purposes. The collection includes 77 varieties of this fruit. In addition to apples, the collection includes a fine showing of peaches, grapes, pears, apricots and ripe fruits in glass.

The Bureau's biggest display will be that which it makes in connection with the first Michigan Land and Apple Show now being held at

NOTICE TO CANDIDATES.

Candidates and workers for candidates, in the Courier's voting contest are not authorized to issue receipts for subscriptions, signed by the Courier. As fast as the money is turned into the office, receipts will be mailed to subscribers. Candidates will be furnished with receipts books and will issue receipts in their own name. Candidates are requested to turn in subscriptions weekly.

Grand Rapids. This display occupies one side of the Coliseum and is the handsomest thing of its kind ever put up.

At the same time smaller exhibits are being shown in Lansing, Detroit, and Chicago. These exhibits are now in the down town store windows, where they will be seen by the thousands of people who pass daily. It is believed that these several showings of Michigan fruits will cause such a demand for the Western Michigan products that there will be a noticeable advance in the price of the better grades of the "Fruit with Flavor."

SHOULD BE DISINFECTED

Also Churches, Theaters, and all Public Halls

Secretary Dixon of the State Board of Health Gives Instructions.

Every school room in the state should be thoroughly disinfected each month of the school year, particularly during the winter months when the doors and windows are likely to be kept closed. The expense is very small and the actual work is inconsiderable. There are a great many proprietary disinfectant devices on the market. As a rule these should be avoided because they are generally inefficient and relatively expensive, together with offering a risk of fire. For school room disinfection, there is no method as good as the formalin and potassium permanganate method. This is done as follows: For each thousand cubic feet of room, provide 10 ounces of formalin and 5 ounces of potassium permanganate. Close all the windows. Into a tin pail (10-12 quarts) pour the formalin and then add the potassium permanganate. Hurry out and shut the door. Leave the room closed for at least six hours, then open doors and windows and air out the room thoroughly. It is necessary to use a rather tall pail to prevent overflowing. In the ordinary sized school room it would be better to divide the materials used into two or three portions, placing them in different parts of the room. Moisture of the air and surface helps to render the process more effective. In steam-heated rooms, there is usually moisture enough. Formalin can be bought for about $1.00 per gallon, and potassium permanganate for 15 cents per pound. In rooms where scrubbing the floors, desks, and walls is practicable, it is probably just as well, and less expensive, to effect the disinfection by scrubbing with a solution of bicarbonate of mercury to strength 1 to 2000 or 5000, rather than using the formalin. Solutions of Lysol, or any of the cresol products are usually effective, but the persistent odors are objectionable.

The best interests of the school health can be served by regular and thorough disinfection of the school rooms.

Churches, public halls, theaters, etc., should also receive an occasional disinfection.

Very truly yours,
ROBERT L. DIXON, M. D., Secretary.

THE PIANO HAS BEEN SHIPPED

It Should Arrive This Week and Will be on Exhibition at One of the Contest Stores

The fine new Obermeyer & Son Oakland piano for the contest has been shipped and will be on exhibition in our office in a few days. Those who think that the instrument is a cheap affair should call and thoroughly examine it and see that we have been saying about it is not all "guff."

Now girls get busy and see if you can secure the prize. It is worth a whole lot of work and will be the pride of the lady who is lucky enough to secure the greatest number of votes. No one has a sure thing of it yet and anyone with a little work on their part could start now and be in the lead by the time the piano is awarded to the one who has the most votes.

Bear in mind that the ballot box is closed at 7:30 p. m., Friday, November 17. Be sure and have all your votes in by that time so that you will have a fair chance to show what your standing is. As soon as the ballot box is closed the count will be made, and the result announced as quickly as it is known.

And remember the special bonus offers made in connection with this contest.

Remember that many of our leading merchants are interested in this voting contest and give 25-coupon with every dollar purchase.

Remember the $15 in gold goes to the ones making the GREATEST GAINS in the number of votes. We will also give the following bonus on the second count.

For every seven new subscriptions, 10,000 extra votes, a total of 14,000 votes.

For every seven renewal subscriptions, 8,000 extra votes, a total of 11,500 votes.

For every seven back subscriptions, 6,000 extra votes, a total of 8,800 votes.

For every forty merchants' coupons brought to this office and counted by the publisher a bonus of 500 extra votes will be given, a total of 1,500 votes.

These coupons may be collected from any and all the merchants who are in the contest.

All the candidates previously nominated are in the contest.

DEATH OF PIONEER

Mrs. Emma Ager Passed Away Tuesday Morning

Had Lived in Charlevoix County for Thirty-Three Years.

The silent messenger has again entered our midst, this time calling Mrs. Emma Ager, better known as "Grandma Ager," to her eternal rest.

Her maiden name was Emma Hall. She was born in Hampshire, England, March 12, 1837.

She was married in 1853 to Walter Willis, to which union eight children were born, five still living.

In 1851, they removed to Canada, where after six months she was left a widow.

In 1878, she moved from Canada to this place, settling on the farm now owned by Mr. Fairbanks, where she helped to carve out a home from the virgin forest.

In later years she lived in Charlevoix, where her self-sacrificing life won her a host of friends.

Nineteen years ago she was united in marriage to Isaac Ager of Barnard, who preceded her into eternity three years ago.

About nine years ago she suffered a severe stroke of paralysis, since which time she has been a constant sufferer, until she passed away, Tuesday morning, October 31.

There passes away one who was a faithful wife, a loving, self-sacrificing mother, a kind friend and a true Christian.

Mrs. Ager spent the last few years of her life with Mrs. Georgie Ager, where she was when the last call came.

Funeral services were held at the home, conducted by A. J. Pontius, of the Church of God.

Those out of town who attended were George Ball and Charles Beech of Levering.

Those who are left to mourn are her children, James Willis, Mrs. Jennie Ager and Mrs. Mary Moore, all of this place; George Willis of New Mexico, Walter Willis of Moskogan, and a brother George Ball of Levering.

ALMOST A CENTURY

Harvey S. Cook Dies at the Age of Ninety-Five

Had Long Been a Resident of Charlevoix for Thirty Years.

Harvey Cook, one of Charlevoix's oldest citizens, died Monday morning about 7:30 o'clock of heart trouble.

He was born at New Hartford Conn., October 16, 1816, and at the age of sixteen took up the shoe maker's trade and has worked at that sixty-three years.

In 1853 he married Melissa Washburn, of Oswego county, New York, and while there one son was born to them, George of this city. They lived there until about thirty years ago when they came to Charlevoix.

Since his arrival at this city Mr. Cook has made a host of friends, as he was always cheerful and contented, and his presence will be greatly missed in the community.

He was last seen down town the latter part of May and ever since that time he has been ailing.

He was the oldest of a family of six and outlived all the rest.

Mr. Cook was the grandfather of twenty-one, great grandfather of three and great-great grandfather of two children.

Besides all of these, Mr. Cook is survived by two sons, George of this city, and Henry whose home is in Wisconsin.

The funeral service took place at ten o'clock this morning at the home of George Cook, and was conducted by Rev. Patnaud, being well attended by those who held in reverence our old friend.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE

East Jordan Man Misses Death by a Small Margin.

Death by a narrow margin was what Walter L. French escaped at Kenosha, Wis., Tuesday night when he was thrown under a train and two fingers of his left hand cut off.

Mr. French had gone to Kenosha to join a party on a hunting trip and when the train was pulling into Kenosha, he mistook a train on a siding for a moving train, and believing that the train on which he was riding had stopped, he swung himself off the platform. The train was running fourteen miles an hour and he was thrown to the station platform and rolled off the platform under the train.

He grasped the rail with his left hand, and although two trucks passed over his hand he managed to hold his body away from the rail until the train had been stopped. He was badly bruised, but the only broken bones were in the crushed fingers, which the physicians found necessary to amputate.

Mrs. French, with daughter left Wednesday for Kenosha in response to a message informing her of the accident.—Kaat Jordan Herald.

NEXT WEDNESDAY NIGHT

First Number of Charlevoix Citizens' Lecture Course.

The Anita's Singing Orchestra the Attraction.

Those who like to be entertained in a manner above the ordinary should not fail to hear the opening number of the lecture and entertainment course Wednesday evening, November 15.

The Anita's is not a conventional orchestra nor is it a conventional singing party, but it is a company of entertainers doing both the work of the orchestra and the work of a singing organization.

No expense has been spared in securing the right people, in constituting the company, in coaching it for each individual number of the program, and in preparing the whole organization and its work to meet the most critical audiences and popular demands.

It is a Ralph Dunbar organization and Mrs. Ralph Dunbar accompanies it. To those who know the work of Mr. Dunbar as an organizer and trainer of high class musical organizations, it is sufficient recommendation to guarantee a full house.

The Anita's are not essentially a novelty attraction but an organization of artistic, versatile women. The artists have been selected not only for individual artistic accomplishments, but for their versatility.

The reserve seat sale will commence Tuesday evening, November 14, at 7:00 p. m., at Chapel's drug store.

DEATH OF MRS. TUTTLE

Had Been a Life Long Resident of This Vicinity.

Mrs. Joe Tuttle of Boyne City died Friday morning, November 3, of cancer.

Hattie Brock was born in Antrim county, Michigan, and up to the time of her marriage to Joe Tuttle, lived on the Brock farm south of Charlevoix.

Beside her husband, she leaves a sister, Mrs. Harry Coblenz and one brother, Hiram Brock, both of Ironton.

The remains were brought down here Sunday on the "City of Boyne" and the burial took place at Brookside cemetery.

ANOTHER BUSINESS CHANGE

S. H. Smith, the Autom Street Grocer, Sells Out

Monday, S. H. Smith, the popular Antrim street grocer, sold his business to McGeagh & Morse, who have taken possession. Mr. Smith has been one of Charlevoix's most reliable business men for several years, and during that time, has received a fine patronage.

The new firm consists of Mrs. Ester McGeagh and Mrs. Essie Morse, both old and well known Charlevoix residents, and will carry on the business in the same careful manner that brought success to Mr. Smith.

DOUBLE WEDDING

All Participants are Well Known Charlevoix People.

Thursday evening, November 2, occurred the double wedding of Milton Block and Pauline McFarland; and Henry Block and Kathryn Nowland at the M. E. parsonage, Norwood, Reverend Henry officiating.

The two bridal couples are for the present keeping house on Henry Block's farm.

These young people are all well known in Charlevoix and their many friends wish them years of success.

SHOOTS HIMSELF THROUGH CHEST

Fred Dean, Prominent Farmer of Eveline, Commits Suicide

FROM ATTACK OF MENTAL ABERATION

Had Been Feeling Depressed for Several Months

Leaves Wife and Four Children—Had Lately Sold Farm and Purchased Farm of I. Mitchell.

Monday afternoon our citizens were shocked when word came over the wires that Fred Dean, one of the best known farmers of Eveline township, had committed suicide by shooting himself through the chest about three o'clock that afternoon.

Mr. Dean had lived on his farm near Ironton for several years. About three months ago he purchased the large farm of I. Mitchell in the same township.

Mr. Dean has not been in the best of health lately and several times has been heard to make the remark that he was ready to die.

He was about fifty years of age and leaves a wife and four children, Bertha, Charles and Datus of Charlevoix county, and Mrs. Wilson who resides in the southern part of the state.

Coroner Armstrong held an inquest, the jury bringing in a verdict that he committed suicide while suffering from mental aberration. The funeral will be held Thursday.

NEW LAW IS A PUZZLE

Officials Wonder When Primary Fund Will be Apportioned.

Just how the new law relative to the apportionment of primary school money will work out is a matter of concern among state officers charged with that duty.

The new law requires the superintendent of public instruction to make the apportionment between the fifth and fifteenth day of July. As the school census is not taken until after the close of the school year it is exceedingly doubtful if the reports will be in the department of public instruction in time to allow for the apportionment to be made in accordance with the terms of the law. In fact there are forty-two counties out of the eighty-three which have not reported their correct census figures for last year. It is considered much more probable that the fund will be apportioned during September or October than that it will be made at the time fixed in the act. This year and in previous years, the apportionment has been made in May and November, but at present will be made next year.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Resolved by the Charlevoix Court No. 80, Independent Order of Foresters that

Whereas, death has again entered our order and this time plucked, in the beginning of its usefulness, our dear brother Levi Shea, therefore be it

Resolved, that while we deeply lament the loss of one, who was a willing and cheerful worker, we bow in submission to him who orders all things aright and for our good.

Resolved, that we extend to the family, thus bereft of a loving husband and brother, our heartfelt sympathy, commending them to the Savior who alone can comfort and heal.

Resolved, that our charter be draped for thirty days in loving memory of our silent brother, whose hand and voice will never more greet us here.

Resolved, that a copy of the resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy published in both of our city papers.

HEEDED THE WARNING

Many of Charlevoix's People Have Done So.

When the kidneys are sick they give unmistakable warning that should not be ignored. By examining the urine and treating the kidneys upon the first sign of disorder, many days of suffering may be saved. Sick kidneys expel a dark, ill-smelling urine, full of "brick dust" sediment and painful in passage. Sluggish kidneys cause a dull pain in the small of the back, headaches, dizzy spells, tired, fangid feelings and frequent rheumatic twinges.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. If you suffer from any of the above symptoms you can use no better remedy.

Charlevoix people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills.

W. George Linn, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years, and have found that they are effective in relieving all troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn of a case where Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McBarn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

C. H. S. NOTES.

The football teams of Charlevoix and Potoskey met Saturday, November 4, on the Athletic grounds at Potoskey, to decide the championship of northern Michigan. Charlevoix held Potoskey with a score of 11 to 0, up until about five minutes before the end of the game when Potoskey made a touch down and goal kick ending the game with a score of 11 to 6. The boys all played a good game, but the most exciting feature of the game was the tackle of Poole of Charlevoix and Hamel of Potoskey. The lineup was as follows:

L. E. Ned Durance.
L. E. Guy Withers.
L. G. Dewitt McLean.
C. Lyon Thomas.
L. H. Will Poole.
R. E. George Papinian.
R. T. John Papinian.
R. G. Andrew Skyr.
R. H. John Kirby.
F. B. James Krotick.

Friday afternoon Mr. Carl Vrooman gave to the students of the high school and the seventh and eighth grades a talk on the subject of "conservation," which was very interesting. Plans are being made to make a study of some of the phases of "conservation" in some of the high school classes.

Prof. DeVoe, Misses Himes, Whiting, Kelly and Finnican have been attending the State Teachers' Association at Detroit and returned Saturday evening.

Miss Levenson, who has been ill for the past week, is improving and we expect to see her back at school soon.

The students in the first and third year English classes are preparing book reviews this week.

Miss King was absent from school Monday on account of illness.

Don't forget to buy a ticket for the lecture course.

Glen Kirby has returned from a visit in Canada with his mother, and on Monday he entered the eighth grade.

The eighth grade has secured a skeleton from Dr. Wilkinson for their physiology work.

Miss Himes and Miss Whiting with some of the other teachers, attended the Michigan State Teachers' Meeting held in Detroit last week Wednesday and Thursday. Miss Himes gave a brief report of some of the things discussed and chiefly that of oral work in the schools.

Lillian Flanders had charge of Miss Kelly's room during her attendance at the state meeting in Detroit.

Lila Gray and Ella Rasmussen taught in the training room during Miss Whiting's absence.

Ernest Todd and Constance Naam are editors this week.

Marguerite Munger and Lillian Radall taught the chart class and the first grade of the Washington school, taking Miss Finnican's place, while she attended the Detroit meeting.

Tom Scroggie, class '10; Mildred Drescher and Clara Fanneman, class '09, were among those who attended the state teachers' meeting at Detroit.

A GREAT DISCOVERY

Certain Ingredients That Really Promote Hair Growth When Properly Combined.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Naphthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germs which rob the hair of its natural nourishment, and also creates a clean, healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Phocarpin, although not a coloring matter or dye, is a well-known ingredient for restoring the hair to its natural color, when the loss of hair has been caused by a disease of the scalp.

These ingredients in proper combination, with alcohol added as a stimulant, and for its well-defined nourishing properties, perfect perhaps the most effective remedy that is known for scalp and hair troubles.

We have a remedy which is chiefly composed of these ingredients, in combination with other extremely valuable medicinal agents. We guarantee it to positively cure dandruff and to grow hair, even though the scalp in spots is bare of hair. If there is any vitality left in the roots, it will positively cure baldness, or we will refund your money. If the scalp has a glazed, shiny appearance, it is an indication that baldness is permanent, but in other instances we believe baldness is curable.

We want every one troubled with scalp disease or loss of hair to try Rexall "36" Hair Tonic. If it does not cure dandruff and grow hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will without question or quibble return every cent paid us for it. We put this guarantee on every bottle. It has effected a positive cure in 93 per cent of cases where put to a practical test.

Rexall "36" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike, and we think, in every particular, better than anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is prescribed. We urge you to try this preparation at our entire risk. Certainly we know of no better guarantee to give you. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store, The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Pharmacist, Charlevoix, Michigan.

DR. A. B. SPINNEY will be at BAKER'S INN, Charlevoix, FRIDAY, November 10, 8 a. m. to 8 p. m.

Dr. A. B. Spinney of Detroit, a specialist of 52 years' experience in treating chronic diseases, will give free consultation and be at the above named place on said date.

SICK PEOPLE SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years—Have cured hundreds given up by home doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given for ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

PART I. CHAPTER I.

It was a quiet night in the Tivoli. At the bar, which ranged along one side of the large chinked-log room, teened half a dozen men, two of whom were discussing the relative merits of spruce tea and lime juice as remedies for scurvy. They argued with an air of depression and with intervals of morose silence. The other men, seated at the bar, were the gamblers. One lone man was playing at the faro table. The roulette was not even spinning, and the gamekeeper stood by the roaring, red-hot stove, talking with a young, dark-eyed woman, comely of face and figure, who was known from Juneau to Fort Yukon as the Virgin. Three men sat in at stud poker, but they played with small chips and without enthusiasm, while there were no onlookers. On the floor of the dancing room, which opened out at the rear, three couples were waltzing daintily to the strains of a violin and a piano.

Circle City was not deserted, nor was money tight. The miners were in from Moosehead creek and the other diggings to the west, the summer washing had been good, and the men's pouches were heavy with dust and nuggets. The Klondike had not yet been discovered, nor had the miners of the Yukon learned the possibilities of deep digging and wood-firing. No work was done in the winter, and they made a practice of hibernating in the large camps like Circle City during the long Arctic night. Time was heavy on their hands, their pouches were well-filled, and the only social diversion to be found was in the saloons. Yet the Tivoli was practically deserted, and the Virgin, standing by the stove, yawned with uncovered mouth and said to Charley Bates:

"If something don't happen soon, I'm goin' to bed. What's the matter with the camp, anyway? Everybody dead?"

Bates did not even trouble to reply, but went on moodily rolling a cigarette. Den MacDonald, pioneer, Yukon, owner and proprietor of the Tivoli and all its games, wandered forlornly across the great vacant space of floor and joined the two at the stove.

"Anybody dead?" the Virgin asked him.

"Looks like it," was the answer. "Then it must be the whole camp," she said with an air of finality and with another yawn.

MacDonald grinned and nodded, and opened his mouth to speak, when the front door swung open and a man appeared in the light. He would have appeared a large man had not a huge French-Canadian stepped up to him from the bar and gripped his hand. "Hello, Daylight!" was his greeting. "By Gar, you good for sore eyes!"

"Hello, Louis, when did you all blow in?" returned the newcomer. "Come up and have a drink and tell us all about Bone creek. Why, doggone you-all, sheke again. Where's that pardner of yours? I'm looking for him."

Another huge man detached himself from the bar to shake hands. Olaf Henderson and French Louis, partners together on Bone creek, were the two largest men in the country, and though they were but half a head taller than the newcomer, between them he was dwarfed completely.

"Hello, Olaf," said the one called Daylight. "Tomorrow's my birthday. And you, too, Louis. Come up and drink, and I'll tell you-all about it."

The arrival of the newcomer seemed to send a flood of warmth through the place. "It's Burning Daylight," the Virgin cried—the first to recognize him as he came into the light. Charley Bates' tight features relaxed at the sight, and MacDonald went over and joined the three at the bar. With the advent of Burning Daylight the whole place suddenly became brighter and cheerier. The barkeepers were active. Voices were raised. Somebody laughed. And when the fiddler, peering into the front room, remarked to the pianist: "It's Burning Daylight," the waltz tune perceptibly quickened, and the dancers, catching the contagion, began to whirl about as if they really enjoyed it. It was known to them of old time that nothing languished when Burning Daylight was around.

He turned from the bar and saw the woman by the stove and the eager look of welcome she extended him.

"Hello, Virgin, old girl," he called. "Hello, Charley. What's the matter with you-all? Why wear faces like that when folks only cost three ounces? Come up, you-all, and drink. Come up, you unbred dead, an' name your poison. Come up, everybody. This is my night, and I'm going to ride it. Tomorrow I'm thirty, and then I'll be an old man. It's the last fling of youth. Are you-all with me? Surge along—then—Surge along."

The waltz in the back room being finished, the three couples, followed by the fiddler and the pianist and heading for the bar, caught Daylight's eye.

"Surge along, you-all!" he cried. "Surge along and name it. This is my night, and it ain't a night that comes frequent. Surge up, you Swashes and Salmon-eaters. It's my night, I tell you-all—"

"A blamed mangy night," Charley Bates interpolated.

"You're right, my son," Burning Daylight went on, early. "A mangy night, but it's my night, you see. I'm the mangy old he-wolf. Listen to me now!"

And how he did, like a lone gray timber wolf, till the Virgin thrust her pretty fingers in her ears and shivered. A minute later she was whirling away in his arms to the dancing floor, where, along with three other women and their partners, a rollicking Virginie reel was soon in progress.

Few men knew Elam Harnish by any other name than Burning Daylight, the name which had been given him in the early days in the land because of his habit of routing his comrades out of their blankets with the complaint that daylight was burning. Of the pioneers in that far Arctic wilderness, where all men were pioneers, he was reckoned among the oldest. Men like Al Mayo and Jack McQuestion envied him; but they had entered the land by crossing the Rockies from the Hudson Bay country to the east. He, however, had been the pioneer over the Chilkoot and Chilkat passes. In the spring of 1883, twelve years before, a strapping eighteen, he had crossed over the Chilkoot with five comrades. In the fall he had crossed back with one. Four had perished by mischance in the bleak, uncharted wilderness. And for twelve years Elam Harnish had continued to grope for gold among the shadows of the Circle. Heroes are seldom given to hero-worship, but among those of that land, young as he was, he was accounted an elder hero. In point of time he was before them. In point of deed he was beyond them.

He was a striking figure of a man, of all the men in the Tivoli. Soft-tanned moccasins of moose-hide, hefted in Indian designs, covered his feet. His trousers were ordinary overalls, his coat was made from a blanket. Long-gauntleted leather mittens, lined with wool, hung by his side. They were connected, in the Yukon fashion, by a leather thong passed around the neck and across the shoulders. On his head was a fur cap, the ear-flaps raised and the strings dangling. His face, lean and slightly lined, with the suggestion of hollows under the cheek bones, seemed almost Indian. The burnt skin and keen dark eyes contributed to this effect, though the bronze of the skin and the eyes themselves were essentially those of a white man. He looked older than thirty, and yet, smooth-shaven and without wrinkles, he was almost boyish. The impression of age was based on no tangible evidence. It came from the abstract facts of the man, from what he had endured and survived, which was far beyond that of ordinary men. He had lived naked and tensely, and something of all this smoldered in his eyes, vibrated in his voice and seemed forever a whisper on his lips.

It was two in the morning when the dancers, bent on getting something to eat, adjourned the dancing for half an hour. And it was at this moment that Jack Kearns suggested poker. Jack Kearns was a big, bluff-featured man, who, along with Bettles, had made the disastrous attempt to found a post on the head-reaches of the Koyukuk, far inside the Arctic circle. After that Kearns had fallen back on his posts at Forty Mile and Sixty Mile and changed the direction of his ventures by sending out to the states for a small saw-mill and a river steamer. Jack Kearns suggested poker. French Louis, Dan MacDonald and Hal Campbell (who had made a strike on Moosehide), all three of whom were not dancing because there were not girls enough to go around, inclined to the suggestion. They were looking for a fifth man when Burning Daylight emerged from the rear room, the Virgin on his arm, the train of dancers in his wake. In response to the call of the poker-players, he came over to their table in the corner.

"Want to sit in," said Campbell.

"How's your luck?"

"I sure got it tonight," Burning Daylight answered with enthusiasm. "I sure got it tonight," Burning Daylight pressed his arm warningly. She went him for the dancing. "I sure got my luck with me, but I'd sooner dance. I ain't hankerin' to take the money away from you-all."

Nobody urged. They took his refusal as final, and the Virgin was pressing his arm to turn him away in pursuit of the supper-seekers, when he experienced a change of heart. It was not that he did not want to dance, nor that he wanted to hurt her; but that insistent pressure on his arm put his free man-nature in revolt. "The thought in his mind was that he did not want any woman running him. Himself a favorite with women, nevertheless they did not bulk big with him. They were toys, playthings, part of the relaxation from the bigger game of life. He met women along with the whisky and gambling, and from observation he had found that it was far easier to break away from the drink and the cards than from a woman once the man was properly entangled. He resented the pull on his arm by the mere negative mass of him, and said:

"I sort of feel a hankering to give you-all a flutter."

Tact and sympathy strove with him, and he smiled with his eyes into the Virgin's eyes as he said:

"You-all go and get some grub. I ain't hungry. And we'll dance some more by and by. The night's young yet. Go it, old girl."

He released his arm and thrust her playfully on the shoulder, at the same time turning to the poker players.

"Take off the limit and I'll go you-all."

"Limit's the roof," said Jack Kearns. Once started, it was a quiet game, with little or no conversation, though all about the players the place was a-roar. Elam Harnish had ignited the spark. More and more miners dropped in to the Tivoli and remained. When Burning Daylight went on the tear, no man cared to miss it. The dancing floor was full. The luck at the table varied monotonously, no big hands being out. As a result, high play went on with small hands, though no play the big combination of hands arrived. It was the moment of moments that men wait weeks for in a poker game. The news of it tingled over the Tivoli. The onlookers became quiet. The men farther away ceased talking and moved over to the table. The players deserted the other games, and the dancing-floor was forsaken, so that all stood at last, five-score and more in a compact and silent group, around the poker table. The high betting went on, with the draw not in sight. Kearns had dealt, and French Louis had opened the pot with one marker.

In his case one hundred dollars. Campbell had merely "seen" it, but Elam Harnish, coming next, had tossed in five hundred dollars, with the remark to MacDonald that he was letting him in easy. MacDonald glanced again at his hand, put in a thousand in markers. Kearns, debating a long time over his hand, finally "saw." It then cost French Louis nine hundred to remain in the game, which he contributed after a similar debate. It cost Campbell likewise nine hundred to remain and drew cards, but to the surprise of all he saw the nine hundred and raised on another thousand.

"You-all are on the grade—at least," Harnish remarked as he saw the fifteen hundred and raised a thousand in turn. "Helen Breakfast's sure on top this divide, and you-all had best look out for bustin' harness."

"Me for that same lady," accompanied MacDonald's markers for two thousand and for an additional thousand-dollar raise.

"I ain't got no more markers," Kearns remarked plaintively. "We'd best begin it, O. L.'s."

"Glad you're going to stay," was MacDonald's cordial response.

"I ain't stayed yet. I've got a thousand in already. How's it stand now?"

"It'll cost you three thousand for a look in, but nobody will stop you from raising."

"Raise—h—l. You must think I got a pat like yourself," Kearns looked at his hand. "But I'll tell you what I'll do, Mac. I've got a hunch, and I'll just see that three thousand."

He wrote the sum on a slip of paper, signed his name, and consigned it to the center of the table.

French Louis became the focus of all eyes. He fingered his cards nervously for a pace. Then, with a "By Gar! Ah got not one little better hunch," he regretfully tossed his hand into the discard.

The next moment the hundred and odd pairs of eyes shifted to Campbell.

"I won't hump you, Jack," he said, contenting himself with calling the regular two thousand.

The eyes shifted to Harnish, who scribbled on a piece of paper and showed it forward.

"I'll just let you-all know this ain't no Sunday school society of philanthropy," he said. "I see you, Jack, and I raise you a thousand. Here's where you-all get action on your pat, Mac."

"Action's what I fetten on, and I lift another thousand," was MacDonald's rejoinder. "Still got that hunch, Jack?"

"I still got that hunch," Kearns fingered his cards a long time. "And

After the serving of refreshments the guests departed, wishing the happy couple many years of success.

When the people can be made to understand that it actually costs more in time and money to travel over a poor road than it does to travel over a good one, they will be less inclined to so begrudge the expense of good roads, and what is more important still, will be willing and anxious to put the business of road making into the hands of intelligent men who understand the business. Poor roads are as expensive a thing as a county district.

The Lady Maccabees of the World, the new lodge just organized in this city, met at the home of Mrs. L. B. Bartlett last Friday afternoon, there being fifteen members present. Several new applications were presented and much interest manifested. The lodge will hold a public meeting at the Bank Hall, Wednesday, November 22, and on Thursday afternoon, November 23, the five will hold its next regular meeting. The present indications are that this new organization will be a great social benefit and growing credit to this city.

BRICK FOR WEIGHT.

Makes Good Road Material For Heavy Traffic.

Erie county is the most important in the state in the matter of road maintenance, according to H. K. Bishop, first deputy highway commissioner.

Westchester county, with its roads leading into New York, is the next, but it does not concern the commission so much because the city takes care of the main roads. Erie county has nearly 200 miles of state roads, a considerable portion of which have been paved with brick. Mr. Bishop considers that brick paving is the best adapted to the roads about Ironton because of the heavy traffic.

While the initial cost is greater than macadam or asphalt macadam, Mr. Bishop believes it will be compensated in the long run. Macadam roads, he explains, will stand up well under light usage, but it is another proposition where heavy wagon and automobile traffic is concerned. The automobile tires would not wear macadam rapidly, he says, by applying an oil coating they could be packed the road but when the wheels of wagons and the tracks of horses' shoes pass the surface the soft traffic tends to white all the surface.

Consolidated road material in the United States is made up in the task of carrying enough to take care of the appetite of the remaining 100,000,000 or more, there are nearly a quarter of a million men who each get not because they are too old, but because they are too busy.

Joseph Schiff of New York has made an offer of $100,000 to establish a university in his native city, Frankfurt. He stipulates that no restrictions shall be placed on the number of Jewish professors appointed to chairs and that no disabilities be imposed on Jewish students attending lectures.

The usual hours of work in Japan are twelve a day. Males more than fourteen years old receive from 16 to 25 cents and less than fourteen years old from 6 to 10 cents a day. Females more than fourteen years old are paid from 10 to 14 cents and less than fourteen years old from 5 to 9 cents a day.

As Paraguay lies between Brazil and Argentina, both these countries have devoted much thought and money to extending their railway lines to Paraguayan territory. The only line Paraguay has is the Paraguayan Central, which runs from Asuncion in a south-easterly direction toward Encarnacion.

A GOOD WIRE STRETCHER.

Handy Little Homemade Instrument That Saves Trouble.

One of the most simple and effective barbed wire stretchers may be made from an ordinary wood lever about three feet long. At about eight inches from one end a small iron plate is fastened to one edge of the lever, says the Orange Judd Farmer.

This has a slot into which the wire just slips. A notch is also cut in the lever at that point. The method of using is clearly shown in illustration and as the lever is drawn around the post the wire can be brought up tight by for stapling with slight effort.

AVOID ALL CUT FINGERS.

Always Have Plenty of Herbs.

No garden can be considered complete that does not include a good variety of herbs, for nothing can quite fill their place in the household.

The seeds of annual sorts should be sown early, but the perennial varieties and many of the best are those that seeds sown in midsummer will produce strong plants that may be freely cut from the following year.

Make the soil rich, mellow and fine before sowing the seed. When the seed is sown in the border beds, or the fence row, where they can grow undisturbed year after year.

The leaves should be cut when fully grown and before the plant blooms, choosing a clear dry day for the work. Spread in a cool shady room to dry as drying in the sun or by the fire spoils both color and flavor.

THE DAIRYMAN WHO READS.

The most successful dairyman at the present time is the one who reads and keeps abreast with the most modern methods.

Information by word of mouth is too slow, and any one following the ways of his ancestors in carrying on his business in the dairy is sure to be out of the race.

The dairyman who reads gets out of the rut; he uses better feeds and as a result has cows that will make nearly double the butter; he also feeds more intelligently, and the sanitary conditions about his premises are better. If money is to be made in dairying we must cut loose from the old hackneyed ways.—Farm and Stock.

BURNING DAYLIGHT

"I'll play it, but you've got to know how to play it. There's my steamer, the Bella—worth twenty thousand if she's worth an ounce. There's Sixty-Mile with five thousand—lo-afers on the shelves. And you know I got a new mill coming in. It's at Linderman now, and the scow is building. Am I good?"

"Dig in; you're sure good," said Daylight's answer. "And while we're about it, I may mention casual that I got twenty thousand in Mac's safe, there, and there's twenty thousand more in the ground on Moosehide. You know the ground, Campbell. Is that all in the dirt?"

"There sure is, Daylight," Kearns asked. "How much does it cost now?" "Two thousand to see," Daylight answered. "We'll sure bump you if you all come in." Daylight warned him. "It's an almighty good bunch," Kearns said, adding his slip to the growing heap. "I can feel her crawling up and down my back."

"We'll Dance Some More By and By. The Night's Young Yet."

"I ain't got a bunch, but I got a tolerable good hand," Campbell announced, as he slid in his slip; "but it's not a raising hand."

"Nine is," Daylight paused and wrote. "I see that thousand and raise her the same old thousand."

The Virgin, standing behind him, then did what a man's best friend was not privileged to do. Reaching over Daylight's shoulder, she picked up his hand and read it, at the same time shielding the faces of the cards close to his chest. What she saw were three queens and a pair of eights, but nobody guessed what she saw. Every player's eyes were on her face as she scanned the cards, but no sign did she give. She laid the hand face down again on the table and slowly the flagrant eyes withdrew from her, having learned nothing.

MacDonald smiled benevolently. "I see you, Daylight, and I bump this time for two thousand. How's that bunch, Jack?"

"Still a-crawling, Mac. You got me now, but that bunch is a rip-snorter persimmon sort of a critter, and it's my plain duty to ride it. I call for three thousand. And I got another bunch: Daylight's going to call, too."

"He sure is," Daylight agreed, after Campbell had thrown up his hand. "He knows when he's on against it, and he plays accordin' to it. I see that two thousand, and then I'll see the draw."

In a dead silence, save for the low voices of the three players, the draw was made. Thirty-four thousand dollars were already in the pot, and the play possibly not half over. To the Virgin's amazement, Daylight held up his three queens, discarding his eights and calling for two cards. And this time not even she dared look at what he had drawn. She knew her limit of control. Nor did he look. The two new cards lay face down on the table where they had been dealt to him.

"Got enough," was the reply. "You can draw if you want to, you know?" Kearns warned him.

"None; this'll do me." Kearns himself drew two cards, but did not look at them. Still Hornish let his cards lie.

"I never bet in the teeth of a pat hand," he said slowly, looking at the saloon keeper. "You all start her rolling, Mac."

MacDonald counted his cards carefully, to make doubly sure it was not a foul hand, wrote a sum on a paper slip, and slid it into the pot, with the ample utterance:

"Five thousand."

draw and counted his five cards. "I see that six thousand, and I raise her five thousand. Just to try ood keep you out, Jack."

"And I raise you five thousand just to lend a hand at keeping Jack out," MacDonald said in turn. His voice was slightly husky and strained, and a nervous twitch in the corner of his mouth followed speech. Kearns was pale, and those who looked on noted that his hand trembled as he wrote his slip. But his voice was unchanged.

"I lift her along for five thousand," he said. Daylight was now in the center. The kerosene lamps above hung high lights from the rash of sweat on his forehead. The bronze of his cheeks was darkened by the accession of blood. His black eyes glittered and his nostrils were distended and eager. They were large nostrils, tokeoling his descent from savage ancestors who had survived by virtue of deep lungs and generous air-passages. Yet, unlike MacDonald, his voice was firm and customary, and, unlike Kearns his hand did not tremble when he wrote.

"I call for ten thousand," he said. "Not that I'm afraid of you, Mac. It's that bunch of Jack's."

"I bump his bunch for five thousand just the same," said MacDonald. "I had the best hand before the draw and I still guess I got it."

"Mebbe this is a case where a bunch after the draw is better'n the bunch before," Kearns remarked; wherefore duty says, "Lift her, Jack, lift her," and so I lift her another five thousand."

Daylight leaned back in his chair and gazed up at the kerosene lamps while he computed aloud:

"I was in nine thousand before the draw, and I saw and raised eleven thousand—that makes thirty. I'm only good for ten more." He leaned forward and looked at Kearns. "So I call five thousand."

"You can raise if you want," Kearns answered. "Your dogs are good for five thousand in this game."

"Nary dawg. You all can win my dust and dirt, but nary one of my dawgs. I jost call."

The saloon keeper finally spoke: "If anybody else wins, they'll have to take a mortgage on the Tivoli." The two other players nodded.

"So I call, too." MacDonald added his slip for five thousand. Not one of them claimed the pot, and not one of them called the size of his hand. Simultaneously and in silence they faced their cards on the table, while a general uptoeing and craning of necks took place among the onlookers. Daylight showed four queens and an ace; MacDonald four jacks and an ace, and Kearns four kings and a trey. Kearns reached forward with an encircling movement of his arm and drew the pot in to him, his arm shaking as he did so. Daylight picked the ace from his hand and tossed it over alongside MacDonald's ace, saying:

"That's what cheered me along. Mac. I knowed it was only king that could beat me, and he had them."

"What did you all have?" he asked, all interest, turning to Campbell. "Straight flush of four, open at both ends—a good drawing hand."

"You bet! You could a made a straight, a straight flush or a flush out of it."

"That's what I thought," Campbell said, sadly. "It cost me six thousand before I quit."

"I wisht you all'd drawn," Daylight laughed. "Then I wouldn't a caught that fourth queen. Now I've got to take Billy Rawlins' mail contract and much for Dyea. What's the size of the killing, Jack?"

Kearns attempted to count the pot, but was too excited. Daylight drew it across to him, with firm fingers grasping and stacking the markers and 1, 0, 0's and with clear brain adding the sum.

"One hundred and twenty-seven thousand," he announced. "You all can sell out now, Jack, and head for home."

The winner smiled and nodded, but seemed incapable of speech.

"Name your snake-bite, you all—the winner pays," Daylight called out loudly to all about him, at the same time rising from his chair and catching the Virgin by the arm. "Come on for a reel, you all dancers. The night's young yet, and it's eleven breakfast and the mail contract for me in the morning. Here, you all Rawlins, you I hereby do make over that same contract, and I start for salt water at nine a. m.—savee? Come on, you all! Where's that tubber?"

CHAPTER II.

It was Daylight's night. He was the center and the head of the revel, unquenchedly joyous, a contagion of fun. In between dances he paid over in Kearns the twenty thousand in dust and transferred to him his Moosehide claim. Likewise he arranged the taking over of Billy Rawlins' mail contract, and made his preparations for the start. He dispatched a messenger to rout out Kama, his dog-driver—a Tananaw Indian, far-wandered from his tribal home in the service of the invading whites. Kama entered the Tivoli, tall, lean, muscular, and for clad, the pick of his horde's race and barbaric still, unshaken and unabashed by the revelers that rioted about him while Daylight gave his orders.

"Um," said Kama, tabbing his instructions from his fingers. "Get um letters from Rawlins. Load um sled. Grab for Solikirk—you think um plenty dog grub stop Solikirk?"

"Plenty dog grub, Kama." "Um, Price sled this place nine um clock. Bring um snowshoes. No bring um tent. Mebbe bring um fly um little fly."

"No fly," Daylight answered, disbeliever. "We travel light—savee?"

"We carry plenty letters out, plenty letters back. You are strong man. Plenty cold, plenty travel, all right." "Sure all right," Kama muttered. "Um ready nine um clock." He turned on his moccasined heel and walked out, imperious, sphinx-like, neither giving nor receiving greetings nor looking to right or left. The Virgin led Daylight away into a corner.

"Look here, Daylight," she said in a low voice, "you're hustled." "Higher'n a kite,"

"I've eight thousand, lo Mac's safe," she began.

But Daylight interrupted. The up-onstrung loomed near and he shielded like an unbroken colt.

"It don't matter," he said. "Busted I came into the world, busted I go out, and I've been hustled most of the time since I arrived. Come on; let's waltz."

"But, later," she urged. "My money's doing nothing. I could lead to you—a grub-stake," she added, hurriedly, at sight of the alarm in his face.

"Nobody grubstake me," was the answer. "I stake myself, and when I make a killing it's sure all mine. No thank you, old girl. Much obliged. I'll get my stake by running the mail out and in." With a sudden well-assumed audibility of spirits he drew her toward the dancing-floor, and as they swung around and around in a waltz she pondered on the iron heart of the man who held her in his arms and related all her wiles.

At six the next morning, according with whisky, yet ever himself, he stood at the bar putting every man's hand down. The way of it was that two men faced each other across a corner, their right elbows resting on the bar, their right hands gripped together, while each strove to press the other's hand down. Man after man came against him, but no man put his hand down, even Olaf Henderson and French Louis falling despite their bugginess.

"The winner pays!" Daylight cried. "Surge along you all! This way to the snakeroom!"

"I'm hustled higher'n a kite, and I'm hittin' the trail for Dyea—"

"Goin' out!" some one called. A spasm of anger wrought on his face for a flash, but he was back again. "I know you all are only pokin' fun at me, but a question," he said with a smile. "Of course I ain't going out."

"Take the oath again, Daylight," the same voice cried.

"I swear: I'll first come over Chiboot in '83. I went out over the Pass in a fall blizzard, with a rag of a shirt and a cup of raw flour. I got my grubstake in Juneau that winter, and in the spring I went out over the Pass once more. And once more the fam'line drew me out. Next spring I went to again, and I swore then that I'd never come out till I made my stake. Well, I ain't made it, and here I am. And I ain't going out now. I get the mail and I come right back. I won't stop the night at Dyea. I'll hit up Chiboot soon as I change the dogs and get the mail and grub. And so I swear once more. I'll never hit for the Outside till I make my pile. And I tell you all, here and now, it's got to be an almighty big pile. I'll be real conservative, and put the bottom notch at a million. And for not an ounce less'n that will I go out of the country. I tell you all I got a bunch. There's a big strike coming on the Yukon, and it's just about due. I don't mean no ornery Moosehide, Birch creek kind of a strike. I mean a real rip-snorter half-racer. Nothing can stop her, and she'll come up river. There's where you all'll track my moccasins in the near future if you all want to find me—somewhere in the country around Stewart river. Indian river and Klondike river. When I get back with the mail, I'll head that way so fast you all won't see my trail for smoke. She's a-corning, fellows, sold me in derision."

The Laughter of the Almighty.

It's an awful thing to have God laughing at you. God's smile is pensive. God's laughter is derisive. He often works through natural agencies—Captain Philip of the Texas said the side which first first shot in a Sunday battle has always been defeated. For vera deliberately those the hour when the American fleet were at worship for his running fight. His battered hulls still lie becalmed on the Antillean shore. Every anchor, prison, almshouse, is God's laughter at men who defied him. Men laugh at snail-paces and typhoid gases at them. They laugh at social laws and moral laws and bathhouse disease plagues them. Did I say law was gibbing at them? Possibly the lawgiver that steth in the heavens was holding them in derision.

God is Not Mocked.

It is so easy to laugh at God's servants and their warnings. Men laughed at Noah. He was the first of his day—the old deluge, bubbling his indignity at many a sinner's nostril. Then the heat lightning of God's displeasure flashed its banner across the darkening sky. The low mutter of the thunder moved to crashing in the heavens. Then the locusts of the deep were opened. "No," said Noah, "God's laughter! God goes through the street of Sodom at midnight, warning. Men laugh at the old crank, the old fanatic. Was it fire and brimstone crackling in the sulphurous atmosphere? No; God's laughter! Is that a shrill in the palace? No; the laughter of God! There's shout of horsemen and rumble of chariot wheels. "Kill men! Capture women! Whet your swords!" The clanking of the horses' stirrups; the delivery of the waters are returning. "Is that mocking? Who is laughing? God! He that steth in the heavens has throned in derision. Christ came the Jewish rulers of the coming of Time and Vespasian and the destruction of the temple and that Jerusalem will lie in dust and ashes. But, no one believes that. But the most dreadful thing in human history tells of the mockery of him who is the God of judgment. All of God's predictions of judgment on individual and nation have come true to the letter. Men ascribe prevailing and laugh at the church. But they cannot escape God that way. Preach

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D.D.

THE LAUGHTER OF THE ALMIGHTY

Text: "The Lord steth in the heavens; he laugheth; he is not mocked."

Not many can stand ridicule. If you're loved you open up and ripen in the apostrophe, if you're hated you fence up like a pine tree in the gulf, but if you are laughed in you'll wither and wilt. You dislike April 1. Some youngster may pin a card on your coat. A farmer found his last wit let on the street on April fools' day. Hundreds passed by, but all sniffed the air or walked around it with a "you can't fool me" air of wisdom. They dreamed being laughed at. Sir Walter Scott said ridicule was the dread of his childhood. It broke poor Keats' heart. There are young men who risk ruin and downfall rather than risk ridicule. Boys stop going to Sunday school, men to church, if some worthless corner lounge sneers. Had John Alexander Dowle been beaten in the streets of New York and a couple of his followers been burned at the stake he would have returned to Zion City with a thousand converts and $1,600,000, but the newspapers lambasted him. The result is history.

The Mockery of Sin.

"Consequences are unifying," said George Elliot. A fearful sentence: "Soul death is the consequence of sin." That is what the old book declares. "The wages of sin is death." Man is an engine built to run three score years and ten. Sin cuts down his time one-half. Sin is a cerebro-spinal meningitis that stifles entirely. Sin is a boomerang. Strikes when the danger seems over. Sin is a troll of powder we lay from our house to the trail track where the sparks fall. Then we forget. Some day the unexpected happens. The spark kind the trail of powder do their work. Yes, consequences are unifying. The hero who stood on his head at the edge of Glacier point, in the Yosemite, with 3,000 feet of a clear dry beneath him, and the boatman who tries to see how far he can go toward Buckhorn Island, in the Niagara river above the falls, are fair types of the man played with sin. Some day the rocks of Yosemite and the Mists of the Mist will laugh at the foolhardy. Consequences are unifying. Repeat it over and over again as you would your A B C or your multiplication table. "The wages of sin is death." Wages! It isn't throwing dice; no gambler's luck. It's wages. Indeed, some are so anxious to give the devil his dues that they pay in advance. "Fools mock at sin," says the word. Yes, and sin gibes at fools too.

The Laughter of the Almighty.

It's an awful thing to have God laughing at you. God's smile is pensive. God's laughter is derisive. He often works through natural agencies—Captain Philip of the Texas said the side which first first shot in a Sunday battle has always been defeated. For vera deliberately those the hour when the American fleet were at worship for his running fight. His battered hulls still lie becalmed on the Antillean shore. Every anchor, prison, almshouse, is God's laughter at men who defied him. Men laugh at snail-paces and typhoid gases at them. They laugh at social laws and moral laws and bathhouse disease plagues them. Did I say law was gibbing at them? Possibly the lawgiver that steth in the heavens was holding them in derision.

God is Not Mocked.

It is so easy to laugh at God's servants and their warnings. Men laughed at Noah. He was the first of his day—the old deluge, bubbling his indignity at many a sinner's nostril. Then the heat lightning of God's displeasure flashed its banner across the darkening sky. The low mutter of the thunder moved to crashing in the heavens. Then the locusts of the deep were opened. "No," said Noah, "God's laughter! God goes through the street of Sodom at midnight, warning. Men laugh at the old crank, the old fanatic. Was it fire and brimstone crackling in the sulphurous atmosphere? No; God's laughter! Is that a shrill in the palace? No; the laughter of God! There's shout of horsemen and rumble of chariot wheels. "Kill men! Capture women! Whet your swords!" The clanking of the horses' stirrups; the delivery of the waters are returning. "Is that mocking? Who is laughing? God! He that steth in the heavens has throned in derision. Christ came the Jewish rulers of the coming of Time and Vespasian and the destruction of the temple and that Jerusalem will lie in dust and ashes. But, no one believes that. But the most dreadful thing in human history tells of the mockery of him who is the God of judgment. All of God's predictions of judgment on individual and nation have come true to the letter. Germs Spread in Skin

Eczema, Psoriasis and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seems a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years of misery. Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema. A 50c bottle will prove this to you.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble but have never seen such remarkable cures as those from D. D. D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application. We are so confident that D. D. D. will reach your case that it will cost you nothing if the very first full size bottle fails to make good every claim. If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D. D. D. anyway. We know that D. D. D. will help you. F. G. Hines & Co., Druggists.

Literary Notes

The Youth's Companion is for Everybody.

Of course if you are too young to read, or so old you have forgotten how, you may not enjoy The Youth's Companion. That is rather a sweeping statement, however, for hosts of children love to have the stories and jingles of the Children's Page read to them. There is many a grandfather and also grandmother, whose eyes are dim, who like nothing better than to sit and listen to The Companion stories and articles. Many a blind person, and even those who, in addition, can neither speak nor hear have been cheered by The Companion, its contents having been communicated to them through the finger-tips of friends. The reading of The Youth's Companion is a pretty sure cure for all kinds of loneliness. Robinson Crusoe would have been a happier man if he could have had his companion Thursday as well as his man Friday. Just send for the Prospectus for 1912 and sample copies of the paper.

We think you will agree, when you have read them, that no other paper gives quite so much of such a high quality as The Companion, and it costs only $1.75 now for the 52 weekly issues. On January 1, 1912, the subscription will be advanced to $2.00.

The new subscriber receives a gift of The Companion's Calendar for 1912, in ten colors and gold, and all the remaining issues of 1911 free from the time the subscription is received.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS

Many Catholics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. This preparation is called Kexall Ordinies. These are prompt, soothing, and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is harmless, tasteless, and odorless. Combined with other well-known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge, or cause nausea.

They act without causing any pain or business of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons, and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person. They come in three size packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents; 80 tablets, 50 cents. Remember you can obtain them only at our store, The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Melville, proprietors, Charlevoix, Michigan.

TIMELY BREVITIES

London is the world's largest market for the importation of pianos for women's hats. It is estimated that 50,000 persons there live by this industry. The value of the imports is put down at $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year.

The latest returns place the population of India at 215,000,000. Yet the entire area of India is no greater than that of nine of our western states—Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, Arizona, Utah and Wyoming.

The plant which yields vegetable ivory grows wild in Ecuador, Panama and Colombia. In Italy there are four or five vegetable ivory button factories, employing nearly 6,000 persons and producing annually over 10,000,000 gross of buttons.

Edward, prince of Wales, is a boy who, like many other boys, dislikes the company of little girls. They annoy him. When a visiting princess is around Queen Mary sometimes "calls down" the future king because he is not as polite to the feminine guest as he should be.

Every traveler from Siberia or from China, who traverses Manchuria is amazed at the apparently limitless stretches of fertile plow land. It is believed that Manchuria and a strip of eastern Mongolia could produce sufficient grain to feed China's whole population of 400,000,000.

NOTICE—SEALED BIDS.

Notice is hereby given that the city clerk will accept sealed proposals for the establishing and constructing of a sewer in Meach street, commencing at Dixon ave. and thence south on Meach street to Chicago ave. The bids must be in Chicago, avenue to main entrance of Chicago Hotel, up to and including twelve o'clock noon, the 10th day of November, 1911, which sealed proposals must be accompanied by a certified check to the City of Charlevoix for one hundred dollars ($100.00), and also the names of the bondsmen who will execute a bond to the City of Charlevoix for five hundred dollars ($500.00), should the contractor's sealed proposal be accepted.

All plans, plans, specifications and diagrams of the proposed work will be on exhibition at the City Clerk's office. The proposed work will be commenced within not less than ten days after notice from the Board of Public Works to commence the work, and the work shall be completed within sixty working days, barring strikes and lockouts, and for every day used to complete the work exceeding the said sixty working days the contractor shall be liable to the City of Charlevoix the sum of ten dollars ($10.00). The Board of Public Works reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

ESTHER J. HILLER, City Clerk.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, certain having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1902 by Albert E. Mason and Flora Parfume, husband and wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert E. Mason, of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on April 16th, A. D. 1902, in Liber 32nd of Mortgages, on page 125.

Also default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed the 25th day of August, A. D. 1902 by John Parfume and Flora Parfume, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 10th, 1902, in Liber 27 of Mortgages, on page 126, which mortgage was on the 31st day of August, A. D. 1902, assigned by John Parfume to Albert E. Mason, which assignment of mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 3rd, A. D. 1902, in Liber 31 of Mortgages, on page 117.

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due and unpaid on both of said mortgages at the date of this notice is the sum of $25,000 principal and interest, the sum of $25,000 and $250 respectively, and the further sum of $2574 for taxes, and $288 interest on taxes paid by the mortgagee, under the terms of the mortgage, and the further sum of $25 for insurance, and $252 interest on mortgage paid by the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, and an attorney's fee of $100 as provided in said mortgages, and whereas, no suit or proceeding in law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgages of the said Albert E. Mason, therefore, notice is hereby given that for virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgages, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgages will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described and possession of the foreclosed property at the earliest time after the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, that being the place where the Court Court for said county is held, on the 29th day of December, A. D. 1911, at two o'clock in the forenoon (standard time). Said notices are described as follows: Lot number twelve of block number thirteen of the original plat of said village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan.

Dated, September 7, 1911.

Grange Column

Bay Shore Grange, No. 338.
(Too late for last week.)

The Bay Shore Grange was opened in due form, with Worthy Master Fred Worth in the chair.

Lecture hour was in charge of Lecturer O. C. Alwood.

Roll call of members was responded to by giving the name of their farm, suggesting a farm name.

Thirty-eight members responded to roll call.

John A. Newville was present to assist with the work.

Fred Worth was elected insurance director.

The meeting was closed in due form. The next meeting will be held the second Friday in November, at the close of which a pot-luck supper will be served.

At the close of the meeting the following program was given:

Music—Theodore Bowman.

Declaration—"The Farmer that Grows," J. C. Wallace.

Recitation—"The City," Muriel Brecheim.

Discussion—"What I would look for if I went to buy a farm," George Long. The subject was ably discussed by several members.

Recitation—"What I find worth reading on my favorite paper," Minnie C. Jones.

Coughing at Night
Means loss of sleep which is bad for everyone. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound stops the cough at once, relieves the tickling and dryness in the throat and head, the inflamed membranes. Prevents a cold from developing into bronchitis or pneumonia. Keep always in the house. Refuse substitutes.

For coughing, dryness and tickling in the throat, hoarseness and all coughs and colds, take Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. Contains no opiates. Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

AUCTION SALES.

The auction sale season is again with us and the farmers of Charlevoix county appreciate the fact that the Charlevoix Courier is the medium through the use of which they are assured a crowd. The Courier makes dates for you with any auctioneer you may desire. "You cannot have a successful auction without a crowd of buyers, and you cannot secure that with auction bills. These never reach people except over a limited territory. The neighbors may come in to visit without any idea of buying anything. A man is not going ten or fifteen miles to an auction simply for the fun of it. He goes for the business and it is men of that class that make an auction 'hum.' Such men are not going to let $5 to $10 stand in the way of getting a horse that they have come that distance to purchase. Enough may be made on the sale of one animal to twice pay for all the cost of advertising. There is not an up-to-date auctioneer in the country but will tell you that the only way to have a successful auction is to advertise in a paper thoroughly covering the territory. Our charge for such service is very reasonable."

Horton Bay Grange No. 338.

Horton Bay Grange met in regular session Friday evening and was called to order by Past Master George Long.

After the usual order of business one candidate was instructed in the third and fourth degrees.

Grange closed in form to meet again on November 17.

Attendance nine members and two visitors from Maple Grove Grange.

Backache, Headache, Nervousness and rheumatism, both in men and women, mean kidney trouble. Do not allow it to progress beyond the reach of medicine, but stop it promptly with Foley's Kidney Pills. They regulate the action of the urinary organs. Tonic in action, quick in results.

J. E. Parker, 221 No. 10th St., Ft. Smith, Ark., says that he had taken many kinds of kidney medicine, but did not get better until he took Foley's Kidney Pills. No matter how long you have had kidney trouble, you will find quick and permanent benefit by the use of Foley's Kidney Pills. Start taking them now. Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

All losses are promptly paid in full by the insurance companies I represent, Myrtle Young.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session October 31 with Master J. E. Colburn in the chair. It was opened in regular form with twenty-five members and five visitors present.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with songs, stories and discussions for the good of the order.

The grange decided to have a grange tour Thanksgiving day.

Grange closed in form to meet again on two weeks.

I have some of the best fruit lands of the county for sale. I have buyers continually calling for fruit farms. If you want to buy or sell come to me as I can save you money. Joel Johnson.

SUCCESS WITH SHORTHORN CATTLE.

A good turn fall of Shorthorn cattle and prosperity seem to go in the same class, writes J. E. Taylor in the New England Homestead. Some twelve years ago Roscoe G. Bigelow, a Maine farmer, was plodding along trying to farm. One day he came to a realizing sense that if he was going to be a farmer he was going to be a good one. He made up his mind that pure bloods of whatever breed were the only kind to keep. He knew where he could buy a young heifer which was a Shorthorn. He watched that heifer grow and saw that she was going to make a beautiful cow. Six months after she had her first calf she made several pounds of butter a week. She was large and of excellent proportions, and Mr. Bigelow realized that he had in the Shorthorn the combined qualities of a good milk and beef.

Mr. Bigelow has in his barn now fifteen head of Shorthorn cattle. He has two yoke of oxen. One yoke is two years old, girls six feet ten inches and weighs 3,000 pounds. The other yoke of three-year-olds girls seven feet two inches and weighs 3,200 pounds. He has a bull thirteen months old that girls six feet and one inch. The sire was Mister Lad, who at one time sold for $1,000, and when he was four years old he weighed 2,200 pounds and gained eight feet. Mr. Bigelow has a heifer twelve and a half months old that girls five feet three inches. He has a two-year-old heifer that as a yearling won the state championship at the Maine falls and a cow with calf that won the state championship.

The value of Shorthorns as milk producers continues to be a much discussed question. Some dairymen in their faith to the breed, while the general opinion leans toward cows, especially bred for milk production, notably the Jerseys, Guernseys, Ayrshires and Alderneys. The fine Shorthorn bull here shown is of the latter type. He is Village Diamond, owned by the Duke of Portland, and was champion at the Leeds show.

In breeding Mr. Bigelow aims to see that the animal has good length, large joints and carries the head well above the level of the body. He wants them wide between the eyes, bends short and fairly fine at the muzzle, back level, barrel round, with full body and tail not set too high.

In discussing the matter of raising cattle Mr. Bigelow says: "Of course I have been successful. There is no reason why I shouldn't have been. I have worked for it. This work did not consist of choosing good cattle, but largely in caring for them. I have saved a good deal by raising my own grain, especially corn. This corn has been a great deal better than what I could have bought. I have ground it with the roll and fed it to them as a regular ration when not out to pasture, giving them about six quarts a day. The roll has had a tendency to tone up the corn and it is a regular ration for the rest of the feed."

GOOD ROADS ESSENTIAL. SAY TWO GOVERNORS.

Patrol System and National Legislation Favored by Bass and Crothers.

Governor Bass of New Hampshire is taking a verbal interest in road improvement throughout that state and in a recent interview expressed himself as being strongly in favor of the improvement and extension of the New Hampshire highways. This is the first time that Governor Bass has come out so forcibly in favor of better roads.

GOVERNOR BASS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

mission which shall not change under different administrations.

"Another feature that should be adopted," said Governor Bass, "is the system of patrols. By this I mean that all the roads should be divided into sections of five miles and each section placed in charge of a competent man, who will see that it is kept in good condition."

"I not only endorse national legislation for good roads," says Governor Austin L. Crothers of Maryland, "but I believe that before the present Democratic congress adjourns it should enact laws giving most liberal financial and moral support that will result in the building of four great antonion highways from ocean to ocean and from the Canadian line to the Gulf of Mexico and the Mexican borders."

"Every rural route should be made a post road or branch to the national highways and thus not only save the federal government millions of money in the quick and safe delivery of the mails, but the immediate and cheap transportation of our farm products to the railroad stations. To accomplish this the unemployed labor in America could be utilized and clean, respectable employment given millions of men."

"Government aid in public high ways improvement today overshadow any and all other measures before congress. The city man and the citizen of the country should and will demand it."

A GOOD ROADS "CRANK."

Highway Bill Passed Through Efforts of Minnesota Enthusiast.

The legislature of Minnesota has passed a road law that places that rocky, ice-bound state far in the van of the progressive states of the union, and this great forward step is the direct result of the labor of Robert C. Dunn, a fighting Irishman, familiarly known throughout the state as "Bald-headed Bob." He is a character of the unique and unusual sort, and because of his undying devotion to the good roads idea the following appreciation of him, which appeared recently in a Minnesota paper, is here given:

Robert C. Dunn's good roads bill has passed without opposition. If this bill becomes a law, and there is every prospect that it will, "Bald-headed Bob" will have accomplished more to establish himself as a public benefactor for all time to come than he would have had he been fortunate enough to have been elected governor for life and served out his full term.

If this measure is enacted Minnesota will have put herself on record as the first state to adopt a sensible, feasible system of establishing permanent and uniform highways within her borders.

The bill had many other able earnest advocates and supporters, but to Bob must be accorded the lion's share of credit for this achievement.

Bob began talking good roads before he left the "old sod," and he has been talking them ever since, in season and out of season, in three different languages, Irish, lumberjack and profanity. He talked good roads when he had to talk to himself, for he could get nobody to listen to him. He has worked for good roads in the daytime and dreamed about them through all the night long, and now that he has achieved the desire of his heart, surely no one will begrudge the grumpy, grumpy old warrior his hour of triumph.

Manicuring the Bull.

The feet of a bull demand more or less attention, especially if he is rather closely confined and getting a liberal supply of grain. The feet should be trimmed so that the animal always has the proper use of them. Some bulls are so easily handled as a gentle horse, and their feet can be trimmed without the slightest difficulty. However, this is rather the exception than the rule. The most satisfactory way is to put the animal in stocks and raise it off its feet. Then by stripping the foot to be trimmed so that it is as broad as the sole will be facing upward the operation can be executed with pinners and chisel in a few minutes. Care should be taken to avoid cutting too deep or into the sensitive part of the foot, as this would be very likely to cause bleeding and lameness.—Professor F. C. Minkler, New Jersey.

APPLE SHOW A GREAT SUCCESS

A Praiseworthy and Creditable Exposition in Every Respect

ILLUSTRATED UP-TO-DATE METHODS

Will Stimulate Fruit Growers to Still Greater Efforts

Show Accomplished all That Was Expected—It Deserves Warmest Praises to Promoters.

Saturday closed the Michigan Apple Show in Grand Rapids. In every respect it was a praiseworthy and creditable exposition. It demonstrated the wonderful resources of Michigan in fruit culture. It illustrated the progressive methods of up-to-date farming. There were demonstrations of the care of fruit in process of development, and what was equally important, packing and grading. It offered opportunities for the exchange of valuable ideas and illustrations of methods as well exploitation of numerous theories in connection with fruit culture. The show accomplished all that was intended for it and possibly more. It exceeded the anticipations of the most sanguine and caused the greatest of the Michigan fruit grower to justly swell with pride. The fruit grower is entitled to all the satisfaction he acquired at the show and there is no doubt that aside from the advertising gained by this exposition it will stimulate the fruit growers of the state to still greater efforts to excel and thereby strengthen the demand and prices in the great markets.

While this show accomplished all that was expected and more, the development associations of the state can go still further. Michigan is seeking reliable and industrious farmers from other states. Many are already looking this way. The Grand Rapids show attracted the attention of experts, possibly a number from other states were there, who will see the advantage of Michigan's opportunities and will profit thereby. It must be recognized, however, that other states are seeking settlers the same as this state, and they are adopting every possible means to bring their resources to public attention. Now that we have made a show of strictly Michigan fruit products within the borders of our own state, it would be a good plan to invade other states. If a systematic plan of exploitation and demonstration should be made in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and other states, much good would be accomplished. We would be taking the results of our resources direct to the threshold of those seeking investment and new fields of endeavor. This suggestion is not in disparagement whatever of the Grand Rapids effort. On the contrary the Michigan Apple Show has been an important step toward the end which has been sought. It was a great show and deserves the warmest praise, but practical advertising in localities where farmers are seeking better opportunities, would bring direct and profitable results.

No better program could have been prepared for a meeting of this kind than that which was furnished by the promoters of the show. Each day lectures and demonstrations were given, stating how and where the young trees should be planted and how to care for them, also experts were present and showed how the fruit should be packed for the market. Not only were the many features in the care of fruit trees and apples talked upon, but all farm products and their care were freely discussed by men well versed in their care, and their points brought out by stereopticon views. Gov. Chase S. Osborn was the big figure at the show Thursday, and his speech was another feat of versatility. It was a marvelous speech and showed his knowledge of the apple and the best methods of growing it. He also urged everybody to take an interest in the growing of the apple, the "king of fruits today."

The prize box of apples was bought by Benjamin Newhall, an expert fruit man of Chicago, who paid the fancy price of $25 for it. Think of it! Apples at 15 cents apiece. The balance of the apples placed on exhibition amounting to between 600 and 700 bushels were sold to a Grand Rapids dry goods merchant for $1.75 per box.

One of the best features of the show was the willingness of the specialists in charge to answer all questions that were put to them, and as they were all trained men, their answers were worth while to the questioner.

NOTICE TO CANDIDATES

Regarding Methods Used in Obtaining Merchants' Coupons

Get Coupons at Time Purchase is Made—Some Friendly Advice.

Complaints have been made at this office by several merchants giving piano contest coupons, regarding the methods used by candidates in obtaining coupons. In some cases it is stated that candidates stand about the store and make themselves obnoxious by asking customers to get the coupons for them, while others complain that candidates, having heard of people making purchases, go to them and either get the purchase to go back and get the coupons, or obtain their consent to go to the store where the purchase had been made, and themselves get the coupons. In some of the stores this matter has reached a stage where something must be done to stop it.

Now, candidates, we ask you to use a little common sense in your methods of securing these coupons. Don't hang around the stores and make every customer feel that he is a friend of yours and is helping you in the contest, he will save the coupons and help you in every possible way. Also if a purchase has been made, and coupons not asked for, the deal is closed. The merchants will in every case give coupons when asked at the time the purchase is made, but are under no obligations to give them afterwards if asked for. Urge your friends to ask for the coupons at the time the purchase is made, and if they fail to do this, remind them of the fact that by securing them it would help you and to get them next time, but by no means chase back to the merchant and ask for them yourself. If you do you will undoubtedly be refused hereafter.

The Courier sincerely hopes there will be no more complaints regarding this matter.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

Crops Throughout the State Show Fair Acreage.

The condition of wheat as compared with an average year, is in the State and Upper Peninsula 90, in the southern counties 87, in the central counties 93, and in the northern counties 91.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in October at 123 flouring mills is 251,052, and at 143 elevators and to grain dealers 320,944, or a total of 571,996 bushels. Of this amount 392,774 were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 145,465 in the central counties and 33,757 in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the three months, August-October, is 5,000,000. Seventy-seven mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in October.

Corn.—The estimated average yield of corn in bushels is 32 in the state, 33 in the southern counties, 31 in the central counties, 30 in the northern counties and 37 in the Upper Peninsula.

Clover Seed.—The per cent. of acreage of clover seed harvested as compared with average years, is 104 in the state and northern counties, 61 in the southern counties, 60 in the central counties and 91 in the

PIANO MAKES A HIT

Ballot Box Will Close for Count on November 17th, When $15 in Gold Will be Awarded.

Note—Change in Time Ballot Box Closes

No one has any idea as to who the winners will be. It's entirely up to the ladies and their friends. We know that every lady in this community who does not possess a piano wants one. It is up to these girls and the people of Charlevoix and vicinity as to which one shall win this beautiful piano. Or if some lady who has been holding back a little shall come forward with a batch of votes that will win. The way to guard against this is to keep right on with your work, and a way to accomplish it is to keep what you friends will do for you. This piano is worth working for. Furthermore we know that not one of these ladies wants it to be given her. She wants to know why it should be hers and that she earned it by helping the Courier is one of the best reasons in the world why she should have it. No one can question its title, it will stand as a monument to the skill and ability of the girl who went after the votes and got them, who studied how to make every chance count, who left no stone unturned to interest the people in her desire to get the piano. It is not clarity that you ask of your friends, it is the expression of their good will. No one shall pay out money for which they do not get value received. It is a mere matter of getting trade for the local merchants and boosting the circulation of the Courier for the benefit of those who should take it.

Keep right at work and don't be deterred by the feeling that you have done enough. Remember that while the lure was taking a nap, being so far ahead of the tortoise he lost the race.

Be ready for the next count, Friday, November 17, at 12:30. In our issue of November 1, we stated that the ballot box would close at 7:30 p. m. Since then matters have so shaped themselves that the ballot box will be closed at 1:30 p. m. instead of 7:30 p. m., allowing the judges to work during the afternoon instead of late into the evening. Remember this change of time and get your ballots in early, before it is closed. W. J. Rachow, Upper Peninsula.—The average yield per acre in bushels is 1.43 in the state, 1.29 in the southern counties, 1.68 in the central counties, 1.64 in the northern counties and 2.09 in the Upper Peninsula.

Potatoes.—The estimated average yield per acre, in bushels is 92 in the state, 81 in the southern counties, 87 in the central counties, 105 in the northern counties and 128 in the Upper Peninsula.

Commercial Fertilizers.—The per cent. of farmers who have used commercial fertilizers on their wheat this fall, is 19 in the state, 27 in the southern counties, 20 in the central counties, 1 in the northern counties and 1 in the Upper Peninsula.

Live Stock.—The average condition in the state of horses, cattle and swine is 91 and sheep 95.

MONEY IN POTATOES

Good Prices Have Been Paid Throughout Season

Indications Point That Price Will Stay Where It Is Now.

This is one of the years when the western Michigan farmer has occasion to rejoice, as the price of potatoes is higher now than at the same time in several years, and the indications are that it will stay around the present mark for some time to come. The high figure realized for this important crop in this section is a great benefit to all the business industries, as the towns are dependent upon the agricultural industries for their support, and when the crop is good and the prices high there is plenty of money in circulation and everybody is benefited by the business that results. In many instances this year the profits from the potato crop has been sufficient to pay the original cost of the farms on which they have been raised, with a good balance to spare, which goes to prove that potato growing is not becoming as a bad number in this region for some time to come.

The majority of the tubers that are brought at present are being stored in the hopes that the price will take a more decided trend this coming winter, and at the present time there is good reason for believing that these expectations will be fulfilled. Buyers all over the country are anxious to secure a quantity of good stock and the price paid runs from 50 cents in the southern part of the state, to 75 and 80 cents in the northern counties.

WATER MAIN BROKEN

Barge Cadillac Heavily Loaded Breaks Pipe Under Bridge.

Last Saturday morning, about four o'clock, as the iron ore barge Cadillac was coming into the harbor, it struck the water main and since that time the north side has been receiving its water supply by hose being stretched across the river.

The couplings were found broken, causing a delay by having to send for new ones, and the weather has been a great drawback also.

Submarine diver, S. M. Rose, is doing the work, and though it is very uncertain when it will be completed, he will do his best, with the weather permitting.

F. N. Chapel & Co. have just received a fine new line of framed and unframed pictures, which are now on exhibition in their display windows. The line deserves special mention and the public is extended a cordial invitation to visit the store and inspect the line throughout.

ANNUAL RECEPTION

Held by W. C. T. U. at Home of Mrs. P. D. Campbell.

Entertained Pastors, Teachers, School Board and Normal Class.

The W. C. T. U. meeting held at the home of Mrs. P. D. Campbell was a most interesting one, it being the annual reception to the pastors, teachers, school board and normal class. The business session was taken up and disposed of before the arrival of the teachers.

Miss Agnes Rodger, the reporting delegate to the late district convention of the W. C. T. U. field in East Jordan, gave a very interesting report of that meeting, which was received by a rising vote of thanks.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Jessie Himes, on the topic, "The Best Methods of Teaching the Nature and Effects of Narcotics and Alcohol."

The first number on the program was a violin solo by Miss Lillian Randall, one of the normal class, and was fine.

Children from the first, second, third, fourth and fifth grades, told of the effects of narcotics and alcohol on the human body, as taught in the School Physiology. By request a musical recital, "The Lost Chord," was given by Miss Diebel, accompanied by Miss Catton on the piano. This was a most excellent number.

The sixth, seventh and eighth grades then told of the effects of alcohol and narcotics, on the individual using these poisons. At the conclusion of the readings of these essays, the judges having been previously appointed for the purpose, retired, to confer as to who should receive the prizes.

The judges were Rev. E. M. Taylor, Miss Lombard and Miss Catton.

The Normal Class, sang "Sweet and Low," very nicely and Principals sang a little talk on "Conservation and How to Deal with Boys Who Use Tobacco." F. J. Meach, a member of the school board, gave a short talk also, advising women and the W. C. T. U. in particular to work for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in our midst, from now on till the first of April, when the question of Saloon or no Saloon is to again come up to be decided upon.

Rev. F. Dewey Eble gave a short talk on the observance of the Sabbath. The judges were ready to report, Rev. E. M. Taylor being spokesman. It was decided that Charlie Newkirk of the first division was worthy of the prize and Wilma Stevenson of the second division which consisted of 50 cents each. The were given the privilege of going to the store to spend the amount in any way they chose but were advised to get some good book.

At the conclusion of the program refreshments were served to these present, a very substantial supper indeed, consisting of rolls, brown bread, coffee, pickles, fruit salad.

MICHIGAN SWEEP

BY FIERCE STORM

Millions of Dollars Loss and Wide Devastation Reported.

DESTRUCTIVE CYCLONE AT OWOSSO

Large Factories in Ruins and Residences Demolished.

A Drop in Temperature from 68 Saturday to 210 Above Zero Monday Morning—People Unprepared for Cold Wave.

While Charlevoix has been visited by a severe electric storm, followed by a blizzard, the damage has been trifling compared with other sections. At Petoskey Saturday night occurred one of the most terrific rain storms, amounting almost to a cloud burst, and lasted fully an hour. In a little while everything was flooded and water was running over the streets to the depth of from four to six inches. Blinding flashes of lightning and crashing thunder were followed by the lights going out, leaving the city hall and numerous business places in total darkness. No. 302, the largest Pere Marquette locomotive coming up this end, while running to the stone crusher a few miles this side of Petoskey, crossed a serious washout, and stopped, about opposite the fair grounds. Upon investigation it was found that for about 12 feet the track was washed out, leaving a sheer drop of 20 feet down. Work was at once commenced and the engine taken to safety. When the night passenger train, which leaves this city about nine o'clock, arrived it was necessary to transfer the passengers around the wash. The greatest damage, however, was a washout on the Petoskey road near the fair grounds, fifty feet in all being washed out and several people had narrow escapes, while driving on the road during the night. In Charlevoix the storm came late in the evening and did no damage to speak of, although the sudden drop in temperature found many unprepared.

Saturday the temperature registered about 68 in the afternoon, but during the evening dropped and Monday morning registered but 10 above zero. Since then this section has experienced genuine winter weather, with no signs of letting up. At Owosso one of the most destructive storms ever in that section swept over the city and in five minutes of its greatest fury left a wake of from a quarter to half a mile wide of ruin, desolation and death.

Two lives were lost and about 25 persons are known to have been injured, and one or two may prove fatal. The property loss, while not accurately estimated, will exceed $500,000, with little or no storm insurance to compensate the losses.

The Estey Manufacturing Company's plant was almost totally destroyed, entailing a loss of about $150,000, while two other factories, the city laundry, implement store, a grocery store and about 20 houses were demolished. Hundred of residences were badly damaged, while two churches were torn and damaged to the extent of $4,000. A man named Corwin and his wife were killed while in bed in the upstairs of their home by a portion of the roof falling across them.

Thousands of dollars damage by wind and rain occurred in and near Marshall, while in other sections of the state the property loss will run well into the thousands. In marine circles the loss will be heavy, especially on Lake Erie and southern Michigan parts.

AUCTION SALES.

This week on page 8, the Courier publishes the sale of Fred Cooper, six and one-half miles south of Charlevoix, on Thursday, November 23, commencing at 1:00 o'clock p. m. W. E. Byers, auctioneer. F. A. A. Butler, clerk.

Every week illustrates that to successfully advertise an auction sale a newspaper must be used, and that the Courier is the paper to use in this section. Why? Because it covers the entire field and brings bidders from 10 to 20 miles. The greater the circulation, the better the paper for sale advertising.

CAUSE FOR ALARM

Loss of Appetite or Distress After Eating a Symptom That Should Not Be Disregarded.

Appetite is just a natural desire for food. Loss of appetite or stomach distress after eating indicate indigestion or dyspepsia. Over eating is a habit very dangerous to a person's good general health.

It is not what you eat but what you digest and assimilate that does you good. Some of the strongest, heaviest, and healthiest persons are moderate eaters.

There is nothing that will cause more trouble than a disordered stomach, and many people daily contract serious maladies simply through disregard or abuse of the stomach.

We urge all in Charlevoix who suffer from any stomach derangement, indigestion, or dyspepsia, whether acute or chronic, to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, with the distinct understanding that we will refund their money without question or formality, if after reasonable use of this medicine, they are not satisfied with results. We recommend them to our customers every day, and have yet to hear of any one who has not been benefited by them. We honestly believe them to be without equal. They give very prompt relief, aiding in neutralize the gastric juices, strengthen the digestive organs, to regulate the bowels, and thus to promote perfect nutrition, and eradicate all unhealthy symptoms.

We urge you to try a 25c box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, which gives 15 days treatment. At the end of that time, your money will be refunded to you if you are not satisfied. Of course in chronic cases length of treatment varies. For such cases, we have two larger sizes, which sell for 50c and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Saturday 11 is possible to write the date with the repetition six times of a single digit. It is the eleventh day of the eleventh month of the eleventh year and so one may save time and just put it down 11-11-11.

It will be a century before the same thing can be done on November 11, 2011, though on December 12 next year there will be a close approach to it with 12 12 12 as a correct presentation of the date.

Also default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed on the 25th day of August, A. D. 1901, by Clifford Papineau and Flora Papineau, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to John Dandard of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 24th, 1901, in Liber 33rd Mortgages, on page 425.

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due and unpaid on both of said mortgages at the date of this notice is the sum of $105.33 principal and interest, the sum of $125.33 and $125.33 respectively, and the further sum of $25.75 in taxes, and $25.00 interest on taxes paid by the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, and the further sum of $25.75 for insurance, and $25.00 interest on insurance paid by the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, and an attorney's fee of $20.00 as provided in said mortgages, and whereas, in default of payment of the above sum, the holder of said mortgages is authorized to proceed to recover the debt secured by said mortgages, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgages, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgages will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for said county is held, on the 20th day of December, A. D. 1911, at ten o'clock in the forenoon (standard time). Said premises are described as follows: Lot number twelve of block number thirteen of the original plat of said village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan.

Dated September 27, 1911.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY

REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D.D.

THE FINGER TIP MIRACLE.

Text. "When she heard of Jesus she came and touched his garment."—Matt.
ix, 21.

The world is given as a prize to those of faith. "Nothing venture nothing have." But she ventures nothing. Twilight, dark and storm tell it. "According to your faith," the size of your pitcher determines how much you may carry away. Rub your Aladdin's lamp. Murmur "Sesame."
Exercise your faith. Living next door the saint won't make one rich. "Ask and ye shall receive." Out from Matthew's house down to the seashore go the Master and his disciples. The crowds press, the sun is hot, but a cooling breeze blows in from Tiberias. There's a motion of the crowd, a craning of necks. Who comes? The ruler of the synagogue.
Tall, broad shouldered, black beard eyes wet with tears—it is Jairus.
Trouble brings him to Jesus. It is a great lodestone for most of us. "My little daughter is dying. Come lay thine hand on her head and she shall live." His prayer is short, intense, to the point. "Crisp thinking makes crisp speaking."

"Drowning Men Clutch at Straws."

In that crowd, with its dots and jerms, is a pale, bloodless, sick woman. Once comfortable in means the physician of Damseus and Tereus now have her all. Says a neighbor at her home: "Michael, God be praised! The Man of Nazareth is in Capernaum. He may have power to heal thee." "What will he charge?
I've lost all." "Nothing; without money and without price." Her child's protest. "Mother, multiply not thy disappointments; this healer may be ill the rest." "Restrain me not. I'll try once more." Faith springs eternal in the sick man's breast. That account much for many physicians and pauper medicines. This woman goes in faith.
She elbows through the crowd. "He forward is that woman! Think you not others desire to see the great Teacher?" She pays no attention.
When was a woman ever turned back her promise by the jeers of a crowd?
Now she's close. There's that great tunefulness of the symphony. It's famously sent for Christ. It must be to be rich like they. She had money once. Her thoughts are swift; what must be done must be done quickly.
She won't speak to the Nazarene, of course; only touch that blue hem of his garment. He will never know it.
Out goes the thin trembling arm from under her cloak and into the poor racked body, along the quivering prayer of that outstretched finger, went strength and healing. The most remarkable miracle recorded.

The Power of Helplessness.

If you want anything done that requires quiet, persistent faith start a woman at it. The courage and perseverance of women in the temperance war is marvelous. Rachel has got by faith what money couldn't buy. The Master turns. "Who touched me?" The disciples smile indelicately. "Some Master. How could they help it in such a fostling crowd?" Exquisitely sensitive Christ; The allied armies of hell can not divert him, but a sick, nerveless finger of human suffering turns him.
"Daughter!" She'll never forget that sound. It's the finest instance of delicacy and tact in the world's literature.
How it soothed her distressed modesty when she suddenly became conscious of the crowd's eyes upon her! "Daughter, thy faith, not my robe—thy faith made thee well." Say, brother of sorrow, sister of pain, reach out and touch him. No miracle cases puzzle him. Touch him. He'll respond.

"According to Your Faith"

The Bible is one constant challenge to us to exercise our faith. Of course
I believe in using material things, too.
bromide of potassium for insomnia, morphine for paroxysm of pain, quini-dine for fevers, strychnia for tonics—but I also believe there is marvelous healing power in the quietness and confidence of the mind touched by Christ.
Let the thoughtless leer, but the message of psychotherapeutics to the twentieth century is that the mind may minister to a body diseased. It may be possible to heal the body by a thought as well as a drug. It is the one doctrine of Christianity which we have persistently ignored.

If Christ said "Thy faith hath made thee well," why should we gaze in amazement at one who takes Christ at his word and maintains that after all faith may be a basis for health?
Strange that the spiritual church has had to wait for a material medical science to tell it what its Lord has been telling it for centuries.

The touch of faith will work a miracle. Thousands through the Master that eventful day, but the woman touched him with the power of faith and quick as an electric flash there thrilled back into her shattered nerves and shrunken veins and exhausted arteries and withered muscles, health beautiful, rosy, health, God given and complete. Talk of the complexity of creeds! A creed is a glittering lede before a blazing hearth when in the presence of this mighty truth. Some day when we ministers and our churches become more teachable when we lay aside our theological differences and our hollow sounding words, maybe the great Physician will once again give to his disciples not only the ministry of preaching, but the ministry of healing.

SMALL ENGINE, BIG HELP.

Performs Manifold Duties on Farm
From Spraying to Churning.

Aside from using the gasoline engine for pumping water the farmer must consider that it can be harnessed to a hose, with which he may sprinkle the lawn, flower beds, truck patch and garden, especially in case the weather turns extremely dry and hot.
One sprinkling at a critical period might save a whole season's work from being thrown away.

Its use as a sprayer for destroying pests in the poultry house can readily be seen, and as it is portable it can be used in applying fly repellent to live stock, spraying the potato patch and orchard trees. It can also be used to lay the disagreeable dust in the lots near the house and barn.

With the hose attachment the pump engine can be used in cleaning out filthy hog troughs and foul water tanks, and the muddy wagon and automobile can be more thoroughly and quickly cleaned off by it than by any other method, while the overworked housewife will find it a great labor saver, especially in scalding out the milk and cream cans after using it for churning butter.

A BIRD OF A ROOSTER.

Owner Refused $2,000 For Him at Madison Square Garden Show.

Some idea of the value of a well bred bird is derived from the fact that after exhibiting the champion Barred Plymouth Rock male at the Madison Square Garden show Mr. Bright, the owner, refused an offer of $2,000 for him. Questioned as to the truth of this report by the Country Gentleman, Mr. Bright said: "I was offered that sum sure enough and was rather startled myself—so much so that I was tempted to ask the one who made it with what kind of money he intended to pay me. I knew that it had taken me thirty years to produce this bird and that if I wished to continue to improve my stock I could not afford to part with him, so I refused the offer."

"I may have been foolish and I may not. At any rate, in eighteen months we sold $3,000 worth of birds and eggs produced by the yard of which this male was the head." Nine males, of which this one was the sire, sold for $100 each, and the eggs sold for $25 for thirteen.

TWO WHEEL FODDER RACK.

Easily Made at Home and Can Be Handled by One Man and Horse.

Here is a rack that is used for handling corn fodder, straw and many other things. Only two wheels are used.
These may be mowed wheels. They should be about one foot back of the center of the rack, so that the front end will stay down on runners. Here a hole through the 2 by 8 side pieces

WAGON BACK FOR FODDER.

for axle. To keep fodder from resting on wheels make two simple wheel houses, as illustrated.

This rack is low down and one man can load it easier than two can a high wheeled wagon. It is easy to pull, since the horses are hitched low and take weight off runners. For ordinary use no tongue is necessary, though it would be required if the rack were used on icy or steep hills.

hotter and quicker with less fuel than any stove of its size on the market. If you have not bought your heater or intend to replace your old style with a new one, you owe it to your pocketbook to see and examine this entirely new, novel and most practical Base Burners in the world. It will burn either Chestnut, Stove Coal or Crushed Coke. In all our Base Burner experience we never saw a stove so practical, so compact or so easy to handle or polish as the PARLOR RENOWN and we firmly believe it will do just what the men who make it say it will.

The Stove of the Future

It has a larger fire-pot than any other Base Burner on the market and a removable magazine, making it possible to do away with having to put up a small stove in the fall or spring, as by simply lifting out the magazine it makes as good a Wood Heater as any wood stove made and the price, $35.00 places it within reach of all who can not afford to pay a fancy price for a fancy stove that costs more to buy, more to heat the home and more to handle. Your old stove taken in exchange. Investigate this sizzler. If the stove don't heat your home to your entire satisfaction you can bring it back full of ashes.

6. INSTRUCTIONS.—Results as to standing of votes will be issued after 30 days. No votes accepted at less than regular price of paper concerned in this contest. No one connected with this paper will be allowed to become a candidate in this contest or work for contestants.

Votes after being voted cannot be transferred to another. Be sure you know whom you are going to vote for before coming to the ballot box, as the editor or anyone will positively not give you any information on the subject. The keys of the government ballot box shall be in possession of the awarding committee during the contest.

For the first thirty days the paper will run a 25 vote coupon which can be voted free for any lady contestant.

Contest to run not less than 30 days. Closing of contest will be announced 25 days in advance of closing. The right to postpone date of closing is reserved if sufficient cause should occur.

The contest shall close on a day which will be announced later. 10 days prior to closing contest, the judges will carefully lock or seal ballot box and take same to a bank, where the same will be in a place where voting can be done during business hours and locked in a vault at night until close of contest, when the judges will take charge and count same and announce the young ladies winning in their turn.

The last ten days all voting must be done in a sealed box at the bank. If you do not wish anyone to know whom you are voting for, place your cash for subscription together with your coupons in a sealed envelope which will be furnished you and put same in ballot box. This will give everyone a fair and square deal.

City, they had been unable to recuperate on the back trail. So the four men pulled on from Sixty Mile with a fresh team of dogs on Daylight's sled. The following night they camped in the cluster of islands at the mouth of the Stewart. Daylight talked town sites, and, though the others laughed at him, he staked the whole maze of high, wooded islands.

"Just supposing the big strike does come on the Stewart," he argued. "Mebbe you-all 'll be in on it, and then again mebbe you-all won't. But I sure will. You-all'd better reconsider and go in with me on it."

But they were stubborn.

"You're as bad as Harper and Joe Ladue," said Joe Hines. "They're always at that game. You know that big flat just below the Klondike and under Moosehide Mountain? Well, the recorder at Forty Mile was telling me they staked that not a month ago—The Harper & Ladue Town Site. Ha! Ha! Ha!"

Elijah and Finn joined in his laughter; but Daylight was gravely in earnest.

"There she is!" he cried. "The hunch is working! It's in the air, I tell you! What'd they-all stake the big flat for if they didn't get the hunch? Wish I'd staked it."

The regret in his voice was provocative of a second burst of laughter.

"Laugh, dang you, laugh! Why your eyes ain't open yet. You-all are a bunch of little mewling kittens. I tell you all if that strike comes on Klondike, Harper and Ladue will be millionaires. And if it comes on Stewart, you-all watch the Elam Harsh town site boom. In ten days, when you-all come around makin' poor mouths . . . He heaved a sigh of resignation. "Well, I suppose I'll have to give you-all a grub-stake or soup, or something or nther."

In the meantime there was naught to show for it but hunch. But it was coming. As he would stake his last ounce on a good poker hand, so he staked his life and effort on the hunch that the future held in store a big strike on the Upper River. So he and his three companions, with dogs and sleds, and snowshoes, tolled up the frozen breast of the Stewart, tolled on and on through the white wilderness where the unending stillness was never broken by the voices of men, the stroke of an ax, or the distant crack of a rifle. Gold they found on the bars, but not in paying quantities, and in the following May they returned to Sixty Mile.

Ten days later, Harper and Joe Ladue arrived at Sixty Mile, and Daylight, strong as he was, obeyed the hunch that had come to him, traded a third interest in his Stewart town site for a third interest in theirs on the Klondike. They had faith in the Upper Country, and Harper left down-stream, with a

Your Money Back if You are Not Satisfied with the Medicine We Recommend.

We are so positive that our remedy will permanently relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine at our expense should it fail to produce satisfactory results. It is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Laxatives or cathartics do much harm. They cause a reaction, irritate, and weaken the bowels and tend to make constipation more chronic. Besides, their use becomes a habit that is dangerous.

Constipation is caused by a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or descending colon. To expect permanent relief you must therefore tone up and strengthen these organs and restore them to healthier activity.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our recommendation. They are exceedingly pleasant to take, bring eaten like candy, and are ideal for children, delicate persons, and old folks, as well as for the robust. They act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels. They apparently have a neutral action on the other associate organs or glands. They do not purge, cause excessive looseness, nor create any inconvenience whatever. They may be taken at any time, day or night. They will positively relieve chronic or habitual constipation, if not of surgical variety, and the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, if taken with regularity for a reasonable length of time. 12 tablets, 10 cents; 20 tablets, 25 cents; 50 tablets, 50 cents. Sold in Charlevoix only at our store.

part-load of supplies, to start a snail post at the mouth of the Klondike.

"Why don't you tackle Indian River, Daylight?" Harper advised, at parting. "There's whole sinthers of crocks and draws draining in up there, and somewhere gold just crying to be found. That's my hunch. There's a big strike coming, and Indian River, ain't going to be a million miles away."

"And the place is swarming with moose," Joe Ladue added. "I've been there three years now, swearing something. He is going to happen, living off'n straight moose and prospecting around like a crazy man."

Daylight decided to go Indian River a flatter, as he expressed it; and lingered a few days longer arranging his meager outfit. He planned to go in light, carrying a pack of seventy-five pounds and making his five dogs pack as well, Indian fashion, loading them with thirty pounds each. Depending on the report of Ladue, he intended to follow Bob Henderson's example and live practically on straight meat.

When Jack Kearns' scow, laden with the sawmill from Lake Linderman, tied up at Sixty Mile, Daylight bundled his outfit and dogs on board, turned his town-site application over to Elijah to be filed, and the same day was landed at the mouth of Indian River. He continued down Hunker to the Klondike, and on to the summer fishing camp of the Indians on the Yukon.

Here for a day he camped with Carmack, a squaw-man, and his Indian brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, bought a boat, and, with his dogs on board, drifted down the Yukon to Forty Mile. Then it was that Carmack, his brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, and Cultus Charlie, another Indian, arrived in a canoe at Forty Mile, went straight to the gold commissioner, and recorded three claims and a discovery claim on Bonanza Creek. After that, in the Sourdough Saloon, that night, they exhibited coarse gold to the skeptical crowd. Daylight, too, was skeptical, and this despite his faith in the Upper Country. Had he not, only a few days before, seen Carmack loading with his Indians and with never a thought of prospecting? But at eleven that night, sitting on the edge of his bunk and unlacing his moccasins, a thought came to him. He put on his coat and hat and went back to the Sourdough. Carmack was still there, flashing his coarse gold in the eyes of an unbelieving generation. Daylight rained alongside of him and emptied Carmack's sack into a blower. This he studied for a long time. Then, from his own sack, into another blower, he emptied several ounces of Circle City and Forty Mile gold. Again, for a long time, he studied and compared. Finally, he pocketed his own gold, returned Carmack's, and held up his hand for silence.

"Boys, I want to tell you all something," he said. "She's sure come—the up-river strike. And I tell you all, clear and forcible, this is it. There ain't never been gold like that in a blower in this country before. It's new gold. It's got more silver in it."

"Who-all's Got Faith to Come Along With Me?"

You-all can see it by the color. Carmack's sure made a strike. Who-all's got faith to come along with me?"

No one volunteered.

"Then who-all 'll take a job from me, cash wages in advance, to pole up a thousand pounds of grub?"

Curly Parsons and another, Pat Monahan, accepted, and, with his customary speed, Daylight said, then their wages in advance and arranged the purchase of the supplies, though he emptied his sack to doing so. He was leaving the Sourdough, when, he suddenly turned back to the bar from the door.

"Got another hunch?" was the query.

"I sure have," he answered. "Flour's sure going to be worth what a man will pay for it this winter up on the Klondike. Who'll lend me some money?"

On the instant a score of the men who had declined to accompany him on the wild-goose chase were crowding about him with proffered gold-sacks.

"How much flour do you want?" asked the Alaska Commercial Company's storekeeper.

"About two tons."

The proffered gold-sacks were not withdrawn, though their owners were guilty of an outrageous burst of merriment.

"What are you going to do with two tons?" the storekeeper demanded.

"I'll tell you all in simple A, B, C and our, two, three," Daylight held up one finger and began checking off. "Hunch number one: a big strike coming in Upper Country. Hunch number two: Carmack's made it. Hunch number three: ain't no hunch at all. It's a cinch. If one and two is right, then flour just has to go sky-high. If I'm riding hunches one and two, I just got to ride this cinch, which is number three. If I'm right, flour 'll balance gold on the scales this winter."

HERE'S A RACING ROOSTER.

Little Driver's Father, L. O. Bonham, Says Light Brahmas Are Best.

"This picture will show you the kind of chickens we raise in Texas. Note the comparative size of the team and the driver. Joshua Bonham, and Feet, the rooster."

That is what L. O. Bonham of Johnson county, Tex., wrote when he sent the picture shown here to the Rural New Yorker. The bird is nearly as large as the baby. Many farmers shake their heads at Light Brahmas because they think such great fowls eat too much for what they give back. Mr. Bonham was asked to say why he thinks the Brahmas are best, and this is his answer:

How many study the surrounding conditions when selecting a breed of chickens? We have been growing the Light Brahmas for the past eleven years, and this is the reason why. Our chickens have the range of the orchard, berry patch, garden and vineyard, and to control them it is only necessary to have a portable two foot wire net fence, to move from place to place as necessary, and while they are good hunters they are not wild rangers. Some say they are too large, but when we go to market and one of them will bring as much as two of any other breeds you cannot object to that. If you put the eggs on the scales you will find that they laid as many pounds of eggs as the best, and they do most of their laying in the winter and spring, when eggs are a good price. They are the hardest chickens we have ever had, and they are just as fine at the table as any. They are the first fliers in the market in the spring; that is, if you have an incubator or some other hen to do the hatching, as they will not set until late in the spring, but will continue laying, and after all when you go to the show you will hear more comments of the Brahmas than any other breed; that is, from people that are not interested in special breeds.

CIDER NEEDS NO CHEMICALS

Careful Heating, Sterilizing and Corking All Is Necessary.

The keeping sweet of cider and other fruit juices without resorting to the use of chemicals is a simple process, and can be done by any one who understands canning fruit.

The cider is heated in soon as extracted to a temperature of about 200 degrees, or until it begins to simmer, but does not boil. It may be put into bottles or jars and sealed at once, but a much better way is to allow it to stand for two or four hours and pour off and filter through a flannel cloth then reheat to the same temperature and seal.

When the juice or cider is put into the bottles which should be sterilized by rinsing out with boiling water, the corks should be put in and the stopper sealed with sealing wax or paraffin. It will keep indefinitely, and may be put to a great variety of uses.

Blood Meal Not Popular.

Few dairymen feed dried blood to their milk cows. Sensitive persons revolt against the idea of feeding blood meal. And yet it contains nearly twice as much protein as cottonseed meal or oil meal and is just about as effective as a milk producer.

It has been more customary to use blood meal as a hog feed than as a feed for cattle. It comes us as by-product from the packing house and when fed to hogs is mixed with corn. It has been shown by station tests that cottonseed meal is somewhat cheaper as a milk producer than blood meal.

HEARD IN CHARLEVOIX

Bad Backs Made Strong Kidney Pills Corrected.

All over Charlevoix you hear it. Doan's Kidney Pills are keeping up the good work, curing weak kidneys, driving away backache, correcting urinary ills. Charlevoix people are telling about it—telling of bad backs made sound again. You can believe the testimony of your own townspeople. They tell it for the benefit of you who are suffering. If your back aches, if you feel lame, sore and miserable, if the kidneys act too frequently, or passages are painful, scanty, and off color, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that has helped so many of your friends and neighbors. Follow this Charlevoix citizen's advice and give Doan's a chance to do the same for you.

Mrs. W. L. Cowan, 211 Clinton St., Charlevoix, Mich., says: "I do not hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for I have derived very good results from their use. I was subject to a severe backache and pains in my kidneys and also annoyed by kidney irregularities. I used Doan's Kidney Pills procured at the Ivy Drug Store and they brought me great relief."

ONE MAN'S WORK FOR GOOD ROADS

Doctor Showed People Benefits of Dragging

FARMERS CO-OPERATED IN PLAN

McCaskey's Work So Surprising in Its Effectiveness That Road Dragging Has Become a Steady Fixture in Lancaster County, Pa.—Culverts Used For Drainage

In East Lampeter township, Lancaster county, Pa., the use of the road drag has been more general perhaps than in any other township in Pennsylvania, says the National Stockman and Farmer. Several years ago Dr. Donald McCaskey heard Hon. Philip Gibson of Williamsport, Pa., tell about the merits of the drag. Mr. Gibson having heard D. Ward King, the drag enthusiast, lecture on this subject and having followed Mr. King's advice Dr. McCaskey began to drag a road in his neighborhood which was practically impassable.

Although he had the consent of a majority of the supervising board he was later forbidden to continue the work, but he carried the case to court and had the copy of the proceedings published and circulated all over the township. This stimulated a great deal of interest in dragged roads.

Dr. McCaskey became a candidate for supervisor and was elected. With the co-operation of farmers to his locality he began a systematic use of the road drag on the roads under his jurisdiction. Farmers were employed to drag the roads contiguous to their own land, payment being made at the rate of 40 cents per hour.

The result of this effort is that East Lampeter township has some of the best dirt roads in the country. Best described roads which now appear to be in the condition as formerly practically impassable a part of the year. Corrugated iron culverts are used for drainage. Stones have been removed from the roads and the gutters are kept clear of obstructions. At the same time the roads are in good condition well crowned and consequently well drained.

The surface is hard and readily sheds water where the road has been dragged for any length of time. A few of the roads lack a solid surface, this having been their first year under the drag. A road scraper is used at the beginning of operations to shape up the road, but is never used to work it. All the dirt that is moved toward the middle of the road is put there little by little by the use of the King drag.

After two years of road dragging East Lampeter township finds that it has roads infinitely superior to the best it could produce under the old system, at an estimated cost of $12 a mile a year for dragging. The average cost of hauling stones for the roads in Lancaster county is about $40 a mile.

SOFT SNAPS NOT NUMEROUS.

There are no soft snaps about farm life or any other kind of life if a man wants to win. And the man who sets out to find any such thing will come out worse than he went in and make a miserable failure of living. Business is business on the farm as well as elsewhere. And why should it not be?

Use Various Lubricants.

Where the pressure is heavy the lubricant should be thick in order to resist being squeezed out under the load. For light pressures oil should be used. Thus for a wagon heavy grease is best, while for a cream separator of high speed a thin oil is necessary in order that its viscosity will not add to the friction. Solid substances in a finely divided state, such as graphite, are often used effectively to reduce friction.

ANNUAL SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Meeting Held at Court House Last Wednesday

THE NEW SCHOOL LAWS DISCUSSED

Under New Law Legal Holidays are Limited to Six

School Censuses Must Be Taken Fifteen Days Previous to June 1—Other Interesting Points Brought Out.

The Annual School of Instruction for school officers was held here last Wednesday, conducted by Superintendent of Public Instruction, Luther L. Wright and G. S. Lasher, both of Lansing, and County Commissioner J. H. Milford.

The forenoon was taken up with the discussion of the new school laws passed by the last meeting of the legislature. The most important changes in these laws was the limiting of legal holidays to New Year, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

School censuses now must be taken the first fifteen days previous to June 1, and must be a house to house canvass.

The people attending the meeting may select a depository in which a treasurer is compelled to place all district money under the direction of the school board, provided the bank selected gives the district a sufficient bond. In case of this the treasurer and personal bondsmen are released from all liability in case the bank should fail.

Under amended free tuition laws a district can pay money for tuition only to a legal high school or a legal ten grade school. This law defines a high school as a graded one, giving twelve grades of work and having at least two teachers to devote their time to teaching the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th grades.

To case a student desires to attend a ten grade school, the district must pay tuition, providing this school is a graded school and employs one teacher giving her time to 9th and 10th grades. Such districts need not pay tuition for its children until past the 10th grade. Those eligible to receive this tuition are children who have passed the 8th grade county examination or have passed the 8th grade work in a graded school, this to be certified by the principal, or applied to the tuition law of 1909.

Written applications must be made to the board on or before the fourth Monday in June and tuition is to be paid to only one of the three nearest the high school. The board cannot pay more than $20.00 a year for each student.

An amendment to the compulsory law provides for complete authority by the committee and trust officer over on-house of the district.

Perhaps a most startling point of law discussed was the power given by the last legislature to the district board and the fact that the people have been practically shorn, not only of their discretionary powers, but of their taxing privileges as well.

Under the present law the district board, and not the people at the annual district meeting, decide how much money is to be raised by taxes for maintaining a school.

The board has all power to employ as many teachers as advisable, pay salaries according to worth and make any improvements on buildings and grounds, supply any furnishings or equipments necessary for the school, build wood-sheds, out-houses, install heating plant, and in fact supply anything that it may deem desirable, without asking

NOTICE TO CANDIDATES.

Candidates and workers for candidates, in the Courier's voting contest are not authorized to issue receipts for subscriptions, signed by the Courier. As fast as the money is turned into the office, receipts will be mailed to subscribers. Candidates will be furnished with receipt books and will issue receipts in their own name. Candidates are requested to turn in subscriptions weekly.

the people for their approval, and may do so against their objections. A vote of the people is only necessary when the question of a new school house, buying sites or paying tuition in excess of $20.00 a year is considered.

Supt. Wright very effectively urged the desirability of the township unit system, which does not, as many believe, mean a consolidated school in the township, but means that one board elected at large, conducts all schools in the township.

He also presented new ideas in teaching which called for oral instruction in arithmetic and language, with no use of text books until the student is ready for the 7th grade.

Mr. Lasher talked on the school officer's power to make schools attractive and its benefit to both the teachers and the students. He also urged a selection of proper books for the library to be supplied by the board, as this forms a good habit and a taste for the best in later life.

He made a plea to get good teachers and then stand by them, giving them a chance to do their best and by doing this the teacher will be encouraged and will be willing to work harder.

No school officer can do work for the district, furnish any supplies or enter into any contract of which the district is a part, without being liable to fine and imprisonment.

The meeting adjourned, all feeling better that they attended and look forward to the meeting in 1912.

DISASTROUS FIRE

Blacksmith Shop and Implement Store Guttered by Fire

J. S. Baker Suffers Loss of $6,000 Partially Covered by Insurance.

Last Saturday evening about 10:30 o'clock fire was discovered in the blacksmith shop and general implement store of J. S. Baker on Clinton street, just back of the County Bank building. After the fire was first discovered it was but a few minutes before the whole south end of the building was a mass of flames, which, fanned by the high north wind, soon gutted the entire structure. The fire department responded promptly but the fire had gained such headway little could be done other than protect adjoining property.

The entire loss is estimated to be about $6,500. Insurance will cover about $4,000 of the loss, as Mr. Baker carried $1,000 insurance on the building, $250 on the tools, $250 on the blacksmith stock and the remainder on implements.

Mr. Baker is now fixing up the back part of the main building so as to continue blacksmithing and repair work, but is as yet undecided as to rebuilding the entire shop.

This was the worse fire Charlevoix has had in long time, and but for the good work of our firemen, other buildings would have been destroyed.

To show his appreciation of the efforts of the firemen, Mr. Baker gave them an oyster supper.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

VANVALKENBURG-BACON

Prominent Young Boyne City People Unite in Wedding.

Married at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. H. L. Willson, at 508 E. Division street, Boyne City, at 4:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon, by the Rev. J. M. Gleason, Mr. William J. Vanvalkenburg and Miss Bernice Bacon, both of Boyne City. The wedding was a quiet affair, there being no invited guests. The bride was tastefully gowned in light blue and the ceremony was followed by a bountiful repast served by Mrs. Willson. The contracting parties are well known in Boyne City, and their many friends wish for them a long and happy life and the health and prosperity that should be measured to all good citizens.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The loving and merciful God has vouchsafed benediction upon the people of Michigan during the year nineteen hundred eleven, now rapidly drawing to its close. The elements, in their devastations, have made visitation, but the loss of human life has been small as a result. Vital statistics show a decrease in death tolls. From the soil has come to those who till it and those who must be fed, a reward of more than that which is barely sufficient. The state is free from famine, contagion and abnormal lawlessness. Human life is held sacred, homes are inviolate and property is safe. A condition obtains for which our people should be profoundly thankful.

Observation of Thanksgiving Day may be festive, but it is the duty of every individual to give thanks unto God. This should not be merely lip service, but should touch the recesses of the heart and the deepest cisterns of the soul. Man is recreant and a coward who thanklessly accepts Divine blessings in strength, happiness and prosperity and only turns to God in weakness, misfortune and extremity. A meaningful way to celebrate Thanksgiving would be to make a contribution, if only of a penny, to some Christian church. These institutions of God should be remembered wholesomely in the glory of our best days, so that when the tottering eventide arrives there shall be that comfort which shall cure fear and trembling.

Therefore, in consideration of the blessings of Almighty God, so bountifully visited upon the people of Michigan, I Chase S. Osborn, governor of the State of Michigan, do appoint and set aside Thursday, November thirtieth, as a day of prayer, feasting and thanksgiving.

Given under my hand and the great Seal of the State, this thirtieth day of October, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand, nine hundred and eleven, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-fifth.

By the Governor:
FREDERICK C. MARTINDALE,
Secretary of State.

CHASE S. OSBORN.

THE SECOND COUNT

Mrs. Lee Smith Makes Greatest Gains With Edith Adams a Close Second—Final Count December 15.

Did they work? Well, I should say they did! Who? Why, Mrs. Lee Smith and Miss Edith Adams. That is why and how they won the special prize of $15 in gold offered by The Courier in its voting contest for the greatest gains of votes between the first and second counts.

Miss Adams did not take much interest in the contest at first and only made up her mind a few days before the second count that she really wanted the piano. Then she went out among her friends and solicited their aid, and the result of Friday's count shows that she had some results. Others can do equally well, if they will hustle. But THEY MUST HUSTLE. Are the prizes not worthy of the efforts? Would anyone refuse a $400 Obermeyer?

Mrs. Smith obtained 241,325 votes since the first count. Miss Adams was second with a gain of 215,350 votes. Mrs. Webster was third with 40,458 votes.

The piano has arrived and is now on display at S. M. See & Sons furniture store, where all may see it. Go in and play on it.

While the lead of Mrs. Smith may look as big as the rock of Gibraltar to those who sit by and expect their friends to do the work for them, it is a small matter to those who will get out and hustle and let their friends know they have a desire to win the big prize. Someone has to win the piano and the smaller prizes. Why not you? Hustling is the only way to gain the coveted goal. The final count will take place Friday, December 15, at 7:30 p. m., at some place which will be announced later.

The bonus for seven subscriptions will remain the same for this count as before, with the exception of merchants coupons, which is raised to 1000 on every 40, voted at one time.

For every seven new subscriptions 10,000 extra votes, making a total of 14,200 votes. For every seven renewal subscriptions 8,000 extra votes making a total of 11,200 votes. For every seven back subscriptions 6,000 extra votes making 8,800 votes. For every 40 merchants coupons brought to this office and counted we will give a bonus of 1,000 extra votes thus making a total of 2,000 votes. These coupons may be collected from any and all merchants who are in the contest.

The first, second and total counts to date are as follows:

SECOND COUNT.

Mrs. Lee Smith.....	241,325
Edith Adams.....	215,350
Mrs. Amos Webster.....	40,458
Faye Wagner.....	11,575
Mrs. Sam Straw.....	5,950
Annie Willis.....	5,625

Nellie Matchett.....	1,775
Ethel Shapton.....	1,650
Mrs. Dell Dutcher.....	1,400
Hattie Hamlin.....	750
Edna Strigley.....	150

The following is the standing of each candidate, including both counts:

Mrs. Lee Smith.....	250,650
Edith Adams.....	240,925
Mrs. Amos Webster.....	50,473
Faye Wagner.....	23,850
Annie Madill.....	20,825
Mrs. Sam Straw.....	13,725
Annie Willis.....	5,675
Nellie Matchett.....	4,825
Marguerite Price.....	4,800
Annie Driggett.....	4,600
Fannie Knudsen.....	4,425
Ethel Shapton.....	3,325
Ida Felling.....	3,225
Mrs. Dell Dutcher.....	2,950
Lorraine Washburn.....	2,725
Leah Genett.....	1,950
Edna Strigley.....	1,100
Hattie Hamlin.....	800

The balance of the candidates made no gains over the first count.

TWO WERE KILLED

Bad Accident on the Pere Marquette Near Petoskey.

Fireman and Brakeman Killed While Engine Was Badly Damaged.

Philip H. Toby of Traverse City, a fireman on the Pere Marquette, and H. H. Hartman of Muskegon, brakeman on the same train, received injuries in a collision at Petoskey, Thursday, from which both died on the operating table at the Petoskey hospital shortly afterward.

The men were members of a train crew who were switching cars in yards at the Petoskey Stone company, both were riding on the engine when in some unaccountable manner the engine was run beneath the crusher, which being too low, stripped it of everything above the boiler, injuring and sending the two men and breaking the engine into a tangled mass of iron.

Toby was caught between the cross head and reverse lever, where he was held and scalded. Both were married men with families.

The Christian Science Society, VanPelt Hall, will hold a Thanksgiving Service, Thursday, November 30, at 10:45 a. m. All are cordially invited to attend.

SAFE ROBBERED

Tavern at Central Lake Touched For Sixty or Seventy Dollars.

It has just leaked out that on October 20, the safe at the Tavern at Central Lake, had been robbed of between $50 and $70. The matter had been kept quiet so that the authorities could investigate the matter before it became generally known, but as no developments have occurred the story was let out.

At the time of the robbery the combination of the safe was not turned, and the proprietor of the Tavern owned two keys to the cash box in the safe.

The day before the robbery he noticed one of these keys was missing from the ring, but paid no further attention to it. He came down to the office on the morning of the robbery and noticed the dial on the safe stood on the number that opened the safe, and was not where he had set it the night before. When he opened the safe he found the inner door unlocked and all the money gone with the exception of some small change.

Up to now nothing has turned up to show the identity of the guilty party, and it looks as if the thief has made a clean getaway.

Feather Party.

METCALF-McCARTNEY

Two Prominent Charlevoix Young People Unite in Wedding.

Both Participants Have Lived Here All Their Lives and are Well Known.

Tonight at 8:00 o'clock occurred the wedding of Miss Annie McCartney and Frank Metcalf, both of this city, at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. W. H. McCartney on Park avenue.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Taylor and took place in the large window overlooking Lake Michigan, the decorations being sunflowers and crysanthemums. The wedding was a quiet affair only the immediate relatives of the two families attending.

Both participants have lived here all their lives, Miss McCartney having for many years assisted in the public affairs of our city, while working in different offices, and Mr. Metcalf is one of our prominent business men. The wedding is the outcome of a childhood romance.

The out-of-town guests were Mrs. Cloe Fox and three children, and Mrs. George McCartney of Iron Mountain.

They have a host of friends who join in wishing them many years of wedded happiness and success. They will be at home at 221 Park avenue.

ON TEMPERANCE QUESTION

Miss Margaret Bilz Will Speak at M. E. Church Sunday.

Miss Margaret Bilz of Spring Lake, Michigan, National W. C. T. U. Worker, who has been delegate to international conventions, will speak at the M. E. church next Sunday evening. Miss Bilz is a most interesting speaker and anyone may consider it a privilege to hear her. All members of the W. C. T. U. and others interested in the temperance work are invited to meet at the home of Mrs. Richard Lewis Saturday at 3:30 p. m. Miss Bilz will address this meeting which will be followed by a pot-luck supper.

Shooting Accident.

Guy Davis, a 13 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Davis of Manicella, met with a very painful accident while hunting last Sunday. He went out with a couple of other boys to hunt squirrels and while stopping to rest set the butt of the gun on the ground and placed his hand over the muzzle. In some way the gun was discharged and the fore finger of his left hand badly lacerated. He is now doing nicely at the Lockwood hospital Petoskey.

The talk of the day, a Minstrel in two parts Friday, at the Majestic.

CHAPTER V.

Still men were without faith in the strike. When Daylight, with his heavy outfit of flour, arrived at the mouth of the Klondike, he found the big flat as desolate and tenantless as ever. Down close by the river, Chief Isaac and his Indians were camped beside the frames on which they were drying salmon. Several old-timers were also in camp there. Having finished their summer work on Ten Mile Creek, they had come down the Yukon, bound for Circle City. But at Sixty Mile they had learned of the strike, and stopped off to look over the ground. They had just returned to their boat when Daylight landed his flour, and their report was pessimistic. But an hour later, at his own camp, Joe Ladue atoned in from Bonanza Creek. He led Daylight away from the camp and men and told him things in confidence. "She's sure there," he said in conclusion. "I didn't sluice it, or cradle it. I panned it, all in that sack, yesterday, on the rim-rock. I tell you, you can shake it out of the grass-roots. And what's on the bed-rock down in the bottom of the creek they ain't no way of tellin'. But she's big, I tell you, big. Keep it quiet, and locate all you can. It's in spots, but I wouldn't be none surprised if some of them claims yielded as high as fifty thousand. The only trouble is that it's spotted."

A month passed by, and Bonanza Creek remained quiet. A sprinkling of men had staked; but most of them, after staking, had gone on down to Forty Mile and Circle City. The few that possessed sufficient faith to remain were busy building log cabins against the coming of winter. Carmack and his Indian relatives were occupied in building a sluice box and getting a head of water. The work was slow, for they had to saw their lumber by hand from the standing forest. But farther down Bonanza were four men who had drifted in from up river, Dan McGilvary, Dave McKay, Dave Edwards, and Harry Waugh. They were a quiet party, neither asking nor giving confidences, and they herded by themselves. But Daylight, who had panned the spotted rim of Carmack's claim and shaken coarse gold from the grass-roots, and who had panned the rim at a hundred other places up and down the length of the creek and found nothing, was curious to know what lay on bed-rock. He had noted the four quiet men sinking a shaft close by the stream, and he had heard their whipsaw going as they moved lumber for the sluice boxes. He did not wait for an invitation, but he was present the first day they sluiced. And at the end of five hours' shoveling for one man, he saw them take out thirteen ounces and a half of gold. It was coarse gold, running from pinheads to a twelve-dollar nugget, and it had come from off bed-rock. The first fall snow was flying that day, and the Arctic winter was closing down; but Daylight had no eyes for the bleak-gray sadness of the dying, short-lived summer. He saw his vision coming true, and on the big flat was upreared anew his golden city of the snows. Gold had been found on bed-rock. That was the big thing. Carmack's strike was assured. Daylight staked a claim in his own name adjoining three he had purchased with plug tobacco. This gave him a block two thousand feet long and extending in width from rim-rock to rim-rock.

Returning that night to his camp at the mouth of Klondike, he found in it Kama, the Indian chief he had left at Dyea. Kama was traveling by canoe, bringing in the last mail of the year. In his possession was some two hundred dollars in gold-dust, which Daylight immediately horrowed. In return, he arranged to stake a claim for him, which he was to record when he passed through Forty Mile. When Kama departed next morning, he carried a number of letters for Daylight, addressed to all the old-timers down river, in which they were urged to come up immediately and stake. Also Kama carried letters of similar import, given him by the other men on Bonanza.

"It will sure be the gosh-dangdest stampede that ever was," Daylight chuckled, as he tried to vision the excited populations of Forty Mile and Circle City tumbling into polling-hunts and racing the hundreds of miles up the Yukon; for he knew that his word would be unquestioningly accepted. One day in December Daylight filled a pan from bed-rock on his own claim and carried it into his cabin. Here a fire burned and enabled him to keep water unfrozen in a canvas tank. He squatted over the tank and began to wash. Earth and gravel seemed to fill the pan. As he imparted to it a circular movement, the lighter, coarser particles washed out over the edge. At times he combed the surface with his fingers, raking out handfuls of gravel. The contents of the pan diminished. At last drew near to the bottom, for the purpose of feeling and tentative examination, he gave the pan a sudden sloshing movement, just above Carmack's Discovery claim. Even Daylight disliked the looks of Eldorado; but, still riding his hunch, he bought a half share in one claim on it for half a sack of flour. A month later he paid eight hundred dollars for the adjoining claim. Three months later, enlarging this block of property, he paid forty thousand for a third claim, and, though it was concealed in the future, he was destined, not long after, to pay one hundred and fifty thousand for a fourth claim on the creek that had been the least liked of all the creeks.

The Whole Bottom Showed as if Covered With Butter.

In the meantime, and from the day he washed seven hundred dollars from a single pan, and squatted over it and thought a long thought, he never again touched hand to pick and shovel. As he sold to Joe Ladue the night of that wonderful washing:

"Joe, I ain't never going to work hard again. Here's where I begin to use my brains. I'm going to farm gold. Gold will grow gold if you all have the savvy and can get hold of some for seed. When I seen them seven hundred dollars in the bottom of the pan, I knew I had seed at last."

The hero of the Yukon in the younger days before the Carmack strike, Burning Daylight now became the hero of the strike. The story of his hunch and how he rode it was told up and down the land. Certainly he had ridden it far and away beyond the boldest, for no five of the luckiest held the value in claims that he held. And, furthermore, he was still riding the hunch, and with no diminution of daring.

Back in Dawson, though he remained true to his word and never touched hand to pick and shovel, he worked as hard as ever in his life. He had a thousand irons in the fire, and they kept him busy. Heavy as were his expenses, he won more heavily. He took lays, bought half shares, shared with the men he grubstaked, and made personal locations. Day and night his dogs were ready, and he owned the fastest teams; so that when a stampede to a new discovery was on, it was Burning Daylight to the fore through the longest, coldest nights till he blazed his stakes next to Discovery. In one way or another (in any nothing of the many worthless creeks) he came into possession of properties on the good creeks, such as Sulphur, Dominion, Excelsior, Siwash, Cristo, Al-bambra, and Doolittle. The thousands he poured nut flaked back in tons of thousands.

Dawson grew rapidly that winter of 1896. Money poured in on Daylight from the sale of town lots. He promptly invested it where it would gather more. In fact, he played the dangerous game of pyramiding, and no more perilous pyramiding than in a placer camp could he imagine. But he played with his eyes wide open.

Corner lots in desirable locations sold that winter for from ten to thirty thousand dollars. Daylight sent word out over the trails and passes for the newcomers to "bring down" log-rafts, and, as a result, the summer of 1897 saw his saw mills working day and night, on three shifts, and still he had logs left over with which to build cabins. These cabins, land included, sold at from one to several thousand dollars. Two-story log buildings, in the business part of town, brought him from forty to fifty thousand dollars apiece. These fresh accretions of capital were immediately invested in other ventures. He turned gold over and over, until everything that he touched seemed to turn to gold.

With the summer rush from the Outside came special correspondents for the big newspapers and magazines, and one and all, using unlimited space, they wrote Daylight up; so that, so far as the world was concerned, Daylight loomed the largest figure in Alaska. Of course, after several months, the world became interested in the Spanish War, and forgot all about him; but in the Klondike itself Daylight still remained the most prominent figure.

CHAPTER VI.

It was held by the thousands of hero-worshipping cheebagios that Daylight was a man absolutely without fear. But Bettles and Dan MacDonald and other sourdoughs shook their heads and laughed as they mentioned women. And they were right. He had always been afraid of them from the time, himself a lad of seventeen, when Queen Anne, of Juneau, made open and ridiculous love to him. For that matter, he never had known women. Born in a mining-camp where they were rare and mysterious, having no sisters, his mother dying while he was an infant, he had never been in contact with them.

But it was left to the Virgin to give him his final fright. She was found one morning dead in her cabin. A shot through the head had done it, and she had left no message, no explanation. Then came the talk, some what voicing public opinion, called it a case of too much Daylight. She had killed herself because of him. Everybody knew this, and said so. The correspondents wrote it up, and once more Burning Daylight, King of the Klondike, was sensationally featured in the Sunday supplements of the United States. The Virgin had strangled herself, so the feature-stories ran, and correctly so. Never had she entered a Dawson City dance-hall. When she first arrived from Circle City, she had earned her living by washing clothes. Next, she had bought a sewing-machine and made men's drill parkas, fur caps, and moosehide mittens. Then she had gone on a clerk into the First Yukon Bank. All this, and more, was known and told, though one and all were agreed that Daylight, while the cause, had been the innocent cause of her untimely end.

And the worst of it was that Daylight knew it was true. Always would he remember that last night he had seen her. He had thought nothing of it at the time; but, looking back, he was haunted by every little thing that had happened. In the light of the tragedy event, he could understand everything—her quietness, that calm certitude as if all vexing questions of living had been smoothed-out—and were gone, and that certain otherworldly sweetness about all that she had said and done that had been almost maternal. He remembered the way she had looked at him, how she had laughed when he narrated Mickey Dolan's mistake in staking the fraction on Skookum Gulch. Her laughter had been lightly joyous, while at the same time it had lacked its old-time robustness. Not that she had been grave or subdued. On the contrary, she had been so patently content, so filled with peace. She had fooled him, fool that he was. He had even thought that night that her feeling for him had passed, and he had taken delight in the thought, and caught visions of the satisfying future friendship that would be theirs with this perturbing love out of the way.

And then, when he stood at the door, cap in hand, and said good night, it had struck him at the time as a funny and embarrassing thing, her bending over his head and kissing it. He had felt like a fool, but he shivered now when he looked back on it and felt again the touch of her lips on his hand. She was saying good-by, an eternal good-by, and he had never guessed. At that very moment, and for all the moments of the evening, coolly and deliberately, as he well knew her way, she had been resolved to die. If he had only known it! Untouched by the contagious malady himself, nevertheless he would have married her if he had had the slightest inkling of what she contemplated. And yet he knew, furthermore, that hers was a certain stiff-necked pride that would not have permitted her to accept marriage as an act of philanthropy. There had really been no saving her, after all. The love-disease had fastened upon her, and she had been doomed from the first to perish of it.

Six thousand spent the winter of 1897 in Dawson, work on the creeks went on apace, while beyond the passes it was reported that one hundred thousand more were waiting for the spring. Late one brief afternoon, Daylight, on the benches between French Hill and Skookum Hill, caught a wind-

THEATRICAL

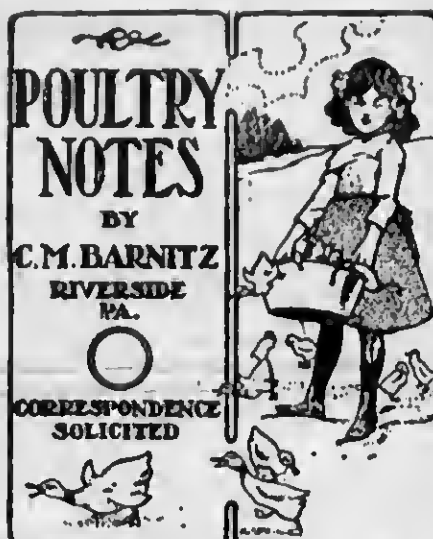

The Hon. Am. Club will produce to the theatrical public an up-to-date minstrel first part, and musical second part at the Majestic theatre, Friday evening of this week. A good cast will present some clever comedy, interrupted with several of the latest popular songs of the day. Several novel effects are arranged so as to complete a unique show scene for the second part of the play.

Motion pictures will be shown and will take up the intermission.

A seven piece orchestra will accompany most of the musical numbers and play the overtures.

A musical treat and a minstrel all in one has been prepared that will surpass any attempt of the same likeness in the city. Tell your friends and all join in and make this play a success by attending.

The corner contest piano will be used on the stage in the second part of the program.

BIDDY AT BIRD WORK.

There are no bugs on you, of course not; but, oh, the garden! Root maggots are eating the onions, green worms are chewing the cabbage, beetles are gobbling the asparagus, the are after the lettuce, snails are spotting the celery, fleas are chewing the tomatoes, wireworms are boring the potatoes, slugs are after the beans, cutworms are eating the corn, striped beetles are killing the cucumbers, grubs are after the strawberries, and red spiders are on the rose.

And, oh, the orchard! Steely beetles are after the grapevine, cankerworms and codling moth are after the apples, slugs are after the cherries, borers are rotting the peaches, and our cullos are chewing the plums, the apples, the peaches and the plums.

But the birds will catch them! Alas, birds!

There was a day when pretty birds for wiggling worms did search.

For now those birds, alas, alas, are worn on holes to church!

But Biddy is on the job and not withstanding our cushion pressing custom oflary has declared in sol emna session that the hen is not a bird Biddy is doing much bird work all over this country, and Uncle Sam's the bad smells and conditions that made the sweating house with its deadly, frowy walls.

Sunshine also is as necessary for hens as humans. It destroys germs, keeps the house dry, warms the fowl, gives life to the feathers, light for work, keeps the flock optimistic and chases the rats, mice and flies that depredate and propagate in gloom.

The tight house with high little windows has been consigned to the fossiliferous age with the poultry pessimists. Windows are now down to the floor or the fronts out, to catch all the sunshine and ozone, and these are necessary if flocks are to possess stamina, beget strong offspring and pay a bon ton profit.

FEATHERS AND EGG SHELLS.

When your chickens dig down deep into their fethers it's nearly always a case of lots of lice. A peep at the end will show enough.

The Fiji and Sandwich Islands are becoming prominent poultry producers, and experts are moving there to promote the industry. They have made sandwiches of the maliserial missionaries, but they now serve them chicken sandwiches.

Certain poultry dealers are sending out printed matter to poultry raisers, describing how to fatten, kill, dress, cool and pack poultry. There is so much poultry spoiled in preparing fowls for market that this plan has been adopted to prevent it.

Many introduce deadly blackhead among their turkeys by buying stock where the disease exists and by not quarantining purchased birds for inspection. We have seen the most perfect looking birds develop this plague a few weeks after purchase.

The territory between Philadelphia and Trenton, N. J., is a great capon district, one firm last December and January purchasing 147,153 pounds of juicy capons from the farmers of that region, who received as high as 30 cents a pound for the big birds dressed.

The English have a slick way to catch rats. They take a deep tub or cask, fill it half full of water and cover the vessel with brown paper, pasted down around the edges. For several nights feed is placed on this false top, and after the rats have been feeding awhile a T sill is made in the middle of the top, and the rubber rats tumble in. Their squeals attract others, and they tumble in too.

Those faucers who guined all summer after neighbors' cats may be glad they do not live in the reign of the Welsh-Bowell the Good, 938-A-D. In those days "if anybody stole or killed the cat that guarded the prince's granaries he was to forfeit a mile ewe and lamb or as much wheat as when poured on the body, suspended by the tail, the head tumbled the floor, would form a heap high enough to cover the tip of her tail."

Almscott, dubbed "Show Me Land," and she certainly is showing the other states how to lead the poultry procession, recently gave a five acre farm to the person who sent in the best poultry house plan and best method of poultry management. She has now started an egg laying contest that is to last a year. It is national in its scope. Fanciers in general are invited to send hens to compete, and splendid prizes are offered to winners.

THE AUDOBON SASSIETY.

They met to talk against the cats That kill the birds so sweet That warble in the cherry tree And all the day go "Tweet!"

"The cats must go," yelled Mrs. Snow Those women nodded hairs All armed with pretty birdie wings That were not killed by cats.

"Yes, kill them all!" cried Mrs. Small. "They kill the birds, they do!" She wore a lovely bird graveyard Upon her false hair too.

And thus those Audobons, enraged, Were making cat fur fly When Mrs. Snow glanced down below And there a mouse did spy.

"Help!" "Murder!" "Call the cat!" Those women—where were they? Some perched upon the chandelier, Some fainted dead away.

Then mammy cat came bounding in And nipped up mousey slick, She bore him to her kittens, They gobbled him down quick.

Those females came down off the perch, And each one voted aye— That rather than have horrid mice The pussy cats may stay.

Thank God that we men aren't birds— These women stick would kill us quick For military things.

Salt and Tobacco.

Many smokers have adulterated their own tobacco. Farr sprinkled his pipeful with salt to make it last longer. And it does. Farr, one of the most lecherous of smokers and longest of livers, smokes his salted pipe last no hour. There is a faint crackling as the salt turns, but no difference in the taste. And it was Lamb who, disdaining adulterants, sat opposite and smoked his famous toads. When Farr asked gently how he had attained this fierce dexterity, the reply was characteristically Lamb's. "By hy-tolling after it, sir."—London Standard.

NEW GRANGE ESTABLISHED

Membership Has Now Reached the Number of Forty.

Two Meetings Will Now Be Held During Each Month.

There has been a movement on hand for some time among some of our grangers to establish a Charlevoix Grange. The work has been done very quietly, up to last night, when the first meeting was held at the home of E. B. Ward.

A charter was formed and as a result of all this hard labor the first meeting was very successful. The following officers were then elected:

Master—E. B. Ward.
Overseer—R. W. Paddock.
Lecturer—Mrs. A. J. Usher.
Chaplain—Henry Black.
Steward—R. S. Shapton.
Secretary—Jennie Black.
Treasurer—Daniel Hinebaugh.
Gate Keeper—Renben Geer.
Pomona—Mary Crandall.
Flora—Gertrude Powers.
Ceres—Edna Ward.

The grange shows all prospects of having a very good membership, there being now about forty members residing in Charlevoix, and the charter will be open until about the fifteen of December for all who contemplate joining.

This will rank high as a social and literary order, and will be convenient for all those in this vicinity to attend.

There will be two meetings each month at the Odd Fellows Hall.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Postponed Meeting to be Held Friday Evening at Meech Home.

The postponed meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society will hold this Friday evening November 24, at the home of F. J. Meech. The following is the program:

that haunts our national American life. Yet our mental picture of the Father of this Country is hardly calm. No book or oration on Lincoln would be complete with the adjective "patient." Our mightiest general was the "silent man of Galena." With our twentieth century eighteen hours to Chicago speed are we any better than when Samuel Adams drove from Boston to Philadelphia in an old chaise that squeaked with patriotism?

"The Royal Road To"—
It's an age of electricity snapping and crackling. Electricity seeks short circuits. It's the day of short story Dickens, Eliot and Hawthorne are forgotten. Magazines are even abandoning the serial story. Sermons spoken must be twenty minutes; those printed must be tabloid. It's the bark of the five inch rapid fire gun rather than the boom of the thirteen inch ordnance. Education is rushed. Degrees are conferred instead of earned. "Spanish at a Glance." "Business Tugboat in Ten Lessons." Colleges offer cross cuts to diplomas. One correspondence school has 200,000 students. The singular thing is that with increase of hurry there is a decline of faith and attendance to religious things. An age of hurry is extraordinarily fickle. Hurry is not because of fullness, but of emptiness. Haste, fuss, fever, is the sure mark of human inferiority.

Grange Column

Harmony Grange, No. 1451.
Harmony Grange meeting, November 14 was rather poorly attended as several of the members were away on business.

The master and overseer both being absent, the Worthy Lecturer Sister Mildred Liefner acted as master as well as lecturer, and filled both positions in a very acceptable manner.

The business was quickly dispatched and the program which was an impromptu one, except the response to roll call, was both lively and very interesting, consisting of music, reading and discussions.

The roll call was responded to by each member naming some improvement they would like to see carried out in the neighborhood. One that was considered most important was the need of a grange hall. Another was an organ stool for the school house. Also new wall paper good roads and several other things were mentioned.

A committee was appointed to buy an organ stool, also one to confer with the school board in regard to papering.

We hope before another year to see the beginning of a grange hall.

The discussions were in regard to teaching agriculture in the rural schools and relative merits of city and country as a place to rear a family. Both subjects were quite thoroughly discussed. One suggestion that was favorably received was that we should have a township high school with agriculture as an elective study, and with land and facilities for demonstration.

The ladies meet this week with Mrs. Edna Snell in Boyne City. They also announce a Sack Social for next Wednesday.

The program next time will be Irish songs, recitations, anecdotes, history, etc.

Visitors always welcome.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.
Too late for last week.

Ironton Grange met in regular session Tuesday, November 14, with H. E. Coblenz, master, in the chair.

Twenty members and one visitor present. One candidate was obligated in the first and second degrees.

The lecturer's hour consisted of songs, stories and recitations.

For the good of the order, the problem of having a grange or chieftain was discussed. It was finally agreed upon and Brother William Steenberg was elected orchestra manager, and Sister Cora Hammond, instructor. It was then decided to arrange for an entertainment to make money to buy musical instruments. Committee on entertainment, William Steenberg, Cora Hammond and John Kaudsen.

Grange lunch will be November 23. Hunt supper November 30.

Grange closed in form.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS
BY
REV. SAMUEL W. POTTS, D.D.

THE UNHAIRING, UNFEVERISH GOD.
Text: "And Jesus said, Make the men sit down."—John VI, 13.

God cares for calendars. No use rising at 2 a. m. to find fault with darkness and ask why the sun has not risen. It is not time. Though all men should clamor and complain, the sun will not rise until the appointed time.

There's an exact second for that event. Astronomers may calculate it for this date 3000 A. D. God works that way. The Almighty timed four minutes and second when the stars should flash to the wise men and the angels sing to the shepherds. When his Son came there was divine order. "Alone hour is not yet come," he said again and again. "When the work was done he said, 'The hour is at hand.' The calendaring was complete.

One April afternoon in Galilee divinely and humbly stood face to face. A mighty miracle was wrought. Five thousand people were going to be fed from a lad's lunch basket. There's great confusion, danger of an awful panic. Cossack knouts beat back Russian peasants at the czar's celebration yet 200 were trampled to death. British bayonets pierced famine crazed sufferers in India before relief corn could be distributed. Christ calls a halt. No tumult, with the throng trampling down the weak. "Make the men sit down." There's no hurry, no fussing, no fever with the Son of God.

The American Disease.
Hurry, justly or unjustly, is called "Americanitis," the American disease. Our climate, dry and overplus with oxygen; competitive system, honor and opportunity beckoning at every street corner, the very American "atmosphere," breed nervousness, overboldness, dyspepsia, premature death. The Frenchman shrugs his shoulders, laughs, plus a flower on his coat, is off to the play. The German after dinner slowly lights his pipe. Frau says, "A ens lower is in the shop." "Ach, himmel, let him wait!" John Bull is rosy cheeked, red blooded; Brother Jonathan thin, wiry, calloused. He must "get there or bust." "Lawd, Purviss," drank my English friend as I dragged him through a flower jam down the steps of the subway and the car door was stamped in our faces, "Is this the latest train today?" "No," I clicked; "there'll be another in a minute." I can hear his big hearty British laugh yet. Who is settling this pace? Some invincible malevolent national spirit driving us on. The whole structure of American society is a race for the prize. I've seen the ranchmen on the plains take blazing branding irons and burn the mark of ownership on horse and steer. Hurry is taking a fiery brand and putting its mark on the American face.

Man's Mania For Speed.

There's something in our climate dry and electrical that brings a necrosis of activity. We are 80,000,000 charged galvanic batteries. Attach one of us to a desk, a pulpit, a pen, and we flash on till the current is exhausted. If there are thirty porches in a row there will be at least ninety rocking chairs, all going furiously, while the occupants tell excitedly, possibly shrilly, of an entertainment where they "nearly died" laughing. On the way home the darkness was "Egyptian." It rained "pitchforks," and the mud was "knee deep." Stand at the ferry, the railroad station, the trolley terminus. See the crowd surge on or dash off, fighting going, up stairs or down, squirming and elbowing to get through the gateway. What's the hurry? No one knows. The Niagara gorge is swift stream, but it bears no vessels of commerce. The mailst goes at a frightful clip in the hope of getting somewhere he doesn't need to go in as small a fragment of time as the speed laws will allow. He has a dread of being considered "slow." To be a "has been" is disgrace. "Old 999," once the pride of the New York Central, holder of all express records, now draws a milk train along the Hudson. From Empire State express to milk train! Degradation! That's the specter

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

Opened Monday Morning With Judge Mayne Presiding

FRED BELMER JUMPED HIS BOND

Swift Cases Held on Calendar to Keep Them Alive

Beaver Island Boys up for Violation of the Liquor Law Out on Probation—Other Court News.

Circuit court opened Monday with Judge Mayne presiding. The first case on the calendar, The People vs. Herman L. Swift was continued, as were the two following which were of the same character and are being kept on the calendar for the purpose of keeping the cases alive. In the fourth case, The People vs. Fred Belmer, the defendant had jumped his bond and bondsman were ordered to put up the amount. Case No. 5 on the calendar, The People vs. Noxie Spangenberg, for violation of the liquor law, the defendant was unable to attend court on account of sickness, and the case was put over until Monday. William Lemieux, up for violation of the liquor law, changed his plea of not guilty to guilty and will be sentenced today. The case of The People vs. Frank Hengy was continued on motion of the defense.

In the case of The People vs. John Malloy and Barney Gallagher, Hugh H. Boyle and Joseph Floyd, for violation of the liquor law, all four plead guilty and after a severe lecture from Judge Mayne, were allowed their liberty on suspended sentence. The judge made some pointed remarks regarding the number of violations of the liquor law which have taken place on the island, and upon continuing his remarks stated that they must cease or violators would get the extreme penalty dealt out in like cases. Malloy will have W. D. Gallagher as probation officer, and Gallagher, Boyle and Floyd will be looked after by Father Maloney. Each will be required to report to the court every two weeks and keep accurate account of all monies earned and spent and report same. They also promised to do all in their power to keep their friends from using liquor and help all to live the lives of law abiding citizens. In plain words the judge told them that it meant ninety days at the Detroit House of Correction for the first drop of liquor that passed their lips, and cautioned them to be very careful in their conduct. They will also have to pay a small fee to help defray costs of the prosecution and court expenses. Joseph Lewis was also placed under Bert Wightman, as probation officer, for malicious destruction of personal property, and will have to report as required in like cases.

The case of The People vs. Edward McSamba was not pressed there being no evidence of violation.

Elijah Flagg vs. East Jordan Lumber Co., settled their troubles out of court, as was also the case of Reuben Geer vs. Alois and Milada Volter.

Both cases of the Clare County Savings Bank vs. Gerald D. Featherly, were continued. In the divorce cases of Charles Tison vs. Marie Tison and George Laine vs. Rosella Laine, decrees were granted in both instances. The Deadman vs. Summerman case is in the hands of the jury as we go to press.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic will be opened to Vauville Monday night when "The Invincible Trio," supported by the Dixie Girls in "Uncle Gabes' Return to the Sunny South," will be played three nights. The act is composed of singing and dancing of excellent quality, and the comedians are recommended as being first class.

The motion pictures are better, clearer and pleasanter to look at with the perfection of the new machine recently installed.

One of the main features of this popular theater is the prizes which are to be given away again Saturday night.

ATTEMPTS SUICIDE

Potoskey Lady Got Huffy at Husband and Drank Creosote.

Angry because her husband would not stop playing the graphophone when she requested him to do so, Mrs. Albert Crandell of Potoskey went to her home Sunday night and drank a quantity of creosote. When her husband retired an hour later, he found her in a serious condition. A physician was summoned and soon had her out of danger.

Mrs. Crandell has been subject to fits of anger for some time, but this is the first time she has attempted to take her life.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Next Meeting to Occur Friday Evening, December 1.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, December 1, with Dr. and Mrs. Cronter, at the Burr cottage. The following is the program:

Music—The Boys' Orchestra.
Paper—"A Trip Abroad," Mrs. W. H. Miller.
Social Intermissions.
Music—Vocal Solo, Mrs. Loraine Washburn.
Paper—"A Step in Education," Judge J. W. Mayne.
Discussion—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson.

MAY GET P. O. DEPOSITS

State Banks Can Do So Under Certain Conditions

Bank Officers Required to Pledge Securities Privately Owned.

Some time ago it will be remembered Attorney-General Kuhn handed down an opinion that the assets of a state bank could not be pledged as security with the federal government in obtaining postal savings bank deposits. For a time there was scurrying among state banks to ascertain whether or not there was any way in which they could secure these deposits and thus be enabled to compete with national and private banks. A way has been found, however, and here it is.

It has been held by the board of trustees of the Postal Savings system at Washington that bonds subscribed by directors or stockholders of Michigan State banks, to secure postal savings deposits by such banks must be owned by them and must be accompanied by affidavits executed by such owners on forms furnished by the board of trustees, and if bonds so pledged are in registered form they must be registered in the name of the treasurer of the United States.

This it will be seen that a director or stockholder of a State bank, owning either municipal or government bonds, can pledge them as security for postal savings deposits, providing they in no way form any part of the assets of the bank with whom the director or stockholder is associated.

The state banking department is in receipt of the above information from Washington and all state banks are being notified to that effect.

In order to secure postal savings deposits it is necessary for a bank to pledge either government, state or municipal bonds.

GOT HIS ROLL

An East Jordan Man Touched for $1,000 in Chicago.

George Spencer, a manufacturer from East Jordan, Mich., was separated from a roll of $1,000 in a brief ride through the loop, ending at Monroe and Dearborn streets, Chicago, last week, according to the story he told the police.

Spencer met one of the supposed robbers in the Saratoga hotel and a second stranger at South Michigan avenue and Adams street. The second man, alleging he was a stranger here, asked Spencer if he wished to ride about the city in a taxi. Spencer agreed and they were driven to Monroe and Dearborn streets, where both strangers, pleading that they had overlooked appointments, stopped the machine and made their getaway.

After they had gone Spencer missed his money.

YOU WILL HAVE TO HUSTLE

But 16 Days Remain in which to Work for the Magnificent Obermeyer Piano.

No use to shout about the virtue of the piano or other prizes. All have become familiar with them. Now is the time for steady determined effort, the kind that wears and tears and makes character in the doing. Everyone of these contestants who have been working for the prize will be better for the effort even though there is only one piano and only one who can get it.

Who is to be the one? That is to be the momentous question: Do they at times see a vision of a dandy stopping at their door, the men around, tramping into the house with the beautiful instrument, and endeavor. How much interest do you take in such a dream? Have you not dreams of your own? And how would you feel to have them realized? Don't you think you would have very much the same feeling could you in some way assist or have assisted in the realization of some such noble ambition? Try it and see. Put forth the effort. Bear in mind some of the contestants whom you would like to see a winner and then get out and work.

Every time you spend a dollar put it in some place where you can get a vote coupon and then turn it over to your chosen candidate. You won't be the only one doing this, and how do you know but what your little help will turn the trick and put the prize where you want it? You people who get out of yourselves once in awhile and do something for somebody else, are beginning to learn the true secret of a happy life, and once you get in the way you will keep up forever—you will speedily see that the millennium is no little dream but a blessed reality, to be brought about by just simple means.

A piano is never a foolish possession. When one can play it, all within reach of its sweet sound are benefited thereby.

The bonus for the next week is as follows: For every seven new subscriptions 10,000 extra, making a total of 11,200.

For every seven renewal subscription, 8,000 extra, making a total of 11,200.

For every seven back subscriptions, 6,000 extra, making a total of 8,800.

For every two twenty years subscriptions a total of 135,000 votes will be given.

For every three five years subscriptions, a bonus of 25,000 extra votes, making a total of 40,000 votes.

For every forty merchants' coupons, 1,000 extra votes.

By studying out the above bonus offer any contestant will be able to win as each and all have this right.

The following merchants give a coupon with every one dollar cash purchase to those who ask for them. Get your tickets when you buy your goods.

Mrs. Dell Dutcher	2 950
Loraine Washburn	2 725
Lela Genet	1 950
Edna Srigley	1 000
Hattie Humlin	800

The balance of the candidates made no gains over the first count.

USE YOUR HOUSE NUMBERS

And Prevent Mistakes in Delivery of Articles of Merchandise

Give Number of Your House When Directing Friends to Your Home.

To all Patrons of the Charlevoix Postoffice Residing in the City:

It is assumed by many that the renumbering of the city and the placing of street signs at street intersections as ordered by the city council was done merely for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the Postoffice Department in establishing free delivery service in the city. This is not wholly true. It was done partly as a matter of public convenience. By the absence of numbers on the houses and business places in the past, the public has become unaccustomed to using them.

Have your mail addressed to your street and number. In many cases it may prevent mistakes and delay in the delivery. At least it will materially assist the postoffice force. Have your stationery printed with the street and number on the letter head and return request on the envelope.

Use the street and number in directing others to your residence or place of business, or to the residence or place of business of your neighbors.

If the old number is still on your house, take it off. It's no good. The city clerk has a map and record of the numbers, both of buildings erected and vacant lots. If you have built on a vacant lot get your number from the clerk and put it on.

Stop on the sidewalk fifteen or twenty minutes some morning when it isn't snowing and commit your number to memory. Then use it.

Yours Respectfully,
POSTMASTER.

RE-MARRIED AFTER TEN YEARS

Prominent Charlevoix Couple Renew Marriage Vows After Lapse of Ten Years.

In these days of divorce courts and Reno refugees, it is worth recording when people are so well satisfied with their nuptial mates that they wished the knot re-tied to make it even more binding. Such an occasion was the "Ten Wedding," which was celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. Lisle Shanahan at their handsome home on Michigan avenue, Tuesday evening.

It was simply a dinner party to the first place, given by the host and hostess in honor of the day at which twenty-two guests were assembled, but after disposing of the dinner, the guests took a hand in the affair, and "by and with the consent of the contracting parties," pulled a marriage ceremony, the like of which has never been seen. Hon. R. W. Paddock was the "parson," Mayor Hampton gave away the bride, Dick Hammet was ring bearer, the ring being a nice fat doughnut, Mrs. H. S. Harsha was flower girl, Mrs. A. A. Swinton played Mendelssohn's wedding march, and the ceremony was clinched by the "parson" declaring the knot duly tied by the virtue of his official position as president of the Pine Lake Club.

After the tables were cleared away, progressive pedro furnished further amusement, and it was after midnight when the good-byes were said.

In addition to the gifts of "ten" mementos, a beautiful set of solid silver spoons were left behind as a memento of the occasion and a token of good wishes by those present.

AFTER LINGERING ILLNESS

Miss Ruth Bedford Well Known Here Passes Away

Was Seventy-Six Years of Age and a Pioneer of this Section.

Mrs. Ruth Bedford, a pioneer of this section, died Monday morning at her home on Austin street, after a lingering illness of several weeks.

Mrs. Bedford was born in Westchester county, N. Y., November 30, 1831, moving from there to Beaver Island in 1850, where they spent their early days. She was married while on the island to Thomas Bedford, June 8, 1853. To this marriage was born three children, Capt. Edwin E. Bedford, of Point Betsy, I. S. S.; Mrs. Julia Crann and Harrison Bedford of this city. She moved to Charlevoix in May 1881, and has resided here ever since that time. Her husband died May 5, 1889.

Mrs. Bedford leaves one sister, Mrs. Albert Field of Eaton Rapids, Michigan, and two brothers, Capt. Harrison Miller of Frankfort, Michigan, and George Miller, of San Bernardino, California, to mourn their loss, besides the three children.

Mrs. Bedford was a kind, loving mother and a friend to all and will be missed by the community at large.

The funeral was held at the house this morning, being largely attended, and many floral offerings showed the high esteem she was held. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

The out-of-town attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Will Field, of Eaton Rapids; Mrs. Gibson, of Potoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Bedford, of Point Betsy and Mrs. Albert Field, of Eaton Rapids.

USED BLOODHOUND

Thieves Tracked to Private Residence in Potoskey Sunday.

Thieves forced open the back door of Hitching's meat market in Potoskey early Sunday morning and made a getaway with meat and groceries with probably fifteen or twenty dollars.

When the robbery had been discovered Sheriff Edgerton was notified and appeared on the scene with the blood hound he has in his care. The bloodhound secured the scent and after tracking it some distance brought the pursuers to a private residence. The house will probably be searched and offenders punished.

BE CAREFUL WITH LIQUID POLISH

Many Serious Accidents Reported From Its Use

IT CONTAINS NAPHTHA OR GASOLINE

It Must Not Be Used When Stove Is Hot

State Oil Inspector Busy Warding Off Cause of Many Accidents—Must Be Labeled.

So many accidents were reported as the result of carelessness in using liquid stove polish which contained naphtha that the State Oil Inspector's Department has commenced a canvass of the state to compel the branding of such polish with a caution label and the word "naphtha" painted in good sized letters on each package.

State Inspector Neel says: "Liquid stove polish is all right, in fact I know of no better polish made. The only trouble is to impress upon the people that it must not be used while the stove is hot or when there are coals in the stove or ship, or while there is a lighted lamp or a flame in the same room."

"By insisting on a prominent red-letter caution label on each can, calling attention to this fact, the oil department hopes to lessen these accidents. To this end we have started a canvass of the state and are insisting that the merchants sell only cans which are properly labeled. Manufacturers are adding the department in this work by printing and sending out new labels as fast as we notify them of the location of their cans."

"Naphtha and gasoline are practically the same thing except that the former is a trifle less inflammable. Either can be handled with entire safety if people will use ordinary care. Gasoline when lighted is a good deal like a hive of bees; if let alone or smothered out, the damage will rarely result, but attempt to light it, and it becomes alive, and, like the bees will sting in all directions."

"A gasoline or kerosene explosion is rare, and yet almost every day the daily press records one or more 'explosions.' Gasoline is highly inflammable and so is excelsior, cotton and the like, but one never speaks of these as exploding. A lighted match dropped into a five gallon can of gasoline would not cause an explosion, and the result would be only a high bonfire if left burning long enough, while the dropping of a handkerchief over the top of the can would instantly put out the fire. On the contrary, to throw the can out doors might cause death and disaster."

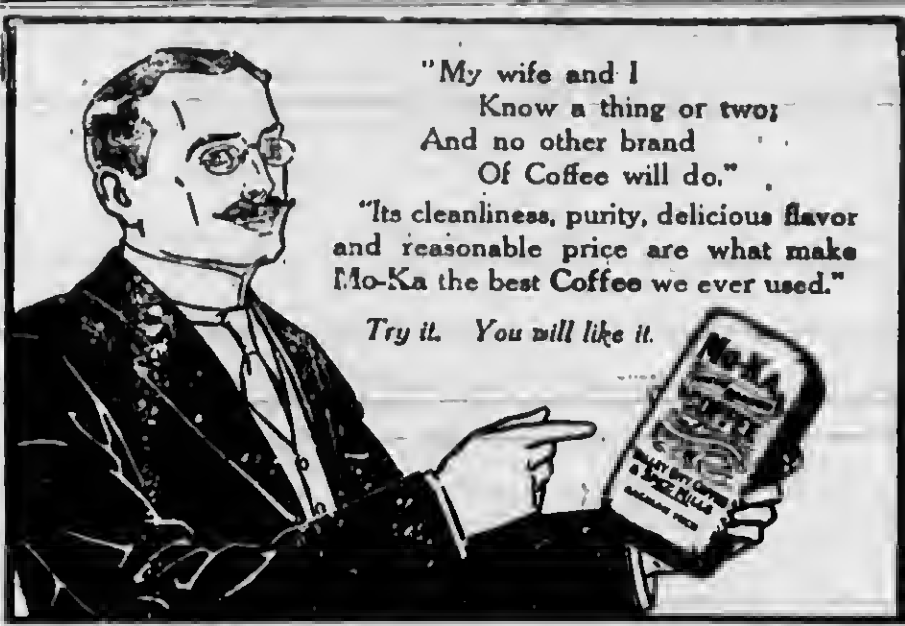

"Take the same five-gallon can and put a small teaspoonful of gasoline into it, drop a match in the opening and off goes your head, and out go the windows. It's the vapor that explodes, and not the liquid; even at that the vapor must be mixed with just the right amount of air to get any explosion. The so-called explosions are almost invariably simple cases of oil catching fire because of its high inflammability and then the person upon whom some of the oil has been spilled, or the furniture or home, is more or less seriously injured. But there is no explosion, and as soon as the public can be educated to the fact that gasoline fires are very easy to put out by the smothering process and very hard to extinguish by any other means, fewer accidents will result."

FINE LINE OF DIAMONDS

C. R. Bellinger, Charlevoix's pioneer jeweler, has on display the finest line of diamond rings ever shown in this city. In the display you will find mountings of the latest fashions, while the diamonds are marked lower in price than any we have had the pleasure of seeing. Those who intend buying along this line will be well paid by examining these goods.

ASK YOUR-NEIGHBOR

Hundreds of Charlevoix Citizens Can Tell You All About It.
Home endorsement, the public expression of Charlevoix people, should be evidence beyond dispute for every Charlevoix reader, of the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. Surely the experience of friends and neighbors, cheerfully given by them, will carry more weight than the utterances of strangers residing in far-away places. Read the following:
Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Hurthorn avenue, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills, and consider them a very valuable remedy. I have taken them on several occasions for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Other members of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills for lame back and pains in the kidneys and they have received good results. Doan's Kidney Pills were obtained from the Ivy Drug Store, and we highly recommend them."

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY
REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D.D.

WHEN YOUR HAIR IS TURNING GRAY.
Text: "With long life will I satisfy him."
—Ps. 91, 1.

Easter Sunday morning, 1512, Ponce de Leon discovered Florida. He was searching for the fountain of eternal youth. Foolish fellow! Heaven is the only land of eternal youth. Men while we try to hold youth, like health—after it has gone. Ever stand at the cosmopolitan counter of the great drug or department store? It's more a large drug than a comedy. And the actors are not feminine, but human. That man with nervous haste laying the hair dye isn't vain. He's only forty-five, but he has a wife and children to support and educate. His firm is cut ting down expenses and laying off the old men of fifty. He has shaved off his mustache and will gradually dye his hair. Old age is a haunting specter. It terrifies more than fear of death. Life has three tragic dyes—birth, death and old age. Most people do not want to become old. Gray hair, wrinkles, end of carnal capacity, some of the pain, burden to ungrateful son or impatient daughter, being a burden for the child that will not spend your day, because you wish for it. "Backward turn backward, O thou, in thy flight, is the prayer. But even God cannot turn back the universe, and give us yesterday. The soul must sit on the western porch and wait for the twilight and evening star—and after that the dark!

Facing the inevitable.
We must not, dare not, surrender to the years. Don't haul down your flag too soon. Don't quit your day's work at 3 o'clock. Says Fannie Crosby at ninety-three: "I do not intend to grow old." Says Sarah Bernhardt at—what age does she confess? "It is for me to laugh at age." Whether the great Christian song writer or the gay French actress, both have the secret. "I will not grow old." Mind and character are the two great exceptions to the law of age and decay, for it is not seen on the head, but in the heart, that gives old age. A woman is as old as she looks, a man as old as he feels. Titian at 100 was at his greatest painting, while Louis II. of Hungary died of old age at twenty. When you admit you are old, you are. In my profession no man is wanted beyond forty, and at fifty he has crossed the ministerial "dead line." And the church is paying the penalty. Of course if a minister stops studying, flies up his knowledge in bundles and says, "I am done," he is done. When the pastor of the First Congregational church in Boston died in 1923 the church decided it would call a young man, and it elected Mr. Davenport of New Haven, then seventy years old.

The Great Secret.
God has made our spirits immortal. Age of spirit is a voluntary thing, a matter of mental habit. Men and women grow old by thinking themselves old. They drop anchor with no intention of putting out to sea again; then energies decline and interests fade. The tragedy of old age lies chiefly in closing the doors, shutting the windows, barring the house against new faces, new ideas, new enthusiasms. When the years begin to multiply one must fasten back the shutters, leave the latchstring out. Don't get seared and smothered at the world. It will only jostle you to one side and tear at you. Keep in the swing. Don't get out of step. There's nowhere to go but into a chimney corner, where you will die long before your burial. Don't get the attitude of protest against new things. Conditions have changed, methods have improved, the world is growing, and you must grow with it or die. John in that world progress even though that progress seems un- real to you.

Keeping Roses Fresh.
Watch your personal appearance. The shrewd, starchy old person finds the world drawing away its garments from him. Brush your teeth. Keep bald and your head trimmed. It's an easy and quick process from gentle- man to tramp. Brush your shoes; dress for dinner. There's an unalterable, unexplainable connection between the external and the internal. And the world is mightily impressed by the external. You've done a double- minded, and partly impressed the world externally, and partly impressed the world internally. I know a man of ninety who is the charm of his neighborhood. In middle age he stored his mind with literature and current events. He still discusses important events in town, in nation, in church. At an age when most men are peevish and cynical he is surrounded by young people listening to his reminiscences and discussion of the world's progress. And here is the great secret—colors do not fade. The perceptions become duller, but colors are colors still. Got it? Life isn't stale; it's fresh. It isn't dull; it's new.
Some day you will reach the last hill top. Even there you'll view the land of promise. If life has been sweet beyond what life is sweetest. Has religion been a glorious thing here? It will be the garment of eternity. The snows of earth's winter will be exchanged for the fragrance of heaven's eternal spring. Age? You know nothing of it. You were a child not of time, but of eternity.

CHAPTER VII.

In no blaze of glory did Burning Daylight descend upon San Francisco.
Not only had he been forgotten, but the Klondike along with him. The world was interested in other things, and the Alaskan adventure, like the Spanish War, was an old story. He settled down in St. Francis Hotel, was interviewed by the cub-reporters of the hotel-run, and received brief pa-graphs of notice for twenty-four hours.

Several months passed in San Francisco, during which time he studied the game and its rules, and prepared himself to take a band.

Tiring of being merely an onlooker, he ran up to Nevada, where the new gold-mining boom was fairly started—
"Just to try a flutter," as he phrased it to himself. The flutter on the To-nopah Stock Exchange lasted just ten days, during which time his amash-ing, wild-bull game played ducks and drakes with the more stereotyped gamblers, and at the end of which time, having gambled Florida into his fist, he let go for a net profit of half a million. Whereupon, smacking his lips, he departed for San Francisco and the St. Francis Hotel. It tasted good, and his hunger for the game became more acute.

And once more the papers sensationalized him. BURNING DAYLIGHT was a big-letter headline again. Interviewers flocked about him. Old files of magazines—and newspapers were searched through, and the romantic and historic Elam Harnish, Adventurer of the Frost, King of the Klondike, and Father of the Sour-doughs, strode upon the breakfast table of a million homes along with the toast-and-breakfast foods. Even before his elected time, he was forcibly launched into the game. Financiers and promoters, and all the sotsam and jelsam of the sea of speculation surged upon the shores of his eleven millions. In self-defense he was compelled to open offices. He dabbled in life things at first—"stalling for time," as he explained it to Holdsworth, a friend he had made at the Alta-Pacific Club. Daylight himself was a member of the club, and Holdsworth had proposed him. And it was well that Daylight played closely at first, for he was astounded by the multitudes of sharks—"ground-sharks," he called them—that flocked about him. He saw through their schemes readily enough, and even marveled that such numbers of them could find sufficient prey to keep them going.
Their rascality and general dubious-ness was so transparent that he could not understand how any one could be taken in by them.

So it was that he resolved to leave the little men, the Holdsworths, alone; and, while he met them in good fellowship, he chummed with none and formed no deep friendships. He did not dislike the little men, the men of the Alta-Pacific, for instance. He merely did not elect to choose them for partners in the big game in which he intended to play. What this big game was, even he did not know. He was waiting to find it. And in the meantime he played small hands, investing in several arid-lands reclamation projects and keeping his eyes open for the big chance when it should come along.

And then he met John Dowsett, the great John Dowsett. It was the first big msgrate Daylight had met face to face, and he was plesed and charmed.
There was such a kindly humanness about the man, such a genial demo-craticness, that Daylight found it hard to realize that this was the John Dow-sett, president of a string of banks, insurance manipulator, reputed ally of the lieutenants of Standard Oil, and known ally of the Guggenhammers.
Nor did his looks belie his reputation and his manner. Physically, he guaranteed all that Daylight knew of him.
Despite his sixty years and snow-white hair, his hand-shake was firmly hearty, and he showed no signs of decrepitude, walking with a quick, snappy step, making all movements definitely and decisively.

It was not long afterward that Daylight came on to New York. A letter from John Dowsett had been the cause—a simple little typewritten letter of several lines. But Daylight was thrilled as he read it. The bold sentences seemed gorged with mystery. "Our Mr. Howison will call up on you at your hotel. He is to be trusted. We must not be seen together. You will understand after we have had our talk." Daylight coned the words over and over. That was it.
The big game had arrived, and it looked as if he were being invited to sit in and take a hand. Surely, for no other reason would one man so perceptively invite another man to make a journey across the continent.

They met—thanks to "our" Mr.
Howison—up the Hudson, in a magnificent country home. Daylight, according to instructions, arrived in a private motor car which had been furnished him. Dowsett was already there, and another man whom Daylight recognized before the introduction was begun. It was Nathaniel Letton, and none other. Daylight had seen his face a score of times in the magazines and newspapers, and read about his standing in the financial world, and about his endowed University of

"I Must Say, Mr. Harnish, That You
Whipped Us Roundly in That Affair."

Darationa. He, likewise, struck Daylight as a man of power, though he was puzzled, in that he could find no likeness to Dowsett. Except in the matter of cleanliness—a cleanliness that seemed to go down to the deepest fibers of him—Nathaniel Letton was unlike the other in every particular.
Thin to emaciation, he seemed a cold fiame of a man. Not more than fifty, thatched with a sparse growth of iron-gray hair, he looked several times the age of Dowsett.

They drank—that is, Nathaniel Letton took mineral water served by the smoothly operating machine of a lackey who inhabited the place, while Dowsett took Scotch and soda and Daylight a cocktail. Leon Guggenhammer arrived in the midst of the drink, and ordered Scotch. Daylight studied him curiously. This was one of the great Guggenhammer family; a younger one, but nevertheless one of the crowd with which he had locked grapples in the North. Nor did Leon Guggenhammer fail to mention cognizance of that old affair. He complimented Daylight on his prowess—"The echoes of Ophir came down to us, you know. And I must say, Mr.
Daylight—er, Mr. Harnish, that you whipped us roundly in that affair."

Leon Guggenhammer was young and fat. Not a day more than thirty, his face, save for the adumbrated puff sacks under the eyes, was as smooth and lineless as a boy's. The talk soon centered down to business. Dow-sett bronched the plan, aided by an occasional remark from the other two, while Daylight asked questions. Whatever the proposition was, he was going into it with his eyes open. And they filled his eyes with the practical vision of what he had in mind.

"They will never dream you are with us," Guggenhammer interjected, as the outline of the matter drew to a close, his handsome Jewish eyes dashing enthusiastically. "They'll think you are raiding on your own in proper buccaneer style."

"Of course, you understand, Mr. Harnish, the absolute need for keeping our alliance in the dark," Nathaniel Letton warned, gravely.

Daylight nodded his head.
"And you, also understood," Letton went on, "that the result can only be productive of good. The thing is legitimate and right, and the only ones who may be hurt are the stock gamblers themselves. It is not an attempt to smash the market. As you see yourself, you are to buy in the market. The honest investor will be the gainer."

"Yes, that's the very thing," Dow-sett said. "The commercial need for copper is continually increasing. Ward Valley Copper, and all that it stands for—practically one-quarter of the world's supply, as I have shown you—is a big thing, how big, even we can scarcely estimate. Our arrangements are made. We have plenty of capital ourselves, and yet we want more.
Also, there is too much Ward Valley out to suit our present plans. Thus we kill both birds with one stone.
Not only will you buy Ward Valley, but you will at the same time gather Ward Valley in. This will be of infinite advantage to us, while you and all of us will profit by it as well."
And so Mr. Letton has pointed out the thing is legitimate and square.
On the eighteenth the directors meet, and, instead of the customary dividend, a double dividend will be declared."

the double dividend. Ward Valley will jump so that it won't be feasible to buy after that."

"And one other thing, Mr. Harnish," Guggenhammer said, "if you exceed your available cash, or the amount you care to invest in the venture, don't fall immediately to call on us. Remember, we are behind you." Dowsett repeated.

Nathaniel Letton nodded his head in assent.

CHAPTER VIII.

Back at his hotel, though nearly two in the morning, he found the reporters waiting to interview him. Next morning there were more. And thus, with blaze of paper trumpet, was he received by New York. Once more, with heating of tom-toms and wild hullaballoo, his picturesque figure strode across the printed sheet. The King of the Klondike, the hero of the Arctic, the thirty-million-dollar millionaire of the North, had come to New York.
What had he come for? To trim the New Yorkers as he had trimmed the Tonopah crowd in Nevada?

They were prepared for him to play, and, when heavy buying of Ward Valley began, it was quickly decided that he was the operator. Financial gossip buzzed and hummed. He was after the Guggenhammers once more. The story of Ophir was told over again and sensationalized until even Daylight scarcely recognized it. Still, it was all glib to his mill. The stock gamblers were clearly befuddled. Each day he increased his buying, and so eager were the sellers that Ward Valley rose but slowly. A wildly exciting time was his during the week preceding Thursday the eighteenth.
Not only was he gambling as he had never gambled before, but he was gambling at the biggest table in the world for stakes so large that even the case-hardened habitués of that table were compelled to sit in. In spite of the unfilled selling, his persistent buying compelled Ward Valley steadily to rise, and as Thursday approached, the situation became acute.
Something had to smash. How much Ward Valley was this Klondike gambler going to buy? How much could he buy? What was the Ward Valley crowd doing all this time? Daylight appreciated interviews with them that appeared—interviews delightfully placid and non-committal. Leon Guggenhammer even hazarded the opinion that this Northland Croesus might possibly be making a mistake. But not that they cared, John Dowsett explained. "It is purely gambling from beginning to end," were Nathaniel Letton's words; "and we refuse to have anything to do with it or to take notice of it in any way."

"During this time Daylight had several secret meetings with his partners —one with Leon Guggenhammer, one with John Dowsett, and two with Mr.
Howison. Beyond congratulations, they really amounted to nothing; for, as he was informed, everything was going satisfactorily. But on Tuesday morning a rumor that was disconcerting came to Daylight's ears. It was also published in the Wall Street Journal, and it was to the effect, on apparently straight inside information, that on Thursday, when the directors of Ward Valley met, instead of the customary dividend being declared, an assessment would be levied. It was the first check Daylight had received. It came to him with a shock that if the thing were so he was a broke man. And it also came to him that all this colossal operating of his was being done on his own money. Dowsett, Guggenhammer and Letton were risking nothing. It was a panic, shortlived, it was true, but sharp enough while it lasted to make him remember Holdsworth and the bicycle, and to impel him to cancel all buying orders while he rushed to a telephone.

"Nothing in it—only a rumor," came Leon Guggenhammer's throaty voice in the receiver. "As you know," said Nathaniel Letton, "I am one of the directors, and I should certainly be aware of it were such action contemplated." And John Dowsett: "I warned you against just such rumors.
There is not an iota of truth in it—certainly not. I tell you on my honor as a gentleman."

Heartily ashamed of himself for his temporary loss of nerve, Daylight returned to his task. The cessation of buying had turned the Stock Exchange into a bedlam, and down all the line of stocks the bears were smashing.
Ward Valley, as the apex, received the brunt of the shock, and was already beginning to tumble. Daylight candly doubted his buying orders. And all through Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday morning, he went on buying, while Ward Valley rose triumphantly higher. Still they sold, and still he bought, exceeding his power to buy many times over, when delivery was taken into account.
What of that? On this day the double dividend would be declared, he assured himself. The plan of delivery would be on the shorts. They would be making terms with him.

And then the thunderbolt struck.
True to the rumor, Ward Valley leveled the assessment. Daylight threw up his arms. He verified the report and quit. Not alone Ward Valley, but all securities were being hammered down by the triumphant bears. As for Ward Valley, Daylight did not even trouble to learn if it had fetched bottom or was still tumbling. Not stunned, not even bewildered, while Wall Street went mad, Daylight withdrew from the field to think it over. After a short conference with his brokers, he proceeded to his hotel, on the way picking up the evening papers and glance-ing at the headlines. BURNING DAYLIGHT CLEANED OUT, he read; DAYLIGHT GETS HIS; ANOTHER
WESTERNER FAILS TO FIND EASY MONEY.

COMMITTEE MEETS

Body Appointed by Chairman of the Board of Supervisors

Held Meeting in East Jordan - Will Soon Issue Booklet.

"The committee appointed by the chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix county, met at East Jordan on Saturday last and completed plans for the publication of the literature that will be gotten out to boom Charlevoix county. Mr.
Hannington of Charlevoix was elected permanent chairman, Asa Loveday of East Jordan secretary, and S. C.
Smith of Boyne City, treasurer.

"The plan decided upon is absolutely equitable, as each township will have space in the proportion its assessed valuation bears to the entire value of the county, so every township will get exactly what it pays for. Every supervisor in the county will be required and asked to furnish photographs and crop results from his particular township, and it is left to the board of trade of the various cities of the county to write up their respective cities. It is the aim of the committee to have these ready for mailing very soon so that any parties in the south, into whose hands a pamphlet might fall, would have ample time to move up here and begin farming operations early in the spring.

"Further meetings of the committee will be held from time to time at East Jordan where the data will be collected and edited. Boyne City will get nearly thirty-three per cent.
of the whole space, and should have no reason to complaining that it is not represented adequately."

The above which was handed us for publication seems to be fair to all parties mentioned, but, if we have been correctly informed, it will not, in our opinion be very fair to the newspapers of the county, as we are told that the committee will send the book outside the county to be printed.

This may be a wise move, but it would seem to the average newspaper man that inasmuch as the county looks to its own newspapers for support and "boosting" of all kinds that it would be no more than fair for this committee to thoroughly look up the matter at home first and after so doing, if they find that the printers who are forever boosting this county and everything that is in it, are undeserving of their patronage, or for any reason cannot do the work, then we will hold up both hands and say,
"send your county printing to Sears & Roebuck," but if not, we surely think it would be but a fair proposition to at least investigate at home.—Boyne City Journal.

It is undoubtedly the opinion of these men that the half hour work of the book will be more than the printing offices of the county can handle with their equipment. This is true to a certain extent, as few offices outside of the city are equipped to do a half hour work on booklets of this size. But nevertheless, the home printing offices should at least be given the refusal of the work and even if they would have to hire a part of the work done outside, or further, if they had to let the entire printing of the booklet to an outside firm, they are at least entitled to a few dollars commission, considering the amount of time and newspaper space they have donated to the development of the county.—[Ed.]

ROCKEFELLER DESCENDED

Author of Historical Works Says Oil King's Family Came From Plantagenets

GENEALOGISTS are much interested in the family tree provided for John D. Rockefeller by Elroy M. Avery of Cleveland, an author of historical works. This royal pedigree traces the American oil king's descent from a long line of British kings. It starts off with George, duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. of England.
This George was the duke of Clarence who came to an untimely end in a bath of Malmsey wine in the Tower of London. The pedigree runs smoothly enough down to Susan, substantiated by the "Dictionary of National Biography," daughter of the third Earl of Clinton. But then the family is to be transported to America, and in the opinion of Wharton (Dickinson), a well known genealogical authority, here comes the hitch.

No one really knows who married Lady Susan Clinton, as the English records simply state that she took her husband one Humphreys of Kent.
Mr. Rockefeller's genealogist has identified this gentleman with Colonel John Humphrey of the Boston colony, and in so doing, in Mr. Dickinson's opinion, has exhibited considerable boldness. For if the Massachusetts worthy was the husband of the Lady Susan she must have been married at the age of ten at the oldest and had a son when she was eleven.

It is curious that the same difficulty about the age of marriage occurs in a pedigree of the Astor family, set-forth some years ago by authority of William Waldorf Astor. It was known that the first American Astor came from Germany, and his immediate ancestors were peasants of respectable rank. There was also a famous French family of the name of Astor, and the problem was to connect the two stocks. It was done by saying that one of the Astors fled to Germany after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes on account of his faith, and there married a peasant girl. To make this romantic theory fit, however, it was necessary to move forward for thirty years the wedding of a certain Hubert de Basca, daughter of Baron de Peyrasse, to Jacques d'Astorg. This was done with admirable results.

Mr. Avery's Findings.

Here is the pedigree as Mr. Avery gave it out:

George Plantagenet, duke of Clarence, married and had a daughter, Margaret, countess of Salisbury, who married Sir Richard Pole, K. G., and had a son, Henry Pole, Baron Montacute, who married Lady Neville, and his daughter, Catharine Pole, married Francis Hastings, earl of Huntingdon, and had a daughter,
Catherine Hastings, who married
Henry Clinton, second earl of Lincoln.
Thomas Clinton, third earl of Lincoln, their son, married and had a daughter,
Susan Clinton, who married General John Humphrey, sword bearer of the royal justice of trial of Charles I., and afterward lieutenant governor of Massachusetts. Their daughter, Ann Humphrey, married William Palmer, whose daughter,
Susan Palmer, married Oct. 25, 1686, Sir
Elroy Avery, born Aug. 14, 1853.

Their son, Humphrey Avery, born Jan.
1, 1858, married Feb. 2, 1874, Josephine Morgan, whose son, Solomon Avery, born June 17, 1879, married Hannah Ponderson and had a son, Miles Avery, born in 1881 at Zurich, Conn. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and married Marietta Wiley and had a daughter.
Lucy Avery married Godfrey Rockefeller and had a son, William Avery Rockefeller, who married Eliza Davidson and had a son, John Davidson Rockefeller, born July 8, 1839.

Mr. Dickinson's Criticism.

Here is the criticism of Mr. Dickinson:

"Burke's 'Extinct and Dormant Peerage' (1866), page 47, we find:
George Plantagenet, K. G., son of Richard, duke of York, and brother of King Edward IV., was created Duke of Clarence in the year 1453 and, having married the Lady Isabel Neville, daughter and co-heiress of Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, was advanced to those dignities by letters patent dated 25th March, 1452. He was drowned in a bath of Malmsey wine in 1455. His only daughter, Margaret, was beheaded on Tower hill 20th May, 1455.
Her eldest son, Henry Pole, was created Baron Montacute by writ of summons dated 20th January, 1453. He married Jane, daughter of George Neville, Lord Abergavenny, and was beheaded on Tower hill 19th January, 1459. Their daughter, Catharine, was born 1451. His eldest daughter, Catharine, married Sir Francis Hastings, K. G., son and Earl of Huntingdon, in 1452. (Burke's Peerage, 1875, page 321.) He died 23d June, 1454. She died 24th September, 1454. Their eldest daughter, Catherine, married Henry Clinton, second Earl of Lincoln. (See Clinton's Peerage, edition of 1816, volume 2, page 22, and volume 4, page 321.) The earl died Sept. 23, 1466. Catherine was his first wife. Their son, Thomas Clinton, third Earl of Lincoln, born 1374, died Jan.
15, 1425. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Howett of Charlton, County
Wilt, had seventeen children—eight sons, nine daughters. Richard, youngest son, born 1401, his seventh daughter, Susan, married—Humphreys of the County of Kent.

This is absolutely all the information that the English authorities give us.
Now, then, the identification of this John Humphrey, with Colonel John Humfrey of the Boston colony according to the government, who had the following children born in England: First, John; second, Ann; third, Edward; fourth, Sarah,
and the following born in Massachusetts:
Fifth, Theophilus, born Jan. 24, 1632; sixth,
Thomas, born Aug. 2, 1634; seventh, Joseph, born April 5, 1635; eighth, Lydia, born April 22, 1637.

By years of age in 1775, putting him at 151. Now, Thomas, third Earl of Lincoln, was born in 1374. He could not have married much earlier than 1350. His third son and the successor to the title, Theophilus, fourth earl, was nine years of age at his father's death in 1425. (Collin's 2, page 301.) No Susan, the seventh daughter, who married—Humphreys of Kent, could not possibly have been born before 1419 and most likely as late as 1415, and how she could have had a son born in 1453 passes comprehension.

Besides, how about this: In the marriage license of London, 1411-12, 1412, 1413, volume 25 of the Harleian collection in the New York Public library, we find the following on page 144:

"Thomas Sewell of St. Botolph, Alder-London, gent., and Susan Humphrey of same, widow of John Humphrey, of St.
Botolph, Afsd. Sept. 10, 1424."

Once Mr. Avery had overlooked these difficulties that Mr. Dickinson had raised and had assumed the identity of Humphrey of Kent and John Humphrey of Boston his course was plain sailing.

The First Plantagenets.

The name Plantagenet was applied almost posthumously to the family which occupied the English throne from 1154 to 1485, for there is no record of the word being used as a surname prior to 1460. A disputed legend is to the effect that it was first adopted by Geoffrey, count of Anjou, because he wore a sprig of the brown or "planta genista" in his helmet. It is a historical fact that Geoffrey, who was the son of Fulk, count of Anjou, king of Jerusalem, who before his departure for the holy land placed the handsome young count in possession of the counties of Anjou and Maine, brought no surname with him when he went to wed Matilda, daughter of Henry I. of England, nor did he transmit any to his son, Henry II., the founder of the so called Plantagenet dynasty.

Henry II. took from his mother the name of Henry Fitz Empress, by which he was commonly known when his titles were not used, and his descendants remained without a common family name for three centuries—long after surnames had become familiar in England outside of royal families. The first time that the name
"Plantagenet" appears in English records is when Richard, duke of York, desiring to express the superiority of his descent in the blood royal over the Lancastrian line, caused himself to be styled "Richard Plantagenet, commonly called Duke of York."

One Was Executed.

The last legitimate male bearer of the name was Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick, who was executed in 1499.

Except for a famous passage in Shakespeare's play of "Richard III.,"
George Plantagenet, duke of Clarence, would hardly be known today. He was born in 1449, died in 1478 and was the sixth son of Richard, duke of York, and hence the brother of Edward IV. and of Richard III.

After his father's death in 1460 he fought with his younger brother, Richard, at Towton, whence he was brought back on his brother Edward's accession in the following year. Clarence regarded himself as the heir presumptive to the throne. The wars in which this claim played a part, carried on between Edward IV. and Warwick, are matters of history. These were succeeded by the quarrels of the brothers, Richard and Clarence. A deep rooted animosity fed by court gossip grew between Clarence and his brother, Edward IV., which ultimately led to the trial and execution of the former after a long imprisonment for treason. The execution was secretly carried out within the tower on Feb.
17 or 18, 1478. The well informed Croyland chronicler, who was a member of Edward's council, does not mention the manner of death, but three contemporaries writing later agree that he was drowned in a bath of Malmsey wine.

The dynasty of the Plantagenets, therefore, which began with Henry II.
in 1154 and ended with Richard III.
in 1485, but which did not really receive its famous appellation until a quarter of a century before its demise, included as sovereigns Henry II., Richard I., John, Henry III., Edward I.,
Edward II., Edward III., Richard II.,
Henry IV., Henry V., Henry VI., Edward IV., Edward V. and Richard III.

Other more or less famous members of the family were Edward, the Black Prince, whose popular history has unjustly exalted, just as it has degraded Richard III., who, in spite of Shakepeare and the legends of the mardered princes, is now regarded by his biographers as one of the most enlightened and wise sovereigns England has ever had, and George Plantagenet, duke of Clarence, from whom Mr. Avery says he believes Mr. Rockefeller to be descended.

Economy In Feeding.

When feed is short it is economy to feed night and morning in the mangers. The manger saves feed. It makes a little more mature in the larn, but that in itself is worth while.
You are more likely to build the manure on to the larns. A feed plate, and morning in the manger enable you to give the dairy cows a little extra treatment, and this, with the foraging they do during the day with the stock cattle, will give the dairy cows a chance commensurate with the work you expect them to do.

Feed New Corn Slowly.

Continued feeding the new corn or by very slow degrees. Even after the stock become accustomed to eating it, scours are apt to be the result of a generous feeding. Mix a little old grain of some sort with the new product, so thus guard against various digest-disorders which may be caused or exacerbated by the loosening effect of the new corn.

It is reported that $1,000 worth of horses have died in this vicinity during the past ten days. A post mortem operation on one animal revealed quite a quantity of sand in a caked condition in the intestines. This is accounted for by the fact that a severe wind storm the past summer filled the hay and corn fodder with sand, and while the fodder was digested the sand was not. It is thought all the horses died from this cause.—Mancelona Herald.

State Tax Commission's Attention Called to this Point.

Assessor Must Come up to Standard of Cash Value Always.

One of the matters to which the state tax commission will have to give much attention in the next year is that of examining alleged discrimination on the part of local assessing officers, says a Lansing dispatch. It is brought to the capital every now and then from various sections of the state in the shape of stories how this or that supervisor has feathered his political nest by keeping down assessments for certain property owners whose political influence is strong. This is the reason, so it is said, that certain supervisors are sure of election in townships normally a different political complexion from the views of the successful assessing officer. It is said the system is practiced in the lower parts of the state, while up in the newer sections where development and settlement are just beginning, the supervisors have another system, which consists of burdening most of the tax on property of non-residents.

When this proposition was put up to the commission, the members would not discuss it beyond stating that all phases of the situation are receiving attention, which the wise ones say, means that the days of "protected assessments," are about over and that by the time the experts of the commission have gone over the state, the possessors of political pull, who are carefully safeguarded from an undesirable portion of the tax, will find that their scheme is no longer good and that the local assessor must come up to the standard of cash value or get into trouble.

The commission announces that the last review, held in the township of Larkin, Seneca and Warren in Midland county, has resulted in an approximate increase of $300,000. There has also been a revaluation of property in Midland township, Midland county and Spaulding township, Saginaw county in preparation for a review there next spring in case the local assessors do not place the property on the rolls at what the commission considers its equalized cash value.

BURNING DAYLIGHT

By JACK LONDON

Author of "The Call of the Wild," "White Fang," "Martin Eden," etc.

Illustrations by Dearborn Melvill

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co.)
(Copyright, 1910, by the Macmillan Company.)

He passed up to his rooms, ordered a Martini cocktail, took off his shoes, and sat down to think. After half an hour he roused himself to take the drink, and as he felt the liquor pass warmly through his body, his features relaxed into a slow, deliberate, yet ganular grin. He was laughing at himself.

"Hundred, by gosh!" he muttered. Then the grin died away, and his face grew bleak and serious. Leaving out his interests in the several Western reclamation projects (which were still assessing heavily), he was a ruined man. But harder bit than this was his pride. He had been so easy. They had gold-brieked him, and he had nothing to show for it. The simplest farmer would have had documents, while he had nothing but a gentleman's agreement, and a verbal one at that. Gentleman's agreement! He snorted over it. John Dowsett's voice, just as he had heard it in the telephone receiver, sounded in his ears the words, "On my honor as a gentleman." They were sneaky-thieves and swindlers, that was what they were, and they had given him the double-cross. The newspapers were right. He had come to New York to be trimmed, and Messrs. Dowsett, Letton and Guggenhammer had done it. He was a little fish, and they had played with him, ten days—ample time in which to swallow him, along with his eleven millions. Of course, they had been unloading on him all the time, and now they were buying 'Yard Valley back for a song ere the market righted itself.

And Daylight sat and consumed cocktails and saw back in his life to Alaska, and lived over the grin years in which he had battled for his eleven millions. For awhile murder ate at his heart, and wild ideas and sketchy plans of killing his betrayers flashed through his mind. Daylight unlocked his grip and took out his automatic pistol—a big Colt's .44. He released the safety catch with his thumb, and, operating the sliding outer barrel, ran the contents of the clip through the mechanism. The eight cartridges slid out in a stream. He refilled the clip, threw a cartridge into the chamber, and with the trigger at full cock, thrust up the safety catch. He shoved the weapon into the side pocket of his coat, ordered another Martini, and resumed his seat.

At ten o'clock he arose and pored over the city directory. Then he put on his shoes, took a cab, and departed into the night. Twice he changed cabs, and finally fetched up at the night office of a detective agency. He superintended the thing himself, laid down money in advance in profuse quantities, selected the six men he needed, and gave them their instructions. Never, for so simple a task, had they been so well paid; for to each in addition to office charges, he gave a five-hundred-dollar bill, with the promise of another if he succeeded. Some time next day, he was convinced, if not sooner, his three silent partners would come together. To each one two of his detectives were to be attached. Time and place was all he wanted to learn.

"Stop at nothing, boys," were his final instructions. "I must have this information. Whatever you do, whatever happens, I'll see you through."

Returning to his hotel, he changed cabs as before, went up to his room, and with one more cocktail for a nightcap, went to bed and to sleep. In the morning he dressed and shaved, ordered breakfast and the newspapers sent up, and waited. But he did not drink. By nine o'clock his telephone began to ring and the reports to come in. Nathaniel Letton was taking the train at Tarrytown. John Dowsett was coming down by the subway. Leon Guggenhammer had not stirred out yet, though he was assuredly within. And in this fashion, with a map of the city spread out before him, Daylight followed the movements of his three men as they drew together. Nathaniel Letton was at his offices in the Mutual-Solander Building. Next arrived Guggenhammer. Dowsett was still in his own offices. But at eleven came the word that he also had arrived, and several minutes later Daylight was in a hired motor-car and speeding for the Mutual-Solander Building.

(To be continued next week.)

MILLIONS TO BE SPENT IN IRRIGATION WORK.

Attention Is to Be Given to Draining Flooded Sections.

"Seventy million dollars has been expended by the reclamation service since the passage of the reclamation act in 1902, and $18,000,000 is available for use in the next four years, and every cent of that money will in time be returned to the national treasury," was the statement made by Arthur Hooker of Chicago, secretary of the nineteenth national irrigation congress, to convene in Chicago Dec. 5 to 9.

"The work of the next irrigation congress will emphasize the necessity of putting water on dry lands and turning it off swampy and flooded lands," Mr. Hooker said. "Hitherto the work of the irrigation congress has been chiefly in the interests of the reclamation of arid land, but from now on the work of draining flooded lands will receive a large share of our attention. While there are only about 10,000,000 acres of arid land for which water with which to irrigate is available, there are 80,000,000 acres of swamps and flooded land which can be drained and made servicable. The arid land is entirely in the west, but the flooded lands are scattered over the entire country, most being in the Mississippi valley and along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. But every state has tracts of swamps that can be turned into good farm land."

"Under the provisions of the reclamation act of 1902 every cent of money expended in constructing dams and opening land to irrigated farming will be returned to the national treasury. The appropriations are made in the nature of loans to the people. The land reclaimed by the various projects is sold on ten year contracts, at the end of which time the purchasers will have paid for their land and the cost of making it available for farming. There are now twenty-three projects under way from North Dakota to Arizona and westward to the coast. "The $118,000,000 appropriated by congress for reclamation work is a large sum, but private interests are expending several times that amount in reclaiming desert lands."

TAFT TO OPEN APPLE SHOW.

Fruit Growers Exhibit Scheduled For Washington in November.

President Taft is to be invited to open the first apple show, Nov. 27, that has ever been held in Washington.

The exhibit, which is backed by fruit growers of Maryland and Virginia, will be held in the New Masonic temple Nov. 27 to Dec. 2, and will attract the leading apple growers in the south and east, a majority of whom have already entered their names as competitors. It will be conducted by W. P. Thomas, an apple grower of Maryland, who was instrumental in making the national apple show at Spokane, Wash., last year a success.

President Taft will be invited to make an address, while other prominent men in public life, including Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, have also been asked to speak. Dr. Wiley will talk on "The Relation of the Pure Food Law to Fruit Growers."

Five thousand dollars in cash prizes will be given away, while merchants of Washington and the chamber of commerce will donate awards to the exhibitors. Fifty dollars in cash will be given to the woman who can bake the best apple pie, the pie to be presented to President Taft.

LARGEST UNIVERSITY.

Columbia With 30,000 Students Displaces Dartmouth in Leadership.

America now leads the world in the comparative size of educational institutions. Columbia university, having according to registration figures. Although the figures are not final, the number of students at Columbia this year is well in excess of 8,000. Last year the total was 7,201.

All departments of the university have increased in size with the exception of the schools of fine arts and applied science. The slight falling off in these departments has been due to increased entrance requirements. Two of the departments in which the increase is most marked are the summer session, with a total of 2,075 as against 2,032 last year, and the extension teaching where an increase of 172 has been recorded.

The college registration was increased from 675 to 721, the freshmen leading the list with 271 as compared with 257 one year ago. Material gains are shown in the law school, the college of physicians and surgeons and Barnard college.

CHAIR NEARLY 500 YEARS OLD

Ancient Relic of the Binsley Family Again Handed Down.

Princeton, Pa., lost one of the oldest and most remarkable pieces of furniture in America when the famous Binsley armchair was expressed to Hagerstown, Md., the home of Joseph Parker Binsley, who inherited it by the will of his father.

The chair was made in Yorkshire, England, in 1431. It represents the type of architecture popular in those days. It remained in the town of Binsley, named after the ancestors of the present owner, during the reign of twenty English monarchs, from Henry VI. to Victoria. It was brought to America in 1855.

Feeding the Milk Maker.

Maintain the conditions, the same throughout the year as found in the early part of the summer. These conditions are described as follows: An abundance of palatable food, balanced ration, succulent ration, moderate temperature, comfortable surroundings.

The following statements indicate in general the amounts to feed:

Feed all the roughage the cow will eat up clean at all times.

Feed one pound of grain per day for each pound of butter fat produced per week or one pound of grain daily for each three pounds of milk.

Feed all the cows will take without gaining in weight.

TEACHING GOOD ROADS LESSONS

Farmers in Missouri Are Learning at School.

ENGINEER INSTRUCTS THEM.

Novel Method of Trying to Keep Roads in Good Condition by Telling People How to Do It Given a Successful Trial at Columbia, Mo.—Fifty Farmers Attend First Day.

At Columbia, Mo., P. S. Quinn, highway engineer of Boone county, has organized a class in road building. At the first meeting of the class more than fifty farmers, all dressed in their working clothes, assembled in the circuit court room in the county courthouse and sat in a semicircle around the judge's desk. On the bench was Mr. Quinn, acting as professor in the new branch in school instruction. The pupils were the newly elected road overseers.

"Boone county is going to have better roads in the future," was Mr. Quinn's first announcement, "and if you men are to be responsible for the condition of these roads then you must know something about road building yourselves. That's why I have organized this class, and if you show yourselves not pupils there should be no more complaint about the condition of the highways here."

Quinn believes that such a school is necessary if the county is to have good roads. Much of the time of the first session of the class was devoted to acquainting the overseers with the provisions of the road laws. "Promptness" was the keynote of his instructions.

"Ditch your roads right away," he said. "Remove everything from the roads and ditches in spite of what the landowners say; also make the land owners keep their hedges trimmed."

He made it plain to the overseers that they had authority and that he wanted them to make use of it. The men were interested too. Some of them had had trouble with the land owners, and they wanted to know what to do.

"Tell me how to make a single man work on the roads," one suggested.

"Make him do it," make him do it," Quinn replied. "It's like getting blood from a turnip, you make him do it."

"What would you do when you get your roads in good condition and all of your neighbors travel on it in preference to some other and cut it all to pieces?" was the question of another.

"How can you make the rich man do any work?" came from a third man.

Hundreds of similar questions were discussed by the overseers and Quinn all with a view of solving the question of how to improve the country roads. There were instructions as to the use of teams and when to do the work.

Other sessions of the class in road building have been held since the first lesson.

Wilson Grange, No. 719.

The severe storm of November 11 prevented the first meeting of the month, but on the 25th the occasion of the second meeting members to the number of 32 were present with two visitors from Deer Lake Grange.

The new dining hall is so nearly completed that it was utilized at this meeting for the supper which followed. Two new members were given final instructions and three applications were received. The regular business of the grange was transacted and a short but spicy program rendered. The young people especially enjoyed, during the recesses, the extra room provided by the addition of the newly erected 20x32 foot dining hall.

DUAL PURPOSE COWS.

Under Certain Conditions They Are Profitable to Handle.

A great deal has been said and is being written about dual purpose and special purpose cows. Each class has a place. The more any part or function of an animal is developed the more delicate the animal becomes, the better care it needs and the better feed it requires.

Writes W. C. Palmer of the North Dakota Agricultural college in the Breeder's Gazette. The highly developed beef animal or dairy animal is unduly specialized. The dual purpose animal, on the other hand, is left to himself does not produce them. When man produces them to use leaves it for man in care for, feed and provide the conditions necessary for maintaining this unbalanced creature. When these highly specialized animals are given the requisite feed, shelter and care, they serve man's wants much better than the animal nature made; in fact, one of them will do the work of a dozen or more of nature's kind. And they are profitable animals to raise, providing all their wants can be satisfied. If, however, they cannot be given the proper care the less highly specialized animal may be more profitable.

That is the place that the dual purpose cow fills. This animal is, from the standpoint of nature, quite well balanced. The fleshing properties are not so extremely developed, nor is the milk making carried to so high a degree.

The modern Red Poll cow is a result of the combination of the old Norfolk and Suffolk strains, and probably all the herds in existence have more or less blood from each. Individual animals still differ considerably in size, form and quality, according as the Norfolk or the Suffolk type predominates, but it is the aim of the most successful breeders to combine the good qualities of both the old strains and produce a cow of medium to large size, blood red in color, of fine bone, smooth, compact in form—a heavily bodied on short legs—hardy, docile, fattening easily, producing meat of high quality and giving a good flow of rich milk the year round. The Red Poll cow shown herewith is an excellent specimen of the breed.

There is a cow that can be a fairly good milker—sometimes a record breaker—and at the same time is good fleshing properties, so that a steer from her would make a fairly good beef animal and sometimes a prize winner.

The dual purpose animal, while it will respond to the best feed, good stabling and fine care, yet can get along without these better than can the highly specialized animal. Dual purpose cows are less liable to disease so that they should prove best for the farmer to raise who does not feel that he can give as much time and attention to his stock as the best kind of stock might require. Whether this is profitable or not is another question; the point at issue is what a man is going to do, and this he will likely do to quite an extent regardless of profits.

Water For the Horse.

A horse requires less water when his ration consists largely of concentrated feeds than when much coarse fodder is consumed. Less yet, of course, is needed if he is given green succulent feeds. He wastes from twenty-five to ninety pounds of water a day, depending upon the amount of work he has to do.

MORE HELP FOR MICHIGAN FARMERS

State and State Grange Now to Co-Operate

TO KEEP AN AGENT IN NEW YORK

Will Have List of Farmers Who Desire Immigrant Labor

Farmer is Not Getting Too High Prices for Crops, But He is Not Producing What He Should.

Through the co-operation of the state grange and the national bureau of immigration, State Immigration Commissioner A. C. Carton has plans in formation to relieve the lack of farm labor in this state in a way which it is believed will do much for the increased production of Michigan farms and provide for the future as well.

It is expected that within the next few weeks announcement will be made of the selection by the state grange of a representative to go to the port of New York and induce immigrants to come to Michigan farms. As Mr. Carton has formulated the scheme it is very comprehensive. This representative will go to New York clothed with the authority of the state and will be assisted in his work by the federal authorities. He will carry with him, or there will be sent to him a list of farmers in the state who desire to secure immigrant labor, the wages they will pay and whether they can furnish homes and employment for families or simply want a farm hand. The commission will seek out immigrants from the agricultural section of Europe and point out to them the opportunities there are in Michigan and look after matters connected with their trip to this state and settlement in farm homes.

"The farmer is not getting too high prices for his crops, but he is not producing what he should," said Commissioner Carton Monday while discussing his plan. "He is short in production because of lack of help to properly cultivate his farm and with the aid of these immigrants production can be doubled."

In organizing the scheme a granger to each community will be charged with the duty of ascertaining where help is desired, of this character, and how much, not only among the farmers belonging to the grange, but others as well. The lists will be sent to the executive committee of the state grange and forwarded by them to the New York representative. He will select immigrants to meet the requirements and furnish them directions for reaching the farm as well as notifying the farmer of their coming. Not only will this relieve the demand for farm labor, but it is hoped that through these first arrivals the state can get in touch with prospective immigrants in Europe and induce them to come to Michigan. Cards will be furnished and letters for the use of those who desire to write to friends back home and urge them to come to Michigan.

At present there is practically no effort to induce these immigrants to go to the farms. Big contractors have representatives in New York who pick up the immigrants and keep them in the cities except occasionally, and the prospects for success are heightened it is believed, by the backing which the federal bureau of immigration will give the project. T. V. Powderly formerly a labor leader and now chief of the bureau in a letter to Commissioner Carton highly praised the scheme and urged Mr. Carton to come to Washington to confer relatively to it. The commissioner will go to the capital as soon as the details of the plan are arranged with the state grange, which it is expected will be done at the next meeting which will be held in Kalamazoo next week.

Leaders in the state grange have expressed great interest in the project, believing that it will relieve the farmer of the trouble in getting help to a large extent and open up a new era in farming in Michigan.

TWO SHOOTING ACCIDENTS

Thanksgiving Hunting Trips Result in Bad Accidents for Hunters.

Karl Knebler, who lives near Brutus, accidentally shot himself Thanksgiving morning, while he was standing on a stump shooting rabbits. Knebler had his gun resting on his left arm, when during the excitement somehow it slipped and tore the arm in a horrible manner. He was taken to the Petoskey hospital, where the arm was amputated just below the elbow.

Ernest Embody, the 14-year old son of Peter Embody of Epallon, received a charge of shot in his left foot on the morning of the same day while hunting rabbits near his home. He and another boy were hunting together when a rabbit broke cover and both boys fired, young Embody getting the benefit of the shot from the gun in the hands of his friend. He is now at Lockwood hospital, Petoskey, and the foot will be saved.

AUTO TAX LAW

Present Law Very Much in Need of Revision.

Tax Should go to Roads and be Distributed to Counties Paying.

In a recent issue the Grand Rapids Herald has an editorial which appeals strongly to us, touching a method of dealing with the taxation of automobiles which has already been advocated in a general way by the Courier in these columns.

There are three things wrong with the automobile tax as now levied.

1. It is too small.
2. It is not equally levied.
3. It is not fairly distributed.

Under the present law a tax of $3 is charged all motor vehicles and $2 for chauffeurs. The report of Secretary of State Martindale shows that last year 27,133 motor licenses, 4,323 chauffeur licenses, and 1,800 motorcycle licenses were issued, aggregating in the whole $96,170. Of this sum it is claimed that about $21,000 is required for plates, badges, etc., leaving about $75,000 which is turned into the general fund of the state.

It is a matter of general knowledge that every autoist is greatly interested in the good roads question, since good roads are essential. It is also true that autos damage roads to some extent. Besides good roads are a necessity to the farmers all over the state of Michigan. The logical thing then to do with the license fee is to apply it to the building or repair of roads. There is no logical reason whatever why it should go into the general fund of the state for the payment of miscellaneous expenses as it is now doing.

If owners of autos knew that every cent they pay in license was to be used for road building and repair, if they knew further that these taxes would be distributed in the counties where they are paid, they would willingly pay three or four times the sum they now pay. Although perhaps not so vital importance, it would seem that this tax should be graduated somewhat according to the power, or size, or cost of the vehicle.

If the tax were materially increased, and fairly distributed, instead of $75,000 or a $100,000 for general state expenses, there might be at least $300,000 or $400,000 raised every year for road repair in the very localities where the tax is paid. This is no visionary or untried scheme. It is already in use in Ohio, New York and Illinois and, in fact, Indiana seems to be about the only state which still adheres to the antiquated system of putting this tax in the general fund.

COURIER GREAT PIANO CONTEST CLOSING DEC. 15

A Few More Days in which to Work for the Beautiful Piano --- Last Struggle for the Capital Prize Now at Its Height --- Other Prizes.

There are now but a few more days in which the candidates engaged in the Courier popular voting contest have to work for the several prizes offered. The voting comes to an end on Friday, December 15, at 4:00 p. m., and immediately thereafter the count will be commenced to see who shall be declared the winner of the splendid Obermeyer piano and the other useful articles offered to those who are making an endeavor to land the premiums. It is not believed by those who have given the matter careful thought that any particular person has the grand prize cinched at present, but there are several in the race who have a good chance to land it if they only hustle.

If you have not seen the piano offered in this contest, go to S. M. See & Sons furniture store and take a look. Many of our citizens have examined the instrument as to its quality and appearance and there is yet the first one to say it is not a fine one. It is of plain rich mahogany and a prettier piano was never unloaded in Charlevoix. Musicians of the surrounding country have tested it as to its quality of tone and volume and every one of them say it is finer than silk.

There are several young ladies who appear to have the heat of the contest, but none of them have been sure cinch on being the ultimate owner of the first prize. If one of these contestants who is away down the list should take it into her head that she was going to win the big premium, she could easily do so. She would have to work to do it, but that was what was expected when the contest opened. Several bunches of seven new subscribers or renewals in groups of seven would put the lowest candidate in the race among the leaders.

For those who wish to vote with out any competitor seeing them, the Courier desires to state that cash with your subscription, telling where the paper is to be sent and to whom the votes shall be given, can be placed in an envelope and deposited in the ballot box. The judges will open these envelopes as soon as they start to count and will credit all votes including bonuses. In order to secure bonus votes on merchant's coupons, they must be counted at the Courier office before being voted.

Friday, December 15, the voting will cease and the final count will be made that evening. This is but a short time ahead and it is worth the while of the candidates to get among the people and work like Trojans from now until the ballot box closes at 4:00 o'clock p. m. in the afternoon of the day mentioned. No ballots will be received after 4 o'clock under any circumstances, no matter who may have them or what excuse they may present for not getting them in at the proper time. The contest is on the square and there is to be a fair held and no favorites.

In a previous issue of the Courier we announced that the ballot box would be placed in the State Savings Bank and would remain open

WILL MAKE OWN STOVE

Boyer City, Gaylord & Alpena Railroad to Have Plant at Boyer City.

Boyer City is to have a new industry. The Boyer City, Gaylord and Alpena railroad company have decided to manufacture the stoves they use themselves, and the first one was made at the shops in Boyer City last week.

The style of stoves made is for use in the way cars and weigh about 350 pounds, stands five feet in height, and the door is a sliding affair made in a manner so that the jar, when the car is on the road, will not open it.

The stoves will be made for the use of the railroad only and only made when needed. The first one has been made and is now ready for use.

CHARLEVOIX NOT INCLUDED

This City to Wait Another Year for Harbor Improvements.

Estimates for harbor river and harbor work for 1912 aggregate $20,728,908. This estimate has been sent to congress by Secretary of Treasury McVeagh, and President Taft in his message will urge they be strictly adhered to. In this estimate are included Menominee, St. Joseph, South Haven, Saugatuck harbor, and Kalamazoo river, Ludington, Manistee, Portage Lake, St. Mary's river at the falls, Mackinac, Saginaw and Clinton river.

Congressman Dooda has introduced a bill providing for the improvement of the harbor at this city and Elk Rapids, which he will endeavor to have passed independent of the regular rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

ELECTED OFFICERS

Charlevoix Poultry Association Holds Annual Meeting.

Next Exhibition to be Held February 7-8-9. Much Enthusiasm.

The annual meeting of the Charlevoix Poultry Association was held at the council room in the Carnegie library Friday night. Those present, though few in number, were very enthusiastic over the prospects of the coming show, February 7-8-9.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, which was followed by the report of the secretary and treasurer, which showed the association in a good financial condition with membership dues paid to date with the exception of two or three. Officers for the ensuing year were then elected as follows:

President, Samson Godbold. Vice-President, Dr. J. A. Auld. Secretary, G. E. Dutton. Treasurer, E. J. Miller. Executive Committee, R. A. Korth, A. J. Usher, D. F. Meach.

Superintendents, Elmer Johnson and George Cook. Matters pertaining to the February exhibition were taken up, and the action of the officers in securing the services of R. V. Otto of Middleton, as official scorer, was ratified, which of itself is assurance of fair and impartial treatment to all who enter their poultry in this meet.

It was decided that the show would be a strictly score card exhibition and that a disinterested party be secured as clerk to the judge. The executive committee were also instructed to purchase new coops, etc.

Poultry properly cared for is a never failing source of income to the farmer that cannot be overlooked, and when one considers that it costs no more to feed and care for a thoroughbred egg producing fowl, than it does to feed and care for the common barnyard mongrel. The citizens of Charlevoix and vicinity should appreciate the fact that the promoters of this association furnish the opportunity for farmer and poultry lovers to see and become familiar with thoroughbred birds.

Work on the premium list will soon be begun, and additional features will likely be added. The exhibition will undoubtedly be held in the Van Pelt building, next to the Courier office, and all lovers of birds should take an active interest.

TWO LOCAL OPTION VIOLATORS SENTENCED

LOU FOTCHMAN DRAWS SIX MONTHS

At Detroit House of Correction and a Fine of $50.00

Dick Aldafer Also Sentenced to Detroit for Ninety Days with a Fine of $300.00. Violators Warned.

At the September term of circuit court it will be remembered that Lou Fotchman, a former saloon keeper of Petoskey, was found guilty of flagrant violation of the local option law. He appealed to the supreme court, where the lower court was confirmed, and remanded back to Judge Shepard's court for sentence. At an adjourned session of court held Monday, of this week, the judge handed out a $50.00 fine, $80.00 costs and six months at the Detroit house of correction.

Dick Aldafer of Harbor Springs arrested for a like offence, and convicted during the same term of court, was also sentenced to ninety days at Detroit and fined $300.00.

Much satisfaction is expressed by the citizens of Charlevoix and vicinity upon learning of the way the violators of the local option law are being taken care of in the eminent county circuit court. It will doubtless have considerable effect upon future would-be tamperers of the "lid." When these men have paid their fines, costs and lawyer's fees they find a large hole in the summer's profits, in addition to a season of meditation over their non-compliance to the law.

THE SECOND NUMBER

Citizens' Lecture Course Prepares Another Enjoyable Evening

John B. Ratto One of the Most Popular Entertainers on the Road.

John B. Ratto, who gives the second number of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course, is one of the most popular, and pleasing entertainers on the road. He is truly an artist and lives on the stage the character he portrays.

In giving each number he "makes up" in full view of the audience, turning to adjust his wig and the transformation is complete.

He lives out before you the lives of prominent characters and you go away feeling that the world in which you live is large because you are better acquainted with some of the great men who have helped to make the world better.

Ratto has a noble personality, is zealous, gentlemanly, unselfish, he wants to please. He works hard, which explains his success.

AFTER LONG SUFFERING

Miss Arvilla May Adams Succumbs to the Dreaded White Plague.

Arvilla May Adams died Thanksgiving Day at 10:30 a. m. of consumption at the home of her sister, Mrs. Fay Kane of Hayes.

She had been failing since last March, the friends and relatives having very little hope of her recovery.

Miss Adams was but twenty years old, her birthday being last August.

She leaves her father, William Adams, whose home is at Vanderbuilt, Michigan, who owing to illness was unable to attend the funeral, and two sisters, one in Indiana and Mrs. Roy Kane.

The many floral tributes showed the high esteem Miss Adams was held by her many friends.

The funeral services were held at the house, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, by Rev. F. Dewey Elde.

CHAPTER IX.

Nathaniel Letton was talking when the door opened, and with his two companions gazed with controlled perturbation at burning Daylight striding into the room. The free, swinging movements of the traitor were unconsciously exaggerated in that stride of his. In truth, it seemed to him that he felt the trail beneath his feet.

"Howdy, gentlemen, howdy," he remarked, ignoring the unnatural calm with which they greeted his entrance. He shook hands with them in turn, striding from one to another and gripping their hands so heartily that Nathaniel Letton could not forbear to wince. Daylight flung himself into a massive chair and sprawled lazily, with an appearance of fatigue. The leather grip he had brought into the room he dropped carelessly beside him on the floor.

"I've sure been going some," he sighed. "We sure trimmed them beautifully. It was real slick. And the beauty of the play never dawned on me till the very end. It was pure and simple knock down and drag out. And the way they tell for it was amazing."

Letton made a dry sound in his throat. Dowsett sat quietly and waited, while Leon Guggenhammer struggled into articulation.

"You certainly have raised Cain," he said.

Daylight's black eyes flashed in a pleasant way.

"Didn't I, though?" he proclaimed, jubilantly. "And didn't we foot 'em? I was absolutely surprised. I never dreamed they would be that easy."

"And now," he went on, not permitting the pulse to grow awkward, "we all might as well have an accounting. I'm pullin' West this afternoon on that blamed Twentieth Century."

He tugged at his grip, got it open, and dipped into it with both his hands. "But don't forget, boys, when you all want me to hornsawgle Wall Street another flitter, all you all have to do is whisper the word. I'll sure be right there with the goods."

His hands emerged, clutching a great mass of stubs, check-books, and brokers' receipts. These he deposited in a heap on the big table, and dipping again, he fished out the stragglers and added them to the pile. He consulted a slip of paper, drawn from his coat pocket and read aloud:

"Ten million twenty-seven thousand and forty-two dollars and sixty-eight cents is my figurin' on my expense. Of course that's all taken from the winnings before we all get to figurin' on the whack-up. Where's your figures? It must a' been a mighty big clean-up."

The three men looked their bewilderment at one another. The man was a bigger fool than they had imagined, or else he was playing a game which they could not divine.

Nathaniel Letton moistened his lips and spoke up.

"It will take some hours yet, Mr. Harmlah, before the full accounting can be made. Mr. Howison is at work upon it now. We—ah—as you say, it has been a gratifying clean-up. Suppose we have lunch together and talk it over. I'll have the clerks work through the noon hour so that you will have ample time to catch your train."

Dowsett and Guggenhammer manifested a relief that was almost obvious. The situation was clearing. It was disconcerting, under the circumstances, to be sent in the same room with this heavy-muscled, Indian-like man whom they had robbed. They remembered unpleasantly the many stories of his strength and recklessness. If Letton could only put him off long enough for them to escape into the polluted world outside the office door, all would be well; and Daylight showed all the signs of being put off.

"I'm real glad to hear that," he said.

"I don't want to miss that train, and you all have done me proud, gentlemen, letting me in on this deal. I just do appreciate it without being able to express my feelings. But I am sure mighty curious, and I'd like terrible to know, Mr. Letton, what your figures of our winning is. Can you all give me a rough estimate?"

Nathaniel Letton did not look appealingly at his two friends, but in the brief pause they felt that appeal pass from him. Dowsett, at first sterner mold than the others, began to divine that the Klondiker was playing. But the other two were still under the blandishment of his child-like innocence.

"It is extremely—er—difficult," Leon Guggenhammer began. "You see, Ward Valley has fluctuated so, er—"

"That no estimate can possibly be made in advance," Letton supplemented.

"Approximate it, approximate it," Daylight counseled, cheerfully. "It don't hurt if you all are a million out one side or the other. The figures'll straighten that up. But I'm that curious I'm just itching all over. What d'ye say?"

"Why continue to play at cross purposes?" Dowsett demanded abruptly and enviously. "Let us have the explanation here and now. Mr. Harmlah is laboring under a false impression, and he should be set straight."

By this time Letton was stiffened by the attitude. Dowsett had taken, and his answer was prompt and definite.

"I fear you are under a misapprehension, Mr. Harmlah. There are no winnings to be divided with you. Now don't get excited, I beg of you. I have but to press this button."

Far from excited, Daylight had all the seeming of being stunned. He looked at Dowsett and murmured:

"It was your deal, all right, and you all dole them right, too. Well, I ain't kleeing. I'm like the player in that poker game. It was your deal, and you all had a right to do your best. And you done it—cleaned me out allcken a whistler."

He gazed at the heap on the table with an air of stupefaction.

"And that ain't worth the paper it's written on. God dast it, you all can sure deal 'em round when you get a chance. Oh, no, I ain't a-blowin' it was your deal, and you all certainly done me, and a man ain't half a man that squeals or another man's deal. And now the hand is played out, and the cards are on the table, and the deal's over—but—"

His hand, dipping swiftly into his inside breast pocket, appeared with the big coin's automatic.

"Act as saying, the old deal's finished. Now it's my deal, and I'm agoin' to see if I can hold them four aces—"

"Take your hand away, you waited sephelred!" he cried sharply.

Nathaniel Letton's hand, creeping toward the push-button on the desk, was abruptly arrested.

"Change cars," Daylight commanded. "Take that chair over there, you gangrene-livered skunk. Jump, or I'll make you leak till folks'll think your father was a water hydrant and your mother a sprinkling cart. You all move your chair alongside, Guggenhammer; and you all Dowsett, sit right there, while I just irreverently explain the virtues of this here automatic. She's loaded for big game and she goes on eight times. She's a sure hummer when she gets started."

"Preliminary remarks being over, I now proceed to deal. Remember, I ain't making no remarks about your deal."

He dealt. You don't see, and he dealt it was all right. But this is my deal, and it's up to me to do my darndest. In the first place, you all know me. I'm Burning Daylight—savvee? Ain't afraid of God, devil, death, nor destruction. Them's my four aces, and they sure copper your bets. Look at that there living skeleton. Letton, you're sure afraid to die. Your bones is all rattling together you're that scared. And look at that fat jaw there. This little weapon's sure put the fear of God in his heart. He's yellow as a sick person. Dowsett, you're a cool one. You all ain't batted an eye nor turned a hair. That's because you're great on arithmetic. And that makes you all dead easy in this deal of mine. You're sitting there and adding two and two together, and you all know I sure got you skinned. You know me, and that I ain't afraid of nothing. And you all adds up all your money, and knows you ain't a-going to die if you can help it."

"I'll see you banged," was Dowsett's retort.

"Not by a damned sight. When the fun starts, you're the first I plug. I'll bang you right, but you all won't flinch to see it. You all die here and now while I'll die subject to the law's delay—savvee? Being dead, with grass growing out of your carcasses, you won't know when I bang, but I'll sure have the pleasure a long time of knowing you all beat me to it."

"You surely won't kill us?" Letton asked in a queer, thin voice.

Daylight shook his head.

"It's sure too expensive. You all ain't worth it. I'd sooner have my chips back. And I guess you all'd sooner give my chips back than go to the dead-house."

A long silence followed.

"Well, I've done dealt. It's up to you all to play. But while you're deliberating, I want to give you all warning: if that door opens and any one of you cusses lets on there's anything unusual right here and then I sure start plugging. They ain't a soul 'll get out of the room except feet first."

A long session of three hours followed. The deciding factor was not the big automatic pistol, but the certitude that Daylight would use it. Not alone were the three men convinced of this, but Daylight himself was convinced. He was firmly resolved to kill the men if his money was not forthcoming. It was not an easy matter, on the spur of the moment, to raise ten millions in paper currency, and there were vexatious delays. A dozen times Mr. Howison and the head clerk were summoned into the room. On these occasions the pistol lay on Daylight's lap, covered carelessly by a newspaper, while he was usually engaged in rolling or lighting his brown-paper cigarette. But in the end, the thing was accomplished. A suitcase was brought up by one of the clerks from the waiting motor-car, and Daylight snapped it shut on the last package of bills. He paused at the door to make his final remarks.

"There's three several things I sure want to tell you all. When I get outside this door, you all'll be set free to act, and I just want to warn you all about what to do. In the first place, no warrants for my arrest—savvee? This money's mine, and I ain't robbed you of it. If it gets out how you gave me the double cross and how I done you back again, the laugh 'll be on you, and it'll be sure an almighty big laugh. You all can't afford that laugh. Besides, having got back my stake that you all robbed me of, if you arrest me and try to rob me a second time I'll go galling for you all, and I'll sure get you. No little fraudulent little yodall can skin Burning Daylight. If you who you lose, and there'll sure be some several unexpected funerals around this burg. Just look up in the eye, and you all'll savvee I mean business. Them stubs and receipts on the table is all yours. Good day."

As the door shut behind him, Nathaniel Letton sprang for the telephone, and Dowsett intercepted him.

"What are you going to do?" Dowsett demanded.

"The police. It's downright robbery. I won't stand it. I tell you I won't stand it."

Dowsett smiled grimly, but at the same time bore the slender financier back and down into his chair.

"We'll talk it over," he said; and in Leon Guggenhammer he found an anxious ally.

And nothing ever came of it. The thing remained a secret with the three men. Nor did Daylight ever give the secret away, though that afternoon, leaning back in his steno room on the Twentieth Century, his shoes off, and feet on a chair, he chuckled long and heartily. New York remained forever puzzled over the affair; nor could it hit upon a rational explanation. By all rights, Burning Daylight should have gone broke, yet it was known that he immediately reappeared in San Francisco possessing an apparently unimpaired capital. This was evidenced by the magnitude of the enterprises he engaged in, such as, for instance, Panama Mail, by the weight of money and fighting power wresting the control away from Sheftly and selling out in two months to the Harriman interests at a rumored enormous advance.

Back in San Francisco, Daylight quickly added to his reputation. In ways it was not an enviable reputation. Men were afraid of him. He became known as a fighter, a fiend, a tiger. His play was a ripping and smashing one, and no one knew where or how his next blow would fall. His element of surprise was large. He balked on the unexpected, and fresh from the wild North, his mind not operating in stereotyped channels, he was able in unusual degree to devise new tricks and stratagems. And once he won the advantage, he pressed it remorselessly. "As relentless as a Red Indian," was said of him, and it was said truly.

He was a free lance, and had no friendly business associations. Such alliances as were formed from time to time were purely affairs of expediency, and he regarded his allies as men who would give him the double-cross or pull him if a profitable chance presented. In spite of this point of view, he was faithful to his allies. But he was faithful just as long as they were and no longer. The treason had to come from them, and then it was "Ware Daylight."

The business men and financiers of the Pacific coast never forgot the lesson of Charles Klunkner and the California & Altamont Trust Company. Klunkner was the president. In partnership with Daylight, the pair raided the San Jose Interurban. The powerful Lake Power & Electric Lighting corporation came to the rescue, and Klunkner, seeing what he thought was the opportunity, went over to the enemy in the thick of the pitched battle. Daylight lost three millions before he was done with it, and before he was done with it he saw the California & Altamont Trust Company hopelessly wrecked, and Charles Klunkner a suicide in a felon's cell.

So it was that Daylight became a successful financier. He did not go in for swindling the workers. Not only did he not have the heart for it, but it did not strike him as a sporting proposition. The workers were so easy, so stupid. It was more like slaughtering fat, head-reared pheasants on the English preserves. He had Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Webster that the report as read be accepted and the Mayor and the City Clerk be authorized to issue warrants on the City Depositories for $2,970.01 and the clerk be instructed to draw orders on the various funds for the amount of each respective bill.

Motion carried by the following aye and may vote:

Ayes, Swinton, Glasford, Nordrum, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Nordrum that the matter of securing reproductions of the city map showing streets and house numbers be referred to the street committee with power to act. Motion carried.

The matter of the hand boys' petition was referred to the chairman of the Finance Committee and the chairman of the committee on Public Buildings and Parks.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Nordrum that the mayor be instructed to wire Senator Wm. Alden Smith requesting him to use his influence to secure an appropriation of $20,000 for re-ventilation improvements and general upkeep of our city harbor. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Swinton and seconded by Ald. Webster that the City Attorney be instructed to represent the City Council in the matter relative to the closing of streets in Lindsay Park Addition, at the hearing in circuit court, on December 8, 1911. Motion carried.

The mayor presented the following communication to the Council which was read and ordered in writing on the record:

Gentlemen of the Council: I desire to call your attention to a matter which I have given much careful consideration, and that is the desirability of revising our present city charter.

I am sure you will all agree with me that at least some revision is desirable, and I am convinced that the great majority of our citizens are of the same opinion.

A previous council submitted the proposition of abolishing the Board of Public Works to the people, and I believe that the members of our present Board of Public Works are of the opinion that in a city of this size, two bodies are a hindrance rather than a help in the expeditious and efficient management of city affairs. A centralization of authority and responsibility would in my opinion be greatly desirable.

Under the law enacted by the last legislature, the council has the authority to prepare and submit amendments to the charter, and I believe this is a far quicker, cheaper and equally efficient plan than to go to the expense and delay incident to electing a charter commission.

If you agree with this view of the matter, I urge that you pass a resolution directing the appointment of a committee to prepare and submit to this body such amendments to our charter as may be deemed advisable. I would further suggest that the committee consist of two members of the council, two property owners of the city and a chairman to be named by yourself.

Believing that such a move will be of great benefit to the city as a whole, I respectfully ask the adoption of the necessary resolution to put this recommendation into immediate effect.

Will E. Hampton, Mayor.

Ald. Geiken moved the adoption of the following resolution which was seconded by Ald. Nordrum.

Whereas, it is deemed advisable by this council that our city charter be amended and revised; and

Whereas, the law enacted by the last session of the legislature, Act 25, Public Acts 1911, confers the authority to prepare and submit such amendments upon the council of the city; thus avoiding the expense incident to a charter commission; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the common council of the city of Charlevoix that a committee to prepare and submit to our present charter such amendments as may be deemed advisable, be authorized; such committee to consist of the mayor, who shall act as chairman, two councilmen, two aldermen and two property owners of the city to be named by the mayor. Such committee shall serve without pay and shall prepare and submit to this council at their earliest convenience, such amendments to the city charter as they may deem it advisable to bring before the council. It is further understood that this council has the right to amend such report as it may deem proper, before submitting same to the people for ratification or rejection.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the Council, December 5, 1911 by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Swinton, Glasford, Nordrum, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.

There being no further business the Council adjourned.

E. J. HILLER,
City Clerk.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT

Wm. Lemieux Gets Ninety Days at Detroit House of Correction

Carl Cummings Collapses on Witness Stand This Morning.

As we went to press last week the case of Wm. Deadman vs. Geo. Simmerman, assumpsit appeal was in the hands of the jury, who returned a verdict of judgment of $25.00 for the plaintiff.

Boyer City Fanning Co. vs. Travelers Insurance Co., assumpsit appeal, settled matters out of court.

Moxie Spangenberg plead guilty to the charge of violation of the liquor law and will be sentenced the first day of the next term of court. Wm. Lemieux also plead guilty to a like charge and was sentenced to the Detroit house of correction for 90 days.

Jas Padon, up for larceny, but not appearing on the calendar, plead guilty and was sentenced to Detroit house of correction for not less than six months nor more than one year.

The attention of the court is now being given to the case of Carl Cummings vs. The Boyne City Tanning Co. Some time ago Cummings, who was an employee of the Tanning Company, got tangled up in a belt running a fan and lost his arm. He brought suit for damages to the amount of $20,000 and the case is now being brought on.

Cummings was on the witness stand all day yesterday and this morning was again placed on the stand, and was being questioned by Attorney J. E. Converse, when he collapsed. A physician was called and he was taken to his room at the Ferguson House. After the excitement was over another witness was summoned and up to this time the case is in progress.

ACCEPTS NEW CHARGE

Rev. F. Dewey Eble to Leave for Detroit Next Week.

Rev. F. Dewey Eble, who has been pastor of the Baptist church in this city for nearly three years, has accepted the hearty and unanimous call extended him from the Warren Avenue Baptist church, Detroit. Accordingly his resignation was presented and accepted last Sunday, so as to allow him to begin work in his new field the Sunday following, December 17.

Regret is expressed on every side by both those within and without the church at Mr. Eble's departure, yet all are glad of the larger opportunities and advantages this promotion affords both him and his family.

The local church is planning to select another pastor right away.

Before placing your insurance, come and see me, Myrtle Young, 41.

Tax Notice.
To the Taxpayers of the City of Charlevoix: The December tax roll for the city of Charlevoix is now in my hands for collection and the taxes therein levied are payable at my office in the Carnegie Library building on or before January 9, 1912, without charge for collection. On all taxes remaining unpaid on said date excepting the taxes levied in said roll as delinquent city taxes and assessments, a collection fee of 1 per cent will be charged and collected.

My office will be open for the collection of said taxes from 8:30 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1:30 p. m. to 5 p. m. except on Saturdays when the hours will be 8:30 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1:30 p. m. to 6 p. m.

Dated December 6, 1911.

Chinese Music.

The notes of Chinese music read, like the written characters, from right to left, and the intervals of the scale are different from those of the scale adopted by the nation of the west. The music is not very harmonious and sounds meaningless and jangling to western ears, but it has a pretty musical cadence that makes it attractive and interesting in spite of its frequent discords.

read about. The sport, to him, was in waylaying the successful robbers and taking their spoils from them. The grim Yukon life had failed to make Daylight hard. It required civilization to produce this result. In the fierce, savage game he now played, his lightning gentility imperceptibly slipped away from him, as did his lazy Western drawl.

He still had recrudescences of gentility, but they were largely perforce and forced, and they were usually due to the cocktails he took prior to mealtime. In the North he had drunk deeply and at irregular intervals; but now his drinking became systematic and disciplined. It was an unconscious development, but it was based upon physical and mental conditions. The cocktails served as an inhibition. Without reasoning or thinking about it, the strain of the office, which was essentially due to the daring and audacity of his ventures, required check or cessation; and he found, through the weeks and months, that the cocktail supplied a very thing. They constituted a stone wall. He never drank during the morning, nor in office hours; but the instant he left the office he proceeded to rear this wall of alcoholic inhibition against his consciousness. The office became immediately a closed affair. It ceased to exist. In the afternoon, after lunch, it lived again for one or two hours, when, leaving it, he rebuilt the wall of inhibition. Of course, there were exceptions to this; and such was the rigor of his discipline, that if he had a dinner or a conference before him in which, in a business way, he encountered enemies or allies and planned or prosecuted complaints, he abstained from drinking. But the instant the business was settled, his everlasting call went out for a Martini, and for a double-Martini at that, in a long glass so as not to excite comment.

Into Daylight's life came Dede Mason. She came rather imperceptibly. He had accepted her impersonally along with the office furniture, the office boy, Morrison, the chief, confidential, and only clerk, and all the rest of the accessories of a superman's gambling place of business. Had he been asked any time during the first months she was in his employ, he would have been unable to tell the color of her eyes. From the fact that she was a blond, there resided dimly in his subconsciousness, a conception that she was a brunette. Likewise he had an idea that she was not thin, while there was an absence in his mind of any idea that she was fat. And how she dressed, he had no idea at all. He had no trained eye in such matters, nor was he interested. He took it for granted, in the lack of any impression to the contrary, that she was dressed somehow. He knew her as "Miss Mason," and that was all, though he was aware that as a stenographer she was quick and accurate. He watched her leaving one afternoon, and was aware for the first time that she was well-formed, and that her manner of dress was satisfying. He knew none of the details of woman's dress, and he saw none of the details of her neat shirt waist and well-cut tailor suit. He saw only the effect in a general, sketchy way. She looked right. This was in the absence of anything wrong or out of the way.

"She's a trim little good-looker," was

THINK THIS OVER

This Offer Should Gain the Confidence of the Most Skeptical

We pay for all the medicine used during the trial, if our remedy fails to completely relieve you of constipation. We take all the risk. You are not obligated in any way whatever, if you accept our offer. That's a broad statement, but we mean every word of it. Could anything be more fair for you?

A most scientific, common-sense treatment is Rexall's, which are eaten like candy. Their active principle is a recent scientific discovery that is odorless, colorless and tasteless; very pronounced, gentle, and pleasant in action, and particularly agreeable in every way. This ingredient does not cause diarrhoea, nausea, flatulence, griping, or other inconvenience. Rexall's are particularly good for children, aged and delicate persons.

If you suffer from chronic or habitual constipation, or the associate or dependent chronic ailments, we urge you to try Rexall's at our risk. Remember, you can get them in Charlevoix only at our store. 12 tablets, 10 cents; 30 tablets, 25 cents; 80 tablets, 50 cents. Sold only at our store. The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. The back gives out—it aches and pains.

Primary trouble sets in.

Don't wait longer—take Doan's Kidney Pills.

Residents of this vicinity endorse them.

Can Charlevoix people identify the following evidence?

To E. Bristol, 1111 N. East St., H. J. Co., Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at Watson's Drug Store, and have found them to be a remedy of merit. I have been annoyed for some time by a persistent ache and pain in the small of the back. My kidneys did not act as they should. I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and used them as directed. I recommend them, for I am feeling so much better in every way since I used them."

his verdict, when the outer office door closed on her.

The next morning, detailing, he concluded that he liked the way she did her hair, though for the life of him he could have given no description of it. The impression was pleasing, that was all. She sat between him and the window, and he noted that her hair was light brown, with hints of golden bronze. A pale sun, shining in, touched the golden bronze into smoldering fires that were very pleasing. He discovered that in the intervals, when she had nothing to do, she read books and magazines, or worked on some sort of feminine fancy work. Passing her desk, once, he picked up a volume of Kipling's poems and glanced through the pages.

"You like reading, Miss Mason?" he said, laying the book down.

"Oh, yes," was the answer, "very much."

Another time it was a book of Wells, "The Wheels of Chance."

"What's it all about?" Daylight asked.

"Oh, it's just a novel, a love-story."

She stepped, but he still stood waiting, and she felt it incumbent to go on.

"It's about a little Cockney draper's assistant, who takes a vacation on his bicycle, and falls in with a young girl very much above him. Her mother is a popular writer and all that. And the situation is very curious, and sad, too, and tragic. Would you care to read it?"

"Does he get her?" Daylight demanded.

"No; that's the point of it. He doesn't."

"And he doesn't get her, and you've read all these pages, hundreds of them, to find that out?" Daylight muttered in amazement.

Miss Mason was nettled as well as amused.

"But you read the mining and financial news by the hour," she retorted.

"But I sure get something out of that. It's business, and it's different."

"Does he get her?" Daylight demanded.

"No; that's the point of it. He doesn't."

drawn from that particular chapter, and it stung him the more in that they were undeserved. He pumped Morrison, the clerk, who had first to vent his personal grievance against Miss Mason before he could tell what little he knew of her.

"She comes from Siskiyon County. She's very nice to work with in the office, of course, but she's rather stuck on herself—exclusive, you know."

"How do you make that out?" Daylight queried.

"Well, she thinks too much of herself to associate with those—she works with in the office here, for instance. She won't have anything to do with a fellow, you see. I've asked her out repeatedly, to the theater and the chimes and such things, but nothing doing. Says she likes plenty of sleep, and can't stay up late, and has to go all the way to Berkeley—that's where she lives. But that's all hot air. She's running with the University boys, that's what she's doing. She needs lots of sleep, and can't go to the theater with me, but she can dance all hours with them. I've heard it pretty straight that she goes to all their hops and such things. Rather stylish and high-toned for a stenographer, I'd say. And she keeps a horse, too. She rides astride all over those hills out there. I saw her one Sunday myself. Oh, she's a high-flyer, and I wonder how she does it. Sixty-five a month don't go far. Then she has a sick brother, too."

"Live with her people?" Daylight asked.

"No; hasn't got any. They were well to do, I've heard. They must have been, or that brother or hers couldn't have gone to the University of California. Her father had a big cattle ranch, but he got to feeling with mines or something, and went broke before he died. Her mother died long before that. Her brother must cost a lot of money. He was a husky once, played football, was great on horse and being out in the mountains and such things. He got his accident breaking horses, and then rheumatism or something got him into it. One leg is shorter than the other, and withered up some. He has to walk on crutches. I saw her out with him once—crossing the ferry. The doctors have been experimenting on him for years, and he's in the French Hospital now, I think."

All of which side-lights on Miss Mason went to increase Daylight's interest in her. Yet, much as he desired, he failed to get acquainted with her. He had thoughts of asking her to lunch, but his was the innate shyness of the frontiersman, and the thoughts never came to anything. He knew a self-respecting, square-dealing man was not supposed to take his strong-arm to lunch. Such things did not happen. He knew, for he heard the chief's gossip of the club; but he did not think much of such men and felt sorry for the girls.

It was decided to hold the next meeting Monday evening, December 11, and every two weeks thereafter. Every member turn out and bring others with you. Remember the charter will be open until the first of January. The ladies will serve refreshments after the meeting.

FOR YOUR HAIR

Here are Facts We Want You to Prove at Our Risk.

When the roots of the hair are entirely dead and the pores of the scalp are glazed over, we do not believe that anything can restore hair growth.

But, when the hair roots retain any life, we believe there is nothing that will so surely promote hair growth as will Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. To prove that statement, we promise to promptly return all the money you pay us for Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, should it not please you.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic destroys the germs which are usually responsible for baldness. It penetrates to the roots of the hair, stimulating and, by promoting circulation, nourishing them.

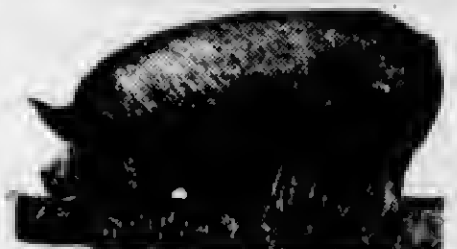

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic helps to relieve scalp irritation, to remove dandruff, to prevent the hair from falling out, and to promote an increased growth of hair. It comes in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1. Remember, you can obtain it only at our store.—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. McNeill, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Agreement

THIS AGREEMENT, made and entered into this twenty-fifth day of November, 1911, by and between the City of Detroit, represented by John L. McDermott, Superintendent of the Detroit House of Correction, duly authorized Agent for and in behalf of said City, party of the first part, and the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, represented by Charles J. Zeidler, Clerk of Board of Supervisors and Daniel S. Payton, Clerk of said board, duly authorized Agent for said County, party of the second part.

Witnesseth that the party of the first part, for and in consideration hereof, the party of the second part, heretofore mentioned, agrees to receive into the Detroit House of Correction, said County, board, cloth and care for, any and all persons who may be sentenced to confinement in the said Detroit House of Correction, by any Court or Magistrate in the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, to-wit: For all persons sentenced for a term of less than four months, one dollar and seventy-five cents per week for the first month, and for any period more than that and less than six months, one dollar and twenty-five cents per week; and for all persons sentenced for one year and over, one dollar per week each. It is hereby agreed by and between the parties hereto, that this agreement shall cover any person or persons who may be sentenced to confinement by any Court or Magistrate in said County for any term less than sixty days, and such person or persons so sentenced shall not be punished by any Court or Magistrate in the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, to-wit: For all persons sentenced for a term of less than four months, one dollar and seventy-five cents per week for the first month, and for any period more than that and less than six months, one dollar and twenty-five cents per week; and for all persons sentenced for one year and over, one dollar per week each. The party of the second part further agrees to furnish the party of the first part an affidavit of the publication of public notice of this agreement in some newspaper published within said County, and in case no paper is published in said County, then an affidavit of the publication of such notice in some newspaper published within the judicial district to which said County is attached, for a period of not less than four weeks, and such notice shall state the period of time for which this agreement will remain in force, as provided for in Section 202, Mich. Compiled Laws 1907.

IT IS FURTHER AGREED by and between the parties hereto, that this agreement shall continue for five years from the 30th day of December, 1911, and shall be binding and in full force to all its intents and purposes, provided that the parties hereto, or either of them, may at any time, and to pay all lawful debts drawn upon the Treasury of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, for board, care, discipline and money expended for return transportation, of persons so sentenced and delivered, according to the terms of this agreement, quarterly, viz: on the first day of January, April, July and October of each year of the continuance of this agreement.

The party of the second part further agrees to furnish the party of the first part an affidavit of the publication of public notice of this agreement in some newspaper published within said County, and in case no paper is published in said County, then an affidavit of the publication of such notice in some newspaper published within the judicial district to which said County is attached, for a period of not less than four weeks, and such notice shall state the period of time for which this agreement will remain in force, as provided for in Section 202, Mich. Compiled Laws 1907.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, We have signed these our hands on the day and year first above mentioned, at Detroit, State of Michigan.

MICHIGAN IS THE BEST PLACE

Says New York Real Estate Man After Investigation.

HAS TRAVELED OVER 31 STATES

And Picks This State as Best Adapted for Fruit Growers.

Michael McLaughlin Says Michigan Fruit Districts Are Worth More Than the Widely Advertised West.

"Michigan apple and agricultural land presents the best opportunity there is in the United States today," said Michael McLaughlin, Brooklyn real estate man, who has just finished a three months' automobile trip through 31 states, in search of the best possible land investments.

The climate, the position, everything make this the best apple state, and I have been so convinced of this that I have secured 10,000 acres and am going to put the greater part of my efforts into developing this and inducing others to get into the same thing. Why, people must be asleep to overlook this thing. I started out with three other men to look over as much of the country as possible, and it was just by chance that I examined the upper part of this state and realized its wonderful possibilities.

Mr. McLaughlin expressed his surprise on being informed that there was no commissioner of agriculture in Michigan.

"If there is a movement now on foot for the establishment of such a department, it certainly should go through. And once you get such an official, he should be supported. A commissioner of agriculture must be backed up by dollars. One of his biggest duties is to let other people know the great advantages of the state.

"Look at New York for instance. That is the state with which I am most familiar. When a commissioner was first put into office there, his hands were tied and his usefulness crippled. But for the last two years he has been allowed some money for advertising and has informed people all over the middle west what the lands of his state are good for. The result has been an increase in the value of land.

"The same thing would apply in Michigan, only more so, for this is away from the east and investors would not hesitate to such an extent before putting their money into land development. The western states where land is so high, are right at hand and it will be an easy matter to bring capital and men from there to work the vast areas of upper Michigan.

"Out in Oregon land that is not yet irrigated brings $500 an acre, and it is not as good as Michigan land which does not need irrigation and can be bought for little more than the yearly expense of irrigating a similar area.

"Surprises were encountered all along the line. To me, the condition of Michigan lands was the greatest favorable surprise, while I was disappointed in the widely advertised west. Apple lands demand big prices there simply because they have been boomed, while whole counties of naturally better soil lie neglected in this state. What is wanted for the hardy fruits is cold, steady weather, the same as for wheat. Freezing and thawing knock out the trees. New York is a better fruit state than Pennsylvania, because its climate is more even. Michigan has even a better fruit climate. The snow keeps the fields and orchards covered, regularly and when spring comes, it comes in a hurry and comes to stay.

"The soil and climate are also the most favorable to wheat, hay and for dairying, and I think those branches will also be taken up to a great extent as soon as the land is cleared and the people get busy. I expect to get a heavy machine in on my land and do heavy stump pulling and cleaning up in a thorough manner. Then I will start some orchards.

"I know that the people of the east and the remainder of the country, who are looking for a place to go into the fruit raising business, don't know that there are thousands of acres of land which are now sold from $7 to $10 an acre. That is what I paid for the three tracts I bought. "I confess that I have been disappointed in the far west, but this state appealed to me as by far the best of the 31 visited, for cultivation of hardy fruits, wheat and hay, and I left my companions at Cincinnati and came up here to get land, while they went on."

With Mr. McLaughlin on the three months' automobile trip were Bert Danley and Frank Crothers, both of New York, who were also looking for the best agricultural investments in the country. A prominent New York companioned them.

AUCTION SALES.

Everyone who has used the Courier advertising endorses it. Why? Because it is the only paper in the county which covers the field thoroughly. You will make no mistake by advertising your auction sales in this paper.

This week on page 2 will be found the sale of Mrs. Rachel Gravelin, 8 miles southwest of Charlevoix on the Norwood road. Sale begins at 10:30 o'clock. W. E. Byers, auctioneer. W. I. Ractow, clerk.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Prominent Charlevoix Young Lady and Owosso Business Man

Miss Winifred Bartholomew and Edward Carr United in Wedlock.

On Thursday, December 14, at high noon, occurred the marriage of Miss Winifred Bartholomew, daughter of L. D. Bartholomew and wife of this city, and Mr. Edward Carr of Owosso, Michigan, at the home of the bride's parents on Michigan avenue.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. M. Taylor and took place in a large window, banked with palms. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white crepe de chine, trimmed in very rich white lace and carried bridal roses. The matron of honor was Mrs. F. L. Bartholomew of Chicago, who wore a pale yellow satin gown, trimmed in small yellow roses. The groom was attended by H. L. Crosby of the Soo. Master Leonard Bartholomew was ring bearer, and did his part very gracefully. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Mrs. Yutzy of Ann Arbor.

The rooms were all darkened and the lighting was very effective, all lights being shaded in red, and the whole house decorations were of amilax and red carnations.

The dining table was most artistically arranged with red candles and shades, while in the center stood a large bouquet of red carnations.

Dainty refreshments were served to one hundred guests all seated at the same time.

The bride is a well known and popular Charlevoix girl, while the groom is a prominent business man of Owosso, having dealt in the real estate and loan business for several years.

The out of town attendants were H. L. Crosby, wife and son of the Soo; J. W. Dingwall, wife and daughter of Ithaca; Mrs. Maurice L. Johnston of Detroit; Mrs. Dr. S. M. Yutzy of Ann Arbor; Ira Adams and wife of Bellaire; and F. L. Bartholomew and family of Chicago.

One important feature of this wedding was that thirty-three years ago that day, the bride's parents took the same vows, so that congratulations were in order for them as well.

Mr. and Mrs. Carr left the same day for an extensive trip, after which they will spend the winter in California.

Will Have Banquet.

The next regular meeting of the Women's Relief Corps, auxiliary to G. A. R., will occur January 11, 1912, at I. O. O. F. hall, at 2:30 p. m. The G. A. R. and their wives, also widows of G. A. R. and all corps ladies and their husbands are invited to a banquet and installation in the evening. A nice program will follow the installation.

CHRISTMAS AMONG CHARLEVOIX CHURCHES

Plans Well Under Way for Special Exercises as Well as Gift Laden Trees for Young.

As in seasons past the coming of Christmas will bring about special exercises in most of the churches of the city. There will be no union service, as each church has planned a service of its own. Those which have planned special exercises are the Methodist, Congregational, Baptist and Episcopal.

Outside of the churches, preparations are going on in nearly every private home in the city to make the Christmas season so near at hand a happy one.

Below are the programs for the various churches as far as completed at this date:

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The Christmas exercises of the Congregational church will take place Saturday evening. It will be a cantata, given under the direction of Mrs. Peter Vandermade, entitled "Santa's Prescription." Besides the cantata, Mrs. John Burns' class will sing two very pretty songs. The cantata is partly patriotic and partly Christmas.

The chief characters are as follows:

Santa Claus—Robert Bridge.
Mother Santa—Elizabeth Putnam.
Uncle Sam—Rev. Putnam.
Columbia—Mrs. A. L. Coulter.
Little Nicholas—Bruce Armstrong.
The States are represented as follows:

North—Perry Mason.
South—Vern Nowland.
East—Helen Parsons.
West—Ralph Coulter.

There are two scenes to the play, the first a fireside scene, in which Uncle Sam, Columbia and the States are the chief characters, while Santa appears in the latter part and gives prescriptions which is the cause of harmony throughout. Then, little Nicholas and mother Santa appear and spend Christmas with Uncle Sam and Columbia.

In the second scene all of the states are in evidence and after the singing of patriotic songs the cantata is ended with a good-night song.

METHODIST CHURCH.

A Christmas cantata, "Santa Claus' Election," will be given by the M. E. Sunday school at the Methodist church, Saturday night, December 23, under the direction of Mr. James Wilkinson. Santa Claus is chosen president and Mother Goose vice-president, and the friends of Santa and many of the well known Mother Goose characters appear in support of their respective leaders. Some of the characters are as follows: Santa Claus—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson. Mother Goose—Hattie Bon. Santa's Friends:

Minnie—Helen Marting.
Harold—Kenneth Jacobs.
Thomas—Judy Lynn.
Kate—Wilma Stevenson.
Harry—Jack Supernaw.
Chairman—Fannie Siminaw.
Mother Goose Characters:
Peter, Pumpkin Eater—Mr. Will Washburn.
Bo Peep—Hildegard Wilkinson.
Jack Spratt—Allen Arnold.
Mrs. Spratt—Marcia Goss.
Boy Blue—Charlie Newkirk.
Jack Horner—King Saunders.
Curly Locks—Clara Wilkinson.
Jack—Mr. Pearce.
Jill—Lula Taylor.

The following is a list of characters of the cantata:

Simple Simon—Mrs. Floyd Bettes.
Hot Cross Buns—Mrs. Stevenson.
Mary, Quite Contrary—Mrs. James Wilkinson.
Mother—Grace Shapton.
Daughter—Gladys Taylor.
Sleepy Head—Vera Goss.
Slow—Blanche Hall.

Other characters:

Crier—Lawrence Dittelson.
Tiptoe—Margaret Saunders.
Woman's Rights—Dora Arnold.
Fairies, brownies, etc.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The program for the Baptist church to be held Sunday evening, December 24th, will be an informal one, consisting of songs, recitations and dialogues after which the tree will be in evidence and the distribution of the presents will take place.

The Christmas exercises of the Episcopal church will occur Saturday evening, at 7:30.

NEW PENSION BILL

Soldiers to be Given a Fine Boost if the Bill Passes.

Advocates of increased pension for veterans of the civil war have been battling on the floor of the house for the past two weeks and finally the Sherwood "dollar a day" pension bill was pushed through the house last Wednesday.

The Sherwood bill would grant $15 a month to those who served more than ninety days, but less than six months; $20 a month for a service up to nine months; $25 a month for a service up to one year, and $30 a month for a service more than one year. No pension is to be allowed veterans who have incomes exceeding $1,000 a year.

Every Michigan member of congress, whether republican or democrat, will vote for pension legislation when the roll is called. The republicans, seeing that the democrats are likely to reap great credit with the old soldiers for the coming presidential year, are trying to demonstrate that they still are the great friend of the soldier.

WINDOW DISPLAYS

Charlevoix Merchants to be Commended on Holiday Showing

Holiday Shoppers Can Surely Find What They Seek in Charlevoix.

Christmas, the happiest time of the year, is again at our doors and with this memorable time comes the untiring efforts of our business men to put forth every energy and produce some commendable window displays. A short visit through our business districts will soon avail anyone whose mind is a blank as to what to buy a friend, sweetheart, wife or other numerous relatives, a pleasing token of the glorious Yuletide. Charlevoix has stores arranged on the Metropolis plan and each owner will gladly compete with any outside firms during the happy Christmas season.

Suppose we take a visit to the stores all along the busy thoroughfare of our little city.

We leave the postoffice and go into the Levinson's store. Each of the big windows has a Christmas tree trimming and on the trees are found gifts both large and small. The whole store sets forth an array of Yuletide's unceasing splendor. Crane's next on the trip will greet your eyes with a brilliancy of the window display of pretty silks, etc. The interior too will merit the same beauty and anxiety for useful gifts that appeal to all.

The County Bank will offer you joyful tidings by making your pennies, which have accumulated into dollars, smile at you, as well as the bank force, and will accommodate accounts both large and small. Chapel's store has an array of books, music rolls, toilet sets, etc., in the window that will suggest a wonderful opportunity to the bargain and gift purchaser.

Fred G. Bellinger has a window display of beautiful rings and bracelets. On close examination you are sure to be pleased with the bargains offered.

Shawley's too is the toyland of the city, with its numerous games, toys, playthings, etc., hung on the evergreen trees in the front windows.

Black's store offers to you the best and freshest of meats and groceries and their window does justice to the beauty of the interior, where the goods are arranged on the shelves.

Benj. Brown has a window filled with trunks, suitcases, etc., that will be pleasing to all. Even the blank—

BIG ATTENDANCE AT BIBLE CLASS

Seventy-Five Members Present at Meeting Held Sunday

COMMITTEE ON BY-LAWS REPORT

Work of Committee to be Passed Upon at Next Meeting

One of the Best Organizations in City.—R.
W. Kane to Address Class on Subject of Vital Interest.

The Charlevoix Men's Bible class had its banner attendance last Sunday, 75 men being present. The class was addressed by A. L. Coulter, revenue collector of this district, who spoke for forty minutes and had the rapt attention of every man every minute of the time.

R. W. Kane will address the class next Sunday on a subject of vital interest. Mr. Kane has an established reputation for forceful speaking and his talk the coming Sunday will interest the class thoroughly. There will also be special singing by the "boysingers," which is always looked forward to by every class member. One of the liveliest features of these meetings is the singing by every member of the class, all of whom take an active part.

That the bible class is one of the best organizations in the city is unquestioned. In plain words, men who have never taken an active part in church work, and further, who have seldom attended religious services, are among its leaders and regular attendants. One fact which the class wishes fully understood is that its membership is open to all, and desires all to know that the fact of being a member of some religious denomination is not necessary for one to join. It is open to (Continued on page 4.)

MISS ADAMS WINNER

Captures Courier Contest Piano by 255,800 Majority

Entire Number of Ballots Cast Will Run Over Two and Half Million.

The Courier's grand prize piano contest closed Friday at 4:00 o'clock and the final verdict as to the winners was awaited with much interest by the contestants. Promptly at four o'clock the ballot box was closed at the bank by contest judges DeVoe, Rachow and Feltz, and brought to the Courier office, where they immediately proceeded to make the final count, which resulted in Miss Edith Adams winning the general prize by a majority of 255,800 votes, her total vote being 1,202,525.

Mrs. Lee Smith, who had been a hard and earnest worker during the contest, was second with a total vote of 916,725. Both young ladies wish at this time to express their sincere thanks to their many friends who so loyally supported them.

The merchants' prizes will be awarded the coming Saturday at one o'clock p. m., according to the standing of each candidate. Candidate No. 2 will have the first choice, No. 3 the second, and so on down through the list. It will be impossible for the Courier management to award a prize unless the candidate is here at the time set, for the reason that each make their own choice after the preceding candidate has selected her premium. Make it a point to be here or send a representative to make the choice for you.

Below is given in tabulated form the standings of the 13 prize winners:

CHAPTER XII.

Instead of returning to the city on Monday, Daylight rented the butcher's horse for another day and crossed the head of the valley to its eastern hills. As on the previous day, just for the joy of it, he followed cattle-trails at haphazard and worked his way up toward the summits. Coming out upon a wagon road that led upward, he followed it for several miles, emerging in a small, mountain-enclosed valley, where half a dozen poor ranchers farmed the wine-grapes on the steep slopes. Beyond, the road pitched upward. Denae chaparral covered the exposed hillsides, but in the creases of the canyons huge spruce trees grew, and wild oats and flowers.

Into the afternoon he broke through, and followed a well-defined trail down a dry canyon. The dry canyon gave place to one with a slender ribbon of running water. The trail ran into a wood-land, and the wood-land emerged across a small flat upon a slightly traveled country road. There were no farms in this immediate section, and no houses. The soil was meager, the bed-rock either close to the surface or constituting the surface itself. Manzanita and scrub-oak, however, flourished, and walled the road on either side with a jungle growth. And out a runway through this growth a man suddenly scuttled in a way that reminded Daylight of a rabbit.

He was a little man, in patched overalls; bareheaded, with a cotton shirt open at the throat and down the chest. The sun was ruddy-brown in his face, and by it his sandy hair was bleached on the ends to peroxide blonde. He signed to Daylight to halt, and held up a letter.

"If you're going to town, I'd be obliged if you mail this," he said.

"I sure will," Daylight put it into his coat pocket. "Do you live hereabouts, stranger?"

But the little man did not answer. He was gazing at Daylight in a surprised and steadfast fashion.

"I know you," the little man announced. "You're Elam Harnish—burning Daylight, the papers call you. Am I right?"

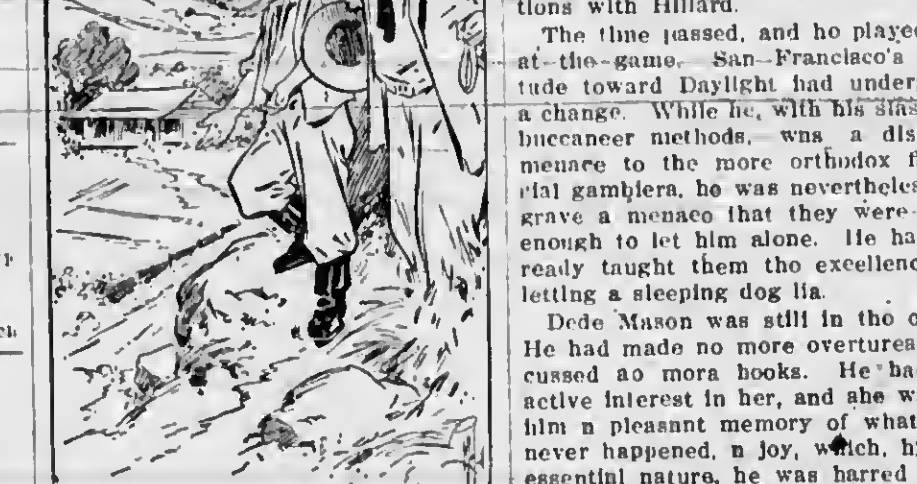

Daylight nodded.

"Well, I'm glad I wrote that letter this afternoon," the little man went on, "for else I'd have missed seeing you. I've seen your photo in the papers many a time, and I've a good memory for faces. I recognized you at once. My name's Ferguson."

"Do you live hereabouts?" Daylight repeated his query.

"Oh, yes. I've got a little shack back here in the bush a hundred yards and a pretty spring, and a few fruit trees and berry bushes. Come in and take a look. And that spring is a dandy. You never tasted water like it. Come in and try it."

Walking and leading his horse, Daylight followed the quick-stepping, eager little man through the green tunnel and emerged abruptly upon the clearing. It clearing it might be called, where wild nature and man's earth-scratching were inextricably blended. It was a tiny nook in the hills, protected by the steep walls of a canyon-mouth. Here were several large oaks, evidencing a richer soil. The erosion of ages from the hillside had slowly formed this deposit of fat earth. Under the oaks, almost buried in them,

"What Do You Think of It, Eh?"

stood a rough, unpainted cubia, the wide veranda of which, with chairs and hammocks, advertised as out-of-doors bedchamber. Daylight's keen eyes took in everything. The clearing was irregular, following the patches of the best soil, and every fruit tree and berry bush, and even each vegetable plant, had the water personally conducted to it. The tiny irrigation channels were everywhere, and along some of them the water was running. Ferguson looked eagerly into his visitor's face for signs of approbation. "What do you think of it, eh?"

"Hand-reared and maintained, every

the more he thought he knew of her, the more unapproachable did she seem to him. But since he had no intention of approaching her, this was anything but an unsatisfactory fact. He was glad he had bar in his office, and hoped she'd stay, and that was about all.

Daylight did not improve with the passing years. The life was not good for him. He was growing stout and soft, and there was unwonted flabbiness in his muscles. The more he drank cocktails, the more he was compelled to drink in order to get the desired result, the inhibitions that eased him down from the concert pitch of his operations. And with this went wine, too, at meals, and the long drinks after dinner of Scotch and soda at the Riverside. Then, too, his body suffered from lack of exercise; and, from lack of decent human associations, his moral fibers were weakening. Never a man to hide anything, some of his escapades became public, such as speeding, and of joy-rides in his big red motor car down to San Jose with companions distinctly sporty—incidents that were narrated as good fun and comically in the newspapers.

HOW TO MAKE COUNTRY EARTH ROADS BETTER.

Work First and Talk Afterward. Make a Drag and Use It.

First. Go to work yourself talk afterward. This is a log eight feet long and eight inches thick, split in half, back together by diagonal stakes thirty inches apart, with the split sides facing the front. Fasten a chain to each end of the front log, hook a team to the middle of the chain, get the drag out on the country road after a rain and start in to haul the drag over the road at an angle of forty-five degrees, moving the dirt from the side gutters to the center of the road.

BITE—SAWING LOG TO MAKE ROAD DRAG. LOWER—USING ROAD DRAG.

If you do this work yourself you will learn more about how to make country earth roads better in two hours than anybody could tell you in print in fourteen weeks.

The second thing to study the needs of the little stretch of road upon which you actually do your work. Make that stretch of road a model of a good roadway in every particular. See to it that every individual who drives over your road becomes a talking advertisement for highway improvement. If you must blast out rock to afford good drainage for the side gutters along your road why blast them out. Don't wait to talk about it. Earth and water spell mud, and you can't get rid of water until the water has the right slope of a drainage channel to carry it off.

Third—if you will let no obstacle discourage you and if you will keep steadily on, plugging ahead as the old tortoise did in its race with the hare, which slept by the wayside thinking because of its slowness it could overcome the slow going tortoise; if you make the improvement of country earth roads a study of pleasure and a sort of philanthropic religion, your achievements for highway betterment will be swift and sure throughout whichever country district you may work.

OILING ROADS KILLS FLIES.

Massachusetts Man Says Tarvia Destroys the Eggs and Larvae.

A Lenox (Mass.) entomologist asserts that the absence of flies along oiled highways is due to the destruction of the eggs and larvae by the application of tarvia and the byproducts of oils which are being used to prevent dust. After conducting a series of experiments the Lenox man has found that there is almost a total absence of the stable or biting fly.

The Lenox experimenter says that tarvia has practically killed the breeding places of the stable fly and that there are fewer houseflies.

Since it has been established that typhoid germs are carried by flies, also Asclad, cholera, and that there is strong evidence that the fly is also the carrier of tuberculosis and other diseases, the discovery that oiling highways lessens the common fly and almost entirely exterminates the stable fly appears to be of the highest importance.

all whether church members or not. Further, it should be understood, that the class is no sense a rival of any of the churches, but occupies a field which has up to this time been left uncultivated.

A committee appointed to draft by-laws last Sunday submitted its report, recommending the following which will be considered next Sunday:

BY-LAWS.

Article 1.—Name of Class: This class shall be known as the Men's Bible class of Charlevoix.

Article 2.—Object: The object of the class shall be the study of the bible including social and economic questions, the betterment of society and mutual helpfulness.

Article 3.—Membership: All men over 18 years of age may become members by attending the class and signing the membership roll.

Article 4.—Officers: The officers shall consist of a leader, president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who shall be elected semi-annually on the first meeting in May and November. They shall be elected by ballot and shall hold office until the next semi-annual meeting after their election or until their successor shall have been chosen.

Article 5.—Committees: The following standing committees shall be appointed by the president: Membership, social and advertising and such other committees as the work of the class shall demand. Each committee shall be composed of five members. The officers of the class and the chairman of all standing committees shall compose an executive committee.

Article 6.—Meetings: The class shall meet every Sunday at 12:00 o'clock for one hour in the Carnegie library building, or such place as may be provided for by the executive committee. The first ten minutes will be devoted to music and devotional exercises; the second ten minutes to current business of the class; twenty minutes or more for the leader, and the balance for the discussion of the subject by the class. Special meetings may be called by the executive committee. Five enrolled members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, three of which shall be members of the executive committee.

Article 7.—Duties of the Officers and Committees: The leader shall have charge of the subject, or provide a substitute and shall be ex-officio member of all committees. Section 2. The president shall preside at all meetings and shall be the general executive officer. He shall be chairman of executive committee and ex-officio member of all committees.

Section 3. The vice-president shall in the absence of the president perform the duties belonging to the president's office and shall render such other assistance as may be required by the president.

Section 4. The secretary shall have charge of the records of the class, keep the minutes of all meetings and shall make a record of the attendance of the members each Sunday and report the same to the class and shall enter in the minutes the receipts and disbursements and show the balance on hand each Sunday.

Section 5. The treasurer shall have charge of all the moneys and shall pay them out as directed by the class upon orders drawn by the president and secretary. He shall at the first meeting of each month file with the secretary a report of the receipts and disbursements showing the balance on hand.

Section 6. The executive committee shall have general supervision of all the class work. They shall devise ways and means of advancing the interest of the class and of increasing its attendance.

Section 7. The membership committee shall be responsible for securing new members and looking up absentees.

Section 8. The social committee shall be responsible for greeting, welcoming and introducing new members and visitors. They shall provide such socials and entertainments as the class may approve.

Section 9. The advertising committee shall have charge of advertising the class and shall provide ways and means to reach strangers and travelers.

Article 8.—Amendments: Amendments to these by-laws may be made by a majority vote at a regular meeting of the class, notice of which having been given one week in advance or by a unanimous vote at any regular meeting.

Article 9.—Anything not herein provided for shall be considered as referred to the executive committee with power to act.

STATE GRANGE MEETING

Hot Session Closed Saturday—Meet at Soo Next Year.

The Soo will entertain members of the State grange next year. This was decided upon after a lively scramble in which several cities participated.

The meeting closed Saturday and from all reports was an exciting one. Three members of the executive committee, J. C. Ketchum of Barry county, W. F. Palmer of Gratiot county and W. F. Baker of Cheboygan, were elected, Baker and Palmer succeeding themselves.

It was voted to have an advisory vote next year of the 37,400 grange members for state master and members of the executive committee.

One of the last acts was to adopt resolutions authorizing the grange to ask President Taft to remove Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, because the latter presided at the recent brewer's convention.

CITIZEN'S LECTURE COURSE

Third Number, January 2, 1912.—Hon. Lee Francis Lybarger.

The third number of the Citizen's Lecture and Entertainment Course will occur Tuesday evening, January 2, and will be given by Hon. Lee Francis Lybarger, known as the "Patrick Henry" of the lecture platform.

The lectures of Mr. Lybarger are real contributions to human thought. No one of intellectual habits can hear him without pleasure and profit. He is endowed with a great intellect, his thought is inspiring and strong. His lectures are free from the distressing conventionalities of thought and expression that characterize the work of a mere compiler. He has the courage of conviction and his lectures are messengers of truth and light.

Of strong personality and pleasing voice, with an articulation of words that is distinct and charming, Mr. Lybarger fits the platform as a glove the hand. In this his native element, he is doing a work that must redound to the general uplift and enlightenment of humanity.

The reserved seat sale for Lybarger's lectures will begin December 20, 7:00 p. m. at Chapel's.

FAKE INTERVIEW

Entirely Misrepresents Cong. Dodds' Position on Reciprocity.

Stands Exactly Today Where He Did When He Voted Against It.

Several Michigan papers quote a fake interview with Hon. F. H. Dodds, of this district, published in the Washington Post and afterwards in the Detroit News of November 20, in which Mr. Dodds is made to say that those who were leaders in condemning Canadian reciprocity will be found foremost for President Taft; also there is no sentiment in Michigan whatever for Senator LaFollette.

The Herald is authorized by Congressman Dodds to say that he saw no representative of either of said papers after his return to Washington, and has never expressed the sentiment therein set forth to anyone, and has said nothing upon which such an interview could be based. The whole article is pure fabrication on the part of those who first published it, he says he made no such statement or any part of it.

Congressman Dodds did not agree with President Taft on reciprocity, and voted against the measure. He stands now just where he stood then, and says he knows of no new converts to reciprocity in this district.—Gratiot County Herald.

THE RAG DOLL

By O. Henry

HERE are no more Christmas stories to write. Fiction is exhausted; and newspaper items, the next best, are manufactured by clever young journalists who have married early and have an engagingly pessimistic view of life. Therefore, for seasonable diversion, we are reduced to two very questionable sources—facts and philosophy. We will begin with whichever you choose to call it.

Children are pestilential little animals with which we have to cope under a bewildering variety of conditions. Especially when childish sorrows overwhelm them are we put to our wits' end. We exhaust our pearly store of consolation; and then heat them, scolding, to sleep. Then we grovel in the dust of a million years, and ask God why. Thus we call out of the rat-trap. As for the children, no one understands them except old maids, bunbakes, and shepherd dogs.

Now come the facts in the case of the Rag-Doll, the Tatterdemon, and the Twenty-fifth of December.

On the tenth of that month the Child of the Millionaire lost her rag-doll. There were many servants in the Millionaire's palace on the Hudson, and these ransacked the house and grounds, but without finding the lost treasure. The Child was a girl of five, and one of those perverse little beasts that often wound the aensibillities of wealthy parents by fixing their affections upon some vulgar, inexpensive toy instead of upon diamond-studded automobils and pony phaetons.

The Child grieved sorely and truly, a thing inexplicable to the Millionaire, to whom the rag-doll market was about as interesting as Bay State Gas; and to the Lady, the Child's mother, who was all for fern—that is, nearly all, as you shall see.

The Child cried inconsolably, and grew hollow-eyed, knock-kneed, spinning, and corymbiverty in many other respects. The Millionaire smiled and tapped his coffers confidently. The pick of the output of the French and German toymakers was rushed by special delivery to the mansion, but Rachel refused to be comforted. She was weeping for her rag child, and was for a high protective tariff against all foreign foolishness. Then doctors with the finest bedside manner and stop-watches were called in. One by one they chattered futilely about septomanenates of iron and sea voyages and hypophosphites until their stop-watches showed that Bill Renshaw was under the wire for show or place. Then, as men, they advised that the rag-doll be found as soon as possible and restored to its mourning parent. The Child sniffed at therapeutics, chewed a thumb, and waited for her Betsy. And all this time cablegrams were coming from Santa Claus saying that he would soon be here and enjoining us to show a true Christmas spirit and let up on the contrition and tonine pellets and phony systems long enough to give him a welcome. Everywhere the spirit of Christmas was diffusing itself. The banks were refusing loans, the pawnbrokers had doubled their gang of helpers, people humped their shins on the streets with red sleds, Thomas and Jeremiah bubbled before you on the bars while you waited on one foot, holly-branches of hospitality were hung in windows of the stores, they who had been getting out their furs. You hardly knew, which was the heat bet in balls—three, high, moth, or snow. It was no time at which to lose the rag-doll of your heart.

If Doctor Watson's investigating friend had been called in to solve this mysterious disappearance he might have observed on the Millionaire's wall a copy of "The Vampire." That would have quickly suggested, by induction, "A rag and a bone and a bank of hair." "Flip," a Scotch terrier, next to the rag-doll in the child's heart, frisked through the halls. The bank of hair! Ah! X, the unfound quantity, represented the rag-doll. But, the bone? Well, when dogs find bones they—Done! It was an easy and a fruitful task to examine Flip's fore feet. Look, Watson! Earth—dried earth between the toes. Of course the dog—but Sherlock was not there. Therefore it devolves. But topography and architecture must intervene.

The Millionaire's palace occupied a lordly space. In front of it was a lawn close-mowed as a South Ireland man's face two days after a shave. At one side of it and fronting on another street was a pleasure trimmed to a leaf, and the garage and stables. The Scotch pup had ravished the rag-doll from the nursery, dragged it to a corner of the lawn, dug a hole, and buried it after the manner of careless undertakers. There you have the mystery solved, and no check to write for the hypodermic wizard or fl-pun notes to toss to the sergeant. Then let's get down to the heart of the thing, threesome render—the Christmas heart of the thing.

Fuzzy was drunk. Not riotously or helplessly or lequaneously, as you might get, but decently, appropriately, and inoffensively, as becomes a gentleman down on his luck.

Fuzzy was a soldier of misfortune. The road, the haystack, the park bench, the kitchen door, the litter round of eleemosynary beds-with-shower-bath-attachment, the petty pickings and ignobly garnered largesse of great cities—these formed the chapters of his history.

Fuzzy walked toward the river, down the street that bounded one side of the Millionaire's house and grounds. He saw a leg of Betsy, the lost rag-doll, protruding, like the clue to a Lilliputian murder mystery, from its untidy grave in a corner of the fence. He dragged forth the maltreated infant, tucked it under his arm, and went on his way crooning a song of his brethren that no doll that has been brought up to the sheltered life should hear. Well for Betsy that she had no ears. And well that she had no eyes save unseeing circles of black; for the faces of Fuzzy and the Scotch terrier were those of brothers, and the heart of no rag-doll could withstand twice to become the prey of such fearsome monsters.

Though you may not know it, Grogan's saloon stands near the river and near the foot of the street down which Fuzzy traveled. In Grogan's, Christmas cheer was already rampant.

Fuzzy entered with his doll. He fancied that as a mummer at the feast of Saturn he might earn a few drops from the wassail cup.

He set Betsy on the bar and addressed her loudly and humorously, seasoning his speech with exaggerated compliments and endearments, as one entertaining his lady friend. The inofers and bibbers around caught the force of it, and roared. The bartender gave Fuzzy a drink. Oh, many of us carry ragdolls.

"One for the lady?" suggested Fuzzy impudently, and tucked another contribution to Art beneath his waistcoat.

He began to see possibilities in Betsy. His first-night had been a success. Visions of a vaudeville circuit about town dawned upon him.

In a group near the stove sat "Pigeon" McCarthy, Black Riley, and "One-ear" Mike, well and unfavorably known in the tough neighborhood district that blackened the left bank of the river. They passed a newspaper back and forth among themselves. The item that each sold and blurted out pointed out was an advertisement headed "One Hundred Dollars Reward." To earn it, one must return the rag-doll lost, strayed, or stolen from the Millionaire's mansion. It seemed that grief still ravaged, unchecked, in the bosom of the too faithful Child. Flip, the terrier, capered and shook his absurd whiskers before her, powerless to distract. She walked for her Betsy in the faces of walking, talking, manning, and eye-closing French Mabelles and Viollettas. The advertisement was a last resort.

Black Riley came from behind the stove and approached Fuzzy in his one-sided, parabolic way. The Christmas mummer, flushed with success, had tucked Betsy under his arm, and was about to depart to the filling of impromptu dates elsewhere.

"Say, 'Bo,' said Black Riley to him, "where did you cut out that doll?" "This doll?" asked Fuzzy, touching Betsy with his forefinger to be sure that she was the one referred to. "Why, this doll was presented to me by the Emperor of Beloochistan. I have seven hundred others in my country home in Newport. This doll—"

"Cheese the funny business," said Riley. "You swiped it or picked it up at de house on de hill where—but never mind dat. You want to take fifty cents for de raga, and take it quick. Me brother's kid at homo might ha wantin' to play wid it. Hey—what?"

He produced the coin. Fuzzy laughed a gurgling, insolent, alcoholic laugh in his face. Go to the office of Sarah Bernhardt's manager and propose to him that she be released from a night's performance to entertain the Tackytown Lyceum and Literary Coterie. You will hear the duplicate of Fuzzy's laugh.

Black Riley gauged Fuzzy quickly with his blueberry eye as a wrestler does. His hand was itching to play the Roman and wrest the rag Betsy from the extemporaneous merry-andrew who was entertaining an angel unaware. But he refrained. Fuzzy was fat and solid and big. Three inches of well-nourished corporeity, defended from the winter winds by dingy linen, interspersed between his wadded trousers. Countless small, circular wrinkles running around his coat-sleeves and knees guaranteed the quality of his bone and muscle. His small, blue eyes, bathed in the moisture of altruism and woolziness, looked upon you kindly yet without abashment. He was whiskerly, whiskerly, freshly formidable. So, Black Riley temporized.

"Wo'll you take for it, den?" he asked.

"Money," said Fuzzy, with husky firmness, "cannot buy her."

He was intoxicated with the artist's first sweet cup of attainment. To set a faded-blue, earth-stained rag-doll on a bar, to hold mimic converse with it, and to find his heart leaping with the sense of plaudits earned and his throat scorching with free libations poured in his honor—could base coin buy him from such achievements. You will perceive that Fuzzy had the temperament.

Fuzzy walked out with the gait of a trained sealion in search of other cafes to conquer.

Though the dusk of twilight was hardly yet apparent, lights were beginning to spangle the city like pop-corn bursting in a deep skillet. Christmas eve, impatiently expected, was peeping over the brink of the hour. Millions had prepared for its celebration. Towns would be painted red. You, yourself, have heard the horns and dodged the ciphers of the Saturnallians "Pigeon" McCarthy, Black Riley and "One-ear" Mike held a hasty conversation outside Grogan's. They were narrow-chested, pallid striplings, not fighters in the open, but more dangerous in their ways of warfare than the most terrible of Turks. Fuzzy, in a pitched battle, could have eaten the three of them. In a go-as-you-please encounter he was already doomed. They overtook him just as he and Betsy were entering Grogan's Casino. They deflected him, and shoved the newspaper under his nose. Fuzzy could read—and more.

"Boys," said he, "you are certainly damn true friends. Give me a week to think it over."

The soul of a real artist is quenched with difficulty. The boys carefully pointed out to him that advertisements were soulless and the deficiencies of the day might not be supplied by the morrow.

"A cool hundred," said Fuzzy thoughtfully and mushily.

"Boys," said he, "you are true friends. I'll go up and claim the reward. The show business is not what it used to be."

Night was falling more surely. The three tugged at his sides to the foot of the rise on which stood the Millionaire's house. There Fuzzy turned upon them acrimoniously.

"You are a pack of putty-faced beagle-hounds," he roared. "Go away. They went away—a little way."

In Pigeon McCarthy's pocket was a section of two-inch gas-pipe eight inches long. In one end of it and in the middle of it was a lead plug. One-half of it was packed tight with solder. Black Riley carried a slung-shot, being a conventional thug. "One-ear" Mike relied upon a pair of brass knuckles—an heirloom in the family.

"Why fetch and carry," said Black Riley, "when some one will do it for you? Let him bring it out to us. Hey—what?"

"We can chuck him in the river," said "Pigeon" McCarthy, "with a stone tied to his feet."

"Youse guys make me tired," said "One-ear" Mike sadly. "Ain't progress ever appealed to none of yez? Sprinkle a little gasoline on 'im, and drop 'im on the Drive—well?"

Fuzzy entered the Millionaire's gate and zigzagged toward the softly glowing entrance of the mansion. The three goblins came up to the gate and lingered—one on each side of it, one beyond the roadway. They fingered their cold metal and leather, confident.

Fuzzy rang the door-bell, smiling foolishly and dreamily. An ntavistic instinct prompted him to reach for the button of his right glove. But he wore no gloves; so his left hand dropped, embarrassed.

The particular mental whose duty it was to open doors to sills and faces chided at first sight of Fuzzy. But a second glance took in his passport, his card of admission, his surfeit of welcome—the lost rag-doll of the daughter of the house—dangling under his arm.

Fuzzy was admitted into a great hall, dim with the glow from unseen lights. The breezing went away and returned with a mild and the Child. The doll was restored to the mourning one. She clasped her lost darling to her breast; and then, with the inordinate selfishness and candor of childhood, stamped her foot and whined hatred and fear of the odious being who had rescued her from the

A Christmas Lesson. If the full meaning of Christmas time and its message of good will and all-embracing charity has not come to you, a stroll through the poorer quarters of a city, or falling that, a glance at such a picture as this—photograph of a scene in the New York ghetto—should bring the lesson home. It is the children's season, but the children of the poor often have little part in it. They cannot so much as hope for the beautiful toys displayed in the windows of the big shops, and even the modest stock of the push-cart man is beyond the means of many of these little ones.

Ironton grange, No. 707, met in regular session in their hall, Tuesday, December 11, with Master H. E. Cohle in the chair.

Two candidates were found waiting and duly initiated in the third and fourth degrees. One application was received for membership.

For the good of the order the special committee on entertainment brought up the subject of having a stage put in the hall, so as to have a suitable place for the play, which is being prepared as fast as possible. The following committee was appointed for the purpose of erecting the stage: Neil Kemp, Frank Hammond and Will Tunoth. Ironton grange will have a masquerade dance on New Year's night Monday, January 1, 1912, under the charge of the following committee: Frank Hammond, Martin Peterano and Matthew Saunders.

The ladies organized a basket ball team and their first game was set for Friday, December 15. They will meet again Tuesday evening, December 19, to practice.

Lecture hour consisted of songs, readings and stories. Sixty members and one visitor were present.

Election of officers will be Tuesday, December 26. Every member of Ironton grange is requested to be present. Grange closed in form.

MORTGAGE TAX LAW

Specific Tax Should be Paid Before January 1st

Otherwise They Will be Taxed Under Old Law—Facts to Remember.

A large number of owners of mortgages have taken advantage of the new law by paying the specific tax of one-half per cent which renders them thereafter exempt from taxation.

Mortgages on which the specific tax is not paid by January 1 will become subject to taxation under the old law. In case a part of the mortgage may have been paid the owner can make affidavit to the amount remaining unpaid and pay a tax of one-half per cent of such amount after which payment the mortgage is not subject to further taxation. As to mortgages of record or which will be recorded before January 1, it is optional with the holder whether he pays the taxes under the new mortgage tax law, but if the specific tax is not paid by January 1, the mortgage becomes taxable under the general tax law.

No mortgage given before January 1, 1912, has any legal standing until after it is recorded and the tax of one-half per cent is paid as provided by the new law. The provision does not apply, however, to mortgages recorded before January 1. In most cases it will be cheaper for mortgage holders to pay specific tax of one-half per cent before January 1 than to let them become taxable by default under the general tax laws, once the specific tax is paid, no further taxes need be paid during the life of the mortgage.

All losses are promptly paid in full by the insurance companies I represent, Myrtle Young. 14

IMPORTANT DECISION

Destroys Effectiveness of the County Salary Law.

A board of supervisors may not require a register of deeds to turn into the county treasury fees granted him by law because the county is paying the register a salary, according to an opinion handed down in the supreme court Friday in a case instituted by the register of deeds of Ingham county.

The decision destroys the effectiveness of the county salary law, it is believed. The court refers to the constitutional provision which says county supervisors may pay salaries in lieu of fees "not otherwise provided by law," and this clause, the court says, limits the authority of the board and authorizes the register to collect and retain such fees as he is entitled to under statutory provision. It is understood that about 30 counties in the state are affected by the decision.

THE CARE OF A YOUNG ORCHARD

Paper Written by E. O. Ladd of Old Mission

CRITICAL PERIOD IN LIFE OF TREE

Is From Time Taken from Nursery
Till Established in Orchard

Advises Fruit Growers to Get Trees in Fall—Preparation of Soil of Great Importance.

This topic would naturally begin with a young orchard already set out and take it along up to the bearing age, but so much of the success in growing an orchard depends on previous conditions that I want to go back a little and briefly speak of the location, preparation of the soil, selection and planting of the trees. The influences of heredity and environment are as strong in plant as in animal life, hence the necessity of getting trees from reliable sources, propagated from stock having the bearing habit, young thrifty well-rooted and true to name.

The most critical period in the life of a fruit tree is from the time it is taken from the nursery until it is thoroughly established in its permanent place in the orchard. I like to get the trees in the fall if possible, but them in during the winter and have them ready to set in the spring as soon as the soil can be got into proper condition for planting. The preparation of the soil is of great importance. It should be under a good state of cultivation, being well supplied with humus and available plant food. If the soil is not in proper tith better wait a year or two and get it in ideal condition before planting the trees.

I believe it is of great importance that trees be well anchored to the soil, and to this end would favor rather deep planting, somewhat deeper than they stand in the nur-ery; then by cultivation during the growing season which I believe is the only method that should be practiced in a very young orchard, we encourage the roots to go down deeper than they otherwise would. We all know that a large portion of the trees that leave the nursery never live to grow and become profitable producers of fruit. This is due I think largely to carelessness in handling and planting and neglect during the first two or three years.

There are two things that every man who has the care of a young orchard should keep always in mind and strive to accomplish.

First to get a uniform even growth each year and as large a growth as is consistent with the thorough maturing of the new wood so as to maintain a healthy and vigorous condition of the trees. This to the end that when they shall have attained the bearing age they shall also have the size and bearing surface that will enable

A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR TO YOU ALL

The Courier Extends the Season's Greetings to Its Host of Readers and Friends—Synopsis of Coming Year.

To the readers of the Courier and thought from Chicago plate houses all our friends we desire to say, "A Happy and Prosperous New Year."

We thank you for the encouragement and support you have given us, and feel sure of your continued interest in the success of your home paper, and in promoting the welfare of our beautiful city and county of wonderful opportunities.

The past year has been one of rapid development for not only the City of Charlevoix, but the entire county, and let us hope that the year we are about to enter will be still better for us all.

The Courier starts the year 1912 with the largest subscription list of any weekly newspaper published in the county. It has been the aim of its present owners to make it the leading and best weekly paper in the county and we have succeeded far beyond our fondest hopes, and our aim and purpose for the years to come will be not only to continue to make the Courier the leading newspaper, but one which will be second to none in Northern Michigan as an educational factor and of influence in the betterment of those engaged in agricultural pursuits.

One of the leading features is the grange column, not plate matter and Prosperous New Year.

WHEN THE NEW YEAR STARTS HIS RACE AGAINST TIME.

A WATCH MEETING EPISODE by WILLIS HAWKINS

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

FOR seven mortal years on end
Sim Lucas courted Mary Burr
Till folks begun to apperhend
He wouldn't never capture her.
Yit Sim he stuck an' hung to it
An' swore, by jing, he'd never quit
Till she give in an' named the day
When she'd love, honor an' obey.

HE'D dog her ev'rywhere she'd go.
No other feller got a chance
To take her out to any show
Or party, festival or dance.
Or allus of a Sunday night
We'd see the same familiar sight
Of Sim a-waitin' by the door
To take her home f'm church once more.

THE women all took sides with Sim.
An' some talked plain to Mary Burr.
A-sayin' they regarded him
As jes' the fittin' man fer her.
But Mary wouldn't budge a peg.
She jes' sot back an' let him beg
Till somep'n happened Noo Year's eve
That all us men could hardly b'lieve.

WATCH meetin' had begun awhile
When with a sort o' gallus stride
Sim come a-marehin' down the aisle
With Sallie Goodwin at his side.
An' when, as if not seein' her,
They sot in front of Mary Burr
All round the church the women folks
Grinned like it was the best of jokes.

NEX' mornin' Mary chanced to meet
With Sim (I guess she made the chance).
An' there, right out upon the street,
She ast him to the leap year dance.
Then Sim walked with her to her gate,
An' on her way she sealed her fate.
That's how one weddin' come about
Through watchin' of the old year out.

ELECT NEW OFFICERS

Beulah Home to be Looked After by New Set of Men.

Rev. Holden A. Putnam of this City One of New Directors.

The charter of the Beulah home expired two years ago and until lately has been running without a charter. But now the new officials which were elected in October will take charge of the home and it is expected that the place will soon regain its old time prestige and become once more a home for boys that people everywhere will feel an interest in and the people of Boyne City especially will feel proud to have located in their midst.

Although there has been so much criticism of the Home for many months past, there is not a doubt in my mind of any thinking man but that this place for homeless boys has been the means of saving hundreds of walls from lives of sin and degradation. Boys that would most surely have grown up as outcasts in the slums of the great cities and many of them who are now leading good and useful lives would have been inhabiting prison cells instead of enjoying the freedom and happiness that belongs to them now as the result of being trained to live a life free from crime.

The following directors and officers have been chosen to watch over the destinies of the home.

President, W. H. Hill, of Detroit; Vice President, J. M. Hall, the head of the Bay View Association; Secretary, H. L. Swift; Treasurer, A. B. Kline, President of the Kline Lumber Co., of Petoskey; Directors, Rev. C. M. Glass, pastor of the Evangelical church at Boyne City; Prof. Morley E. Osborn, of Hastings; Rev. Holden Putnam, Congregational minister of Charlevoix, and J. L. Hudson of Detroit, Boyne City Journal.

PETOSKEY POULTRY SHOW

Dates Changed to Better Accommodate Farmers in Vicinity.

The dates of the Emmet County Poultry Association's show have been changed from January 31, February 1 and 2 to February 1, 2 and 3. This was done in order to have Saturday included in the dates of the show, so the farmers may have a better opportunity to enter the contests and to attend the exhibits.

The place for holding the show has not yet been decided upon.

CEREMONY WAS MOST IMPRESSIVE

Hampton-Washburn Nuptials Solemnized at Methodist Church.

TWO HUNDRED GUESTS WERE PRESENT

Attachment Formed During Their Early School Days

Both Bride and Groom Have Lived Here all their Lives and Have Best Wishes of Their Many Friends.

Charles Harold Hampton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Will E. Hampton, and Miss Lorraine May Washburn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Washburn, were united in marriage at the M. E. Church in this city Tuesday evening, December 26th, in the presence of nearly two hundred invited guests.

The ceremony, which was performed in an impressive manner by Rev. E. M. Taylor, was the prescribed ring ceremony of the Methodist church, and was very beautiful throughout.

The guests were all seated at 6:30, when Miss Madeline Mullen struck the opening chords on the piano of the bridal chorists from Lady and the singers marched in, singing as they came. The bride's procession followed the minister, groom, Hugo Hampton as man of the hour, and the ushers, Mr. Wilbur of Chicago, and Mr. J. K. Hilton, of St. Louis, advancing from the study, while from the try came the bride's party, led by Miss Anna Francis and Miss M. Cress as bridesmaids, Miss Margery Washburn, sister of the bride as maid of honor, while little Margaret Washburn, her niece, acted as ring bearer, and little Miss Clara Marie Wilkinson was flower girl. Then followed the bride, leaning on her father's arm.

The groom met the bride at the altar as the closing stanzas of the bridal chorists floated through the church. At the minister's question, "Who gives this woman away?" the bride's father placed his daughter's hand in that of the young man soon to be her husband, and at this impressive moment the words of "O, Promise Me," beautifully sung by Mrs. W. J. Rachow, floated out over the heads of the bridal party.

The ceremony over, the immediate family offered congratulations and then the newly wedded pair led the procession to the parlors, where the guests extended congratulations and best wishes, after which light refreshments were served.

The most difficult part of a newspaper man's work is to describe the gowns at a function of this kind, but, coached by a lady who knows about such things, we ascertained that the bride wore an empire gown with demi-train of crepe meteor and cream messaline, trimmed with pearl garnishments and white silk fringe, a veil of Brussels net with pink and white roses embroidered thereon, carried white bridal roses and narcissus, and wore a bridal wreath of smilax on her brow. It is not difficult, however, to say that she made a most charming and beautiful bride.

"Best on Earth"

This is the verdict of R. J. Howell, Macy, Ohio, who bought Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for his wife. "Her case was the worst I ever saw, and looked like a sure case of consumption. Her lungs were sore and she coughed almost incessantly and her voice was hoarse and weak. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound brought relief at once and less than three bottles effected a complete cure."

Without opiates or harmful drugs of any kind Foley's Honey and Tar Compound stops coughs and cures colds. Do not accept any substitute. Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

CLARION

[Too late for last week.]

J. E. Darragh went to Lansing on Tuesday.

Dr. Howe of Boyne Falls was in town Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are visiting their niece, Mrs. Kennedy.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dread disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for full particulars.

William Hair expects to start for Canada some time this week, where he will work for his uncle.

Quite a number of persons from Burgess attended grange at Naple Grove Tuesday evening.

Burgess school was closed for the holiday vacation a week sooner than expected, on account of the illness of the teacher.

GET TO THE CAUSE

The Charlevoix People are Learning the Way.

There is but little peace or comfort for the man or woman with a bad back. The distress begins in early morning—keeps up throughout the day. It's hard to get out of bed, and it's torture to stoop or straighten. Plasters and liniments may relieve, but cannot cure. The cause is inside—the kidneys. When suffering so, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the tested and proven kidney remedy, used in kidney troubles for over 35 years. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of such cases. Proud in the testimony of a nearly resident:

Mrs. R. M. McKeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix Mich., says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. I doaned quite badly and had weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I obtained Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they have given me relief in every way."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

COUNTY NORMAL.

Thursday afternoon the Normal class made candy for the entertaining and little treat for the training room children. We were quite successful in making the different kinds of candy such as fudge and tondant.

Friday afternoon the Normal students are invited to the training room. The children will give their Christmas program after which the children were invited to the normal room to hear a short program given by the Normal class. The program was as follows:

Holy Night—Class.

Divine Shepherd—Miss Margaret Manger.

Under the Stars—Duet.

After Christmas—A Selection by Myrtle Pearl.

We received our pictures from the state library last Tuesday. We were fortunate in getting such a good collection of pictures as we were rather late in sending for them. The pictures are: The Divine Shepherd, Suzanne Haggens, The Princess in the Tower, The Deliverer and Burgoyne's Surrender.

The students living out of town and those living in other towns have gone to their several homes for Christmas vacation.

Foley's Kidney Pills

Are tonic in action, quick in results. A special medicine for all kidney and bladder disorders. Henry Bower, Traverse City, Mich., says: "Since the first of the year I have been a very sick man. Have spent a lot of money in doctoring, have bought various kidney medicines and used them but to no effect. Foley's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice through a friend and I decided to try them. After using them a short time I was greatly relieved and can honestly say that they did me a world of good." Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

Succulent Feed For Lambs.

Recent experiments at the Iowa station show that with corn at ordinary prices, cheaper gains on lambs may be made with dry feed than with roots or silage. When corn and silage are low in price the gains made with silage are a little cheaper than those made with dry feed.

The largest total gains were made by the lambs getting sugar beets, and the bulk of this too was also a little better. The lot getting turnips and cut hages required the largest amount of dry matter for each 100 pounds gain. Silage and dry feed came next.

The least amount of dry matter was required where sugar beets and manure were fed. The chief objection to manure and sugar beets is the large amount of hand labor required to raise them.

Grading Up the Dairy Herd.

If you cannot have pure bred dairy cows breed to some pure bred male and secure good grade animals. There is an ever increasing demand for good grade heifers and cows. Keep all of the heifers for your own use or for sale. Buyers will come to your door for them if you have any good ones.

New Road to Cost $199,750. The county commissioners of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., have made application to the court for permission to build a new road between Wilkes-Barre and Hazleton by way of White Haven. The road will be twenty and one-half miles long, and the estimated cost is $199,750.

Literary Notes

The January Woman's Home Companion.

The January Woman's Home Companion contains a mass of good reading and practical suggestions. Among the special articles worthy of particular notice are the following: "The Girlhood of Three Famous Princes"; "Turning the Leaf," an inspiring New Year's sermon by Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle in New York City; "Is the American Man a Failure?"—a most illuminating presentation of an important subject; "Adventures in Economy," being the story of a woman of fifty, suddenly deposed from a life of luxury and compelled to earn a living for her family.

Peculiar distinction and good human interest is contributed by Mary Stewart Cutting, Zona Gale, W. J. Lampson, Mary Hastings Bradley, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Hubert Foadner and others.

The art features are unusual. One of them is a full-page reproduction in color of a new painting of great beauty made by Mary Ellen Sigbee. It is a charming picture of a mother and her child, and is so reproduced that readers can remove it from the magazine and frame it.

The special departments in which the Companion is noted are full of entertaining and useful material of all kinds. These departments include suggestions along the lines of housekeeping, home decoration and other subjects. No review, however brief, is complete without mention of the fashion department, which, conducted by the well-known expert, Grace Margaret Gould, has attained a high reputation for interest, usefulness and authority.

CHAPTER XIII.

One Sunday, late in the afternoon, found Daylight across the bay in the Piedmont hills of Oakland. As usual, he was in a big motor car, though not his own, the guest of Swiftwater Bill, back's own darling, who had come down to spend the clean-up of the seventh fortune wrung from the frozen Arctic gravel. It was a merry party, and they had made a merry day of it, circling the bay from San Francisco around by San Jose and up to Oakland, having been thrice arrested for speeding, the third time, however, on the Haywards stretch, running away with their captor. Fearing that a telephone message to arrest them had been flashed ahead, they had turned into the back-road through the hills, and now, rushing in upon Oakland by a new route, were bolterously discussing what disposition they should make of the constable.

"We'll come out at Blair Park in ten minutes," one of the men announced. "Look here, Swiftwater, there's a cross-road right ahead, with lots of gates, but I'll take us back-country into Berkeley. Then we can come back into Oakland from the other side, sneak across on the ferry, and send the machine back around tonight with the chauffeur."

But Swiftwater Bill failed to see why he should not go into Oakland by way of Blair Park, and so decided. The next moment, flying around a bend, the back-road they were not going to take appeared. Inside the gate, leaning out from her saddle and just closing it, was a young woman on a chestnut sorrel. With his first glimpse, Daylight felt there was something strangely familiar about her. The next moment, straightening up in the saddle with a movement he could not fail to identify, she put the horse into a gallop, riding away with her back toward them. It was Dede Mason—he remembered what Morrison had told him about her keeping a riding horse, and he was glad she had not seen him in this riotous company. Intervening trees at that moment shut her from view, and Swiftwater Bill plunged into the problem of disposing of their constable, while Daylight, leaning back with closed eyes, was still seeing Dede Mason gallop off down the country road.

On Monday morning, coming in for dictation, he looked at her with new interest, though he gave no sign of it; and the stereotyped business passed off in the stereotyped way. But the following Sunday found him on a horse himself, across the bay and riding through the Piedmont hills. He made a long day of it, but no glimpse did he catch of Dede Mason, though he even took the back-road of many gorges and rode into Berkeley. It had been a fruitless day, so far as she was concerned; and yet not entirely fruitless, for he had enjoyed the open air and the horse under him to such purpose that, on Monday, his instructions were out to the dealers to look for the best chestnut sorrel that money could buy. At odd times during the week he examined numbers of chestnut sorrels, tried several and was unsatisfied. It was not till Saturday that he came upon Bob. Daylight knew him for what he wanted the moment he laid eyes on him. A large horse for a riding animal, he was none too large for a big man like Daylight. In splendid condition, Bob's coat in the sunlight was a flame of fire, his arched neck a jeweled configuration. Daylight examined the mane and found it finer than any horse's hair he had ever seen. Also, its color was unusual in that it was almost asburn. While he ran his fingers through it, Bob turned his head and playfully nuzzled Daylight's shoulder.

"Saddle him up, and I'll try him," he told the dealer. "I wonder if he's used to spurs. No English saddle, mind. Give me a good Mexican and a curb bit—not too severe, seeing as he likes to rear."

Daylight superintended the preparations, adjusting the curb strap and the stirrup length, and doing the cinching. He shook his head at the martingale, but yielded to the dealer's advice to allow it to go on. And Bob, beyond spirited restlessness and a few playful attempts, gave no trouble. Nor in the hour's riding that followed, save for some permissible curvetting and prancing, did he misbehave. Daylight was delighted; the purchase was immediately made; and Bob, with riding gear and personal equipment, was dispatched across the bay forthwith to take up his quarters in the stables of the Oakland Riding Academy.

The next day being Sunday, Daylight was away early, crossing on the ferry and taking with him Wolf, the leader of his sled team, the one dog which he had selected to bring with him when he left Alaska. Quest as he would through the Piedmont hills and along the money-gated back-road to Berkeley, Daylight saw nothing of Dede Mason and her chestnut sorrel. But he had little time for disappointment, for his own chestnut kept him busy. At the end of half an hour of goodness Daylight, lured into confidence, was riding along at a walk and rolling a cigarette, with slack knees and relaxed seat, the reins lying on the animal's neck. Bob whirled abruptly and with lightning swiftness, pivoting on his hind legs, his fore legs just lifted clear of the ground. Daylight kept his seat, but beyond a futile rein across the neck, did nothing to prevent the evolution.

"Well, Bob," he addressed the animal, at the same time wiping the sweat from his own eyes, "I'm free to confess that you're sure the blindest afflicted quickest creature I ever saw. I guess the way to fix you is to keep the spur just a-touching—a! you brute!"

For the moment the spur touched him, his left hind leg had reached forward in a kick that struck the stirrup in a smart blow. Several times, out of curiosity, Daylight attempted the spur, and each time Bob's hoof landed the stirrup. Then Daylight, following the horse's example of the unexpected, suddenly drove both spurs into him and reached him underneath with the quirt.

It was Dede.

didn't live, after it once learned the lesson, that would whirl in the face of the doubled quirt.

More keenly than ever, during that week in the office, did Daylight realize that he had no social, nor even human contacts with Dede. The situation was such that he could not ask her the simple question whether or not she was going riding next Sunday. This he found another crumb in the hand the mad god had dealt him. How important that card was to become he did not dream, yet he decided that it was a pretty good card.

Sunday came, and Bob, out in the Piedmont hills, behaved like an angel. His goodness at times was of the spirited, prancing order, but otherwise he was a lamb. But no Dede did Daylight encounter. He valiantly circled about among the hill roads, and in the afternoon took the steep grade over the divide of the second range and dropped into Maraga Valley. Just after passing the foot of the descent, he heard the hoof beats of a cantering horse. It was from ahead and coming toward him. What if it were Dede? He turned Bob around and started to return at a walk. The canter came nearer, but he faced straight ahead until he heard the horse behind check to a walk. Then he glanced over his shoulder. It was Dede. The recognition was quick, and with her, accompanied by surprise. What more natural thing than that, partly turning his horse, he should wait till she caught up with him; and that, when abreast, they should continue abreast on up the grade? He could have sighed with relief. The thing was accomplished, and so easily. Greetings had been exchanged; here they were side by side and going in the same direction with miles and miles ahead of them.

He noted that her eye was first for the horse and next for him. "Oh, what a beauty!" she had cried at sight of Bob. From the shining light in her eyes, and the face filled with delight, he would scarcely have believed that it belonged to the young woman he had known in the office, the young woman with the controlled, subdued office face.

"I didn't know you rode," was one of her first remarks. "I imagined you were wedded to get-there-quick machines."

Thus, and to his great relief, they launched on a topic of mutual interest. He told her about Bob's tricks, and of the whirl and his scheme to overcome it; and she agreed that horses had to be handled with a certain rational severity, no matter how much one loved them. There was Mah, which she had had for eight years, and which she had had to break of stall-kicking. The process had been painful for Mah, but it had cured her. "You've ridden a lot," Daylight said.

"I really can't remember the first time I was on a horse," she told him. "I was born on a ranch, you know, and they couldn't keep me away from the horses."

And there she told him more of her ranch life in the days before her father died, and Daylight was hugely pleased with himself. They were getting acquainted. The conversation had not lagged in the full half hour they had been together. When she talked, he listened and followed her, and yet all the while he was following his own thoughts and impressions as well. It was a nervy thing for her to do, this riding astride, and he didn't know, after all, whether he liked it or not. His idea of women were prone to be old-fashioned; they were the ones he had imbibed in the early day, frontier life of his youth, when no woman was seen on anything but a side-saddle. He had grown up in the fact fiction that women on horseback were not blips. It came to him with a shock, this sight of her so manlike in her saddle. But he had to confess that the sight looked good to him just the same.

"Well, I'll be plum gosh darned!" was Daylight's comment. "No ill-will, no grudge, no nothing—and after that bombasting! You're sure a hummer, Bob."

He had taken a liking to the animal, and repented not of his bargain. He realized that Bob was not vicious nor mean, the trouble being that he was hurstling with high spirits and was endowed with more than the average horse's intelligence. Combined with the intelligence, was the spirit and the temperance, that made him what he was. What was required to control him was a strong hand, with tempered sternness and yet with the requisite touch of brutal dominance.

Throughout the week Daylight found himself almost as much interested in Bob as in Dede; and, not being in the thick of any big deals, he was probably more interested in both of them than in the business game. Bob's trick of whirling was of special moment to him. How to overcome it—that was the thing. Suppose he did meet with Dede out in the hills; and suppose by some lucky stroke of fate, he should manage to be riding along side of her; then that whirl of Bob's would be most disconcerting and embarrassing. He was not particularly anxious for her to see him thrown forward on Bob's neck. On the other hand, suddenly to leave her and go dashing down the back-track, plying quirt and spurs, wouldn't do, either. What was wanted was a method whereby to prevent that lightning whirl. He must stop the animal before it got around. The reins would not do this. Neither would the spurs. Remained the quirt. But how to accomplish it? Bob always whirled to the right. Very well. He would double the quirt in his hand, and the instant of the whirl, that double quirt would rap Bob on the nose. The horse didn't live, after it once learned the lesson, that would whirl in the face of the doubled quirt.

More keenly than ever, during that week in the office, did Daylight realize that he had no social, nor even human contacts with Dede. The situation was such that he could not ask her the simple question whether or not she was going riding next Sunday. This he found another crumb in the hand the mad god had dealt him. How important that card was to become he did not dream, yet he decided that it was a pretty good card.

Sunday came, and Bob, out in the Piedmont hills, behaved like an angel. His goodness at times was of the spirited, prancing order, but otherwise he was a lamb. But no Dede did Daylight encounter. He valiantly circled about among the hill roads, and in the afternoon took the steep grade over the divide of the second range and dropped into Maraga Valley. Just after passing the foot of the descent, he heard the hoof beats of a cantering horse. It was from ahead and coming toward him. What if it were Dede? He turned Bob around and started to return at a walk. The canter came nearer, but he faced straight ahead until he heard the horse behind check to a walk. Then he glanced over his shoulder. It was Dede. The recognition was quick, and with her, accompanied by surprise. What more natural thing than that, partly turning his horse, he should wait till she caught up with him; and that, when abreast, they should continue abreast on up the grade? He could have sighed with relief. The thing was accomplished, and so easily. Greetings had been exchanged; here they were side by side and going in the same direction with miles and miles ahead of them.

He noted that her eye was first for the horse and next for him. "Oh, what a beauty!" she had cried at sight of Bob. From the shining light in her eyes, and the face filled with delight, he would scarcely have believed that it belonged to the young woman he had known in the office, the young woman with the controlled, subdued office face.

"I didn't know you rode," was one of her first remarks. "I imagined you were wedded to get-there-quick machines."

Thus, and to his great relief, they launched on a topic of mutual interest. He told her about Bob's tricks, and of the whirl and his scheme to overcome it; and she agreed that horses had to be handled with a certain rational severity, no matter how much one loved them. There was Mah, which she had had for eight years, and which she had had to break of stall-kicking. The process had been painful for Mah, but it had cured her. "You've ridden a lot," Daylight said.

"I really can't remember the first time I was on a horse," she told him. "I was born on a ranch, you know, and they couldn't keep me away from the horses."

And there she told him more of her ranch life in the days before her father died, and Daylight was hugely pleased with himself. They were getting acquainted. The conversation had not lagged in the full half hour they had been together. When she talked, he listened and followed her, and yet all the while he was following his own thoughts and impressions as well. It was a nervy thing for her to do, this riding astride, and he didn't know, after all, whether he liked it or not. His idea of women were prone to be old-fashioned; they were the ones he had imbibed in the early day, frontier life of his youth, when no woman was seen on anything but a side-saddle. He had grown up in the fact fiction that women on horseback were not blips. It came to him with a shock, this sight of her so manlike in her saddle. But he had to confess that the sight looked good to him just the same.

"Well, I'll be plum gosh darned!" was Daylight's comment. "No ill-will, no grudge, no nothing—and after that bombasting! You're sure a hummer, Bob."

He had taken a liking to the animal, and repented not of his bargain. He realized that Bob was not vicious nor mean, the trouble being that he was hurstling with high spirits and was endowed with more than the average horse's intelligence. Combined with the intelligence, was the spirit and the temperance, that made him what he was. What was required to control him was a strong hand, with tempered sternness and yet with the requisite touch of brutal dominance.

Throughout the week Daylight found himself almost as much interested in Bob as in Dede; and, not being in the thick of any big deals, he was probably more interested in both of them than in the business game. Bob's trick of whirling was of special moment to him. How to overcome it—that was the thing. Suppose he did meet with Dede out in the hills; and suppose by some lucky stroke of fate, he should manage to be riding along side of her; then that whirl of Bob's would be most disconcerting and embarrassing. He was not particularly anxious for her to see him thrown forward on Bob's neck. On the other hand, suddenly to leave her and go dashing down the back-track, plying quirt and spurs, wouldn't do, either. What was wanted was a method whereby to prevent that lightning whirl. He must stop the animal before it got around. The reins would not do this. Neither would the spurs. Remained the quirt. But how to accomplish it? Bob always whirled to the right. Very well. He would double the quirt in his hand, and the instant of the whirl, that double quirt would rap Bob on the nose. The horse

CHAPTER XIV.

Another Sunday man and horse and dog roved over the Piedmont hills. And again Daylight and Dede rode together. But this time her surprise at meeting him was tinged with suspicion; or rather, her surprise was of another order. The previous Sunday had been quite accidental, but his appearing the second time among her favorite haunts hinted of more than the fortuitous. Daylight was made to feel that she suspected him, and he, remembering that he had seen a big rack quarry near Blair Park, stated offhand that he was thinking of buying it. His ineffectual investment in a brickyard had not the idea into his head—an idea

INTEREST IN GOOD ROADS MOVEMENT INCREASING.

Delaware Company Proposes Highway Between New York and Washington.

That interest in the betterment of roads is growing steadily in the United States has been evidenced by the almost simultaneous publication in the newspapers of the country of two items of news which should bring joy to the heart of automobilists and users of humbler means of conveyance.

One was the announcement of the coming incorporation in Delaware of a company that proposes to build a great boulevard between New York and Washington.

The other was the offer of General T. Coleman du Pont, president of the Du Pont Powder company, to build a fine highway across the state of Delaware, a distance of over 100 miles.

For a short part of the way the route of both these proposed highways may be made identical. The promoters of the New York-Washington road are in communication, therefore, with General du Pont in the hope of making some arrangement for joint construction work along the stretch where their proposed highway and that of the millionaire powder manufacturer will coincide.

of honor, wore white embroidered voile, and carried pink and white carnations and narcissus. The bridesmaids Miss Maude Cross and Alma Francis, wore beautiful gowns of pink and white, and also carried pink and white carnations, it being a "pink and white" wedding. Miss Marion Harris, who as mistress of ceremony, had much to do in the smoothness with which all passed off, was also most beautifully and tastefully gowned in pink and white. The gentlemen of the wedding party all wore regulation evening dress, and among the guests were many beautiful and tasty gowns which helped to make it a brilliant and long-to-be-remembered occasion.

The contracting parties are too well known in Charlevoix to need introduction or commendation. Both have lived in Charlevoix practically all their lives, and have grown to manhood and womanhood together, the attachment which has culminated in so happy a marriage having been formed years ago during their school days together. The bride is a most beautiful and accomplished young woman, but what is best of all, is gifted with the sweetness and gentleness of manner, and love of home things, which will make her indeed a "home-maker." The lucky young man who has won her for a bride is the eldest son of Mayor Hampton, is a graduate of our high schools. Here he won the honor of being editor-in-chief, and after taking a course in commercial college, was for a time with the Ford Motor company, but resigned last summer to take the position of assistant manager of the Detroit Electrical Appliance Co. Like the bride, he has a host of friends among old and young in this city who will wish him and his bride all the happiness they deserve. Mr. and Mrs. Hampton left on the evening train for Detroit, where they will make their home, being accompanied by the bride's brother, Mr. Will Washburn of that city, who with his little daughter came up for the wedding.

The Courier joins with their other friends in congratulations and best wishes for a long life and a happy one, the esteem in which they are held being shown by the magnitude and richness of the wedding gifts, the beautiful testimonials in silver, and cut glass, linen and art ware, as well as more substantial things, forming an array never before seen at a Charlevoix wedding.

HAS NEW WATER SYSTEM

Walloon Lake to be Supplied Pure Spring Water.

Walloon Lake is coming to the front with a water system and a spring that evidently has healing powers.

Last fall, Alfred Hass, a resident of the resort, purchased some land on one of the hills, which contains a spring which possesses considerable force. This water he has piped to the village, which he is now supplying with as pure water as any analysis can show natural water to be. He has about half a mile of pipe laid under the streets, and it carries the water from an elevation of about one hundred feet, no power being required except the natural flow and gravitation. A number of the cottages in the resort are now securing water from the system, and Mr. Hass proposes to furnish all who desire it next summer, providing, of course, they pay for it.

He Was Willing to Oblige a Friend

By AGNES G. BROGAN
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Dick Brant accosted his friend upon the street. "Hello, Bob," he cried joyously. "The very person I wanted to see."

The young man, addressed looked up at him. "What is it this time?" he asked frankly.

Dick laughed. "Oh, a sort of mutual benefit," he answered. "Claire and I are off to Beechurst tomorrow, and we are leaving our rooms up on Silverdale with all our worldly goods entrusted to the care of maid-servants and manservants, who, we have learned to our sorrow, are not to be trusted."

"Well," his friend inquired as he paused for breath, "what's the answer?"

"I am coming to that," Dick continued. "Now, the place where you live is mighty hot these August days, while the breeze from over the Hudson blows ever fresh and cool through our windows. Why can't you come up there nights and make yourself at home, or at least two nights a week?" he quickly amended at Bob's surprised stare.

"In short," his friend answered slowly, "I am to play night watchman in return for my lodging."

Dick grinned. "And you might feed my pet goldfish a couple of times a week," he added. "I'll leave the food beside the bowl. The maid promised to attend to that part, but the truth is we'd just as soon she didn't enter the house. Claire has been missing things lately, and—"

"I see," said Bob. "Well, I will oblige you, as usual, and if there's anything else don't hesitate to mention it." His tone was sarcastic, but the men clasped hands warmly as they parted.

It was several days, however, before Bob recollected the empty apartment and the hungry fish. The night was busily engaged when he distinctly heard a key inserted in the lock and looked up, startled, as the door swung easily open, but it was merely to admit the maid, who passed him with an indifferent nod and approached the goldfish bowl. A dainty white apron was tied over her dark blue dress, and her little high-heeled slippers clicked as she walked across the polished floor.

Bob arose to his feet. "I fed them," he said, motioning toward the fish. The maid turned and looked at him. She had the most beautiful eyes that he had ever seen—large and blue and full of wonder, like a child's.

"You need not trouble any more," she said quietly. "I will attend to them after this."

He went again to the great apartment house that evening at twilight and, groping his way across the shadowy rooms dropped wearily upon the couch, a dim screen concealing his figure. Suddenly the entire apartment was flooded with light. Some one entering evidently had pressed the electric button. He lay silent, awaiting developments. Past his bidding place came the click of high-heeled slippers. They went on into Mrs. Brant's dressing room.

Bob gathered back the silk of the screen and peered through. He saw the little maid sink upon her knees before a cabinet. She produced a bunch of keys, trying one after another in quick succession. At length the drawer yielded, and she drew forth a small box. Bob caught a glimpse of a pendant with many diamonds gleaming in the light, and then, before he could collect his senses, the room was in total darkness. He jumped to his feet and the screen fell crash to the floor, barring for a moment his progress, but in that moment the girl had escaped.

Vainly he searched the rooms and corridors, coming out at last breathless upon the street. A tassel waited at the entrance, and beside it stood the maid. As he advanced toward her she waved her hand to the occupant of the cab and quickly crossed to the long row of benches which lined the roadway. She looked up, white and frightened, as Bob stood stertly before her. He intended to be pitiless, but found it a difficult matter with that childish gaze fixed upon him.

"You remember me?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," she answered; "you are the man who cares for Mr. Brant's rooms."

Bob smiled dryly. "I happen to be Mr. Brant's friend," he said, "and, as I am in charge of his belongings, you must tell me why you took a diamond pendant from the cabinet drawer a short time ago."

She leaned forward entreatingly. "Oh, please do not ask me about it," she begged, "for I cannot tell you."

"See here," he said desperately, "you repine the pin and no one shall ever know."

She stood up before him, and her voice trembled. "I cannot do that," she said. "I did not take the pin for myself."

"You mean," he exclaimed, "that you have already given it to another person?"

She nodded vigorously, then placed her hand upon his arm. "No one shall suspect you of stealing the pin," she said slowly. "I will see to that—trust me."

Perhaps she had been goaded on to take the pin by some very pressing need. The memory of a departing taxicab outraded itself, to be impatiently cast aside. He would do nothing, events should shape themselves, and if—well, if the pin was still missing when Dick returned he would insist upon paying for it himself. There was a tidy sum in the bank to his credit—he had been saving a good deal lately—he reflected carefully. But a deep frown creased his brow as he worked steadily during the days which followed, and though he visited again his friend's lonely apartment no little maid appeared, while the open door of a cabinet constantly proclaimed its emptiness.

A telegram was handed him one day, and he tore it open nervously, anticipating the contents. Dick and his wife would be home that evening—they wanted to see him up at the house. Bob closed his desk with a bang. "Well, he would go and have it over," Claire greeted him in her charming, hospitable way, and Dick wrung his hand heartily.

"Come in," they said, "and let us thank you."

They seemed not to notice Bob's strained manner as they chatted on about their trip. Presently Claire arose and rustled from the room. "Dear me," she said, "I had almost forgotten Kitty."

She returned in a moment, her arm about the waist of a girl whose eyes danced and whose cheeks glowed as Bob sprang to his feet confronting her, for this vision in clinging white was undoubtedly the erring maid.

"Kitty, dear," Claire was saying, "I want you to meet Dick's friend, Mr. Brewster. Bob, this is my cousin, Miss Angles, and now that we have you both here," she rattled on, "we want to thank you for looking after things during our absence. Dick's pet fish are positively fat. When I asked you to feed them, Kitty, I had no idea that Dick had already coaxed Bob to do that service."

"Bob was also to play night watchman," Dick interposed. "He has done well, for the furniture is still intact. We left nothing movable, I believe."

Mrs. Brant blushed. "Oh, yes, we did," she said. "I did not want to say anything about it, but Kitty insists upon a full and free confession. I carelessly forgot this diamond pendant you gave me as a wedding gift. Dick, and when we arrived at Beechurst I remembered that it still reposed in the cabinet drawer at home, a glaring temptation to that thieving maid of ours, and I wrote post-haste, special delivery, telling Kitty to secure the pin and send it with her brother Ned when he came down to spend the week end. I brought her to keep the matter secret," she continued, "for I did not dare to let you know, Dickie, until the pendant was safely in my possession."

Claire laughed. "Dick," she said, "you should have told me that Bob was to be caretaker. Fancy how embarrassing it would have been if he and Kitty had met here—feeding the goldfish!"

Kitty looked at her cousin reproachfully. "It might have been more than embarrassing for me," she said. "Think of my predicament if Mr. Brewster had caught me in the net of departing with that pin of yours! Why, he would probably have considered it his duty to hand me over to the police, and I should have been locked up in a cell like a suffragette."

Brant laughed, while Bob grew uncomfortably red.

"Well, you still have your freedom," Claire answered carelessly. "Here comes the maid. Let's all take a ride." And as Bob and Kitty were encountered upon the rear seat he leaned toward her. "I have been an awful idiot," he said contritely. "Can you ever forgive me?"

Kitty's eyes twinkled. "Do you expect pardon at the first apology?" she asked.

"Certainly not," Bob responded. "I intend to start a series of apologies, dating from tonight. When you are assured of my deep repentance perhaps you may relent."

And Kitty smiled demurely. "Miss is a forgiving person," she said.

BADLY BURNED BY OIL

Aged Petoskey Resident Threw Coal Oil on Smouldering Fire.

John W. Cook, an old resident of Petoskey, was badly burned last Tuesday while starting a fire in the kitchen range. He did not notice the live coals in the stove and threw in a quantity of kerosene. An explosion followed and before he could get away from the stove, his hair and beard were blazing. His daughter, with whom he makes his home, appeared on the scene just in time and quenched the flames, which would doubtless result in the death of her father if aid had not come.

His hair was burned, as were his beard and eyebrows, while his face was badly scorched.

Taxation the Dividend on watered stocks. Public funds from public monopolies. La Follette bill for physical valuation. Royalties on railroads, franchises, mines. The dawning of a grander day for the republic.

Lee Francis Lybarger will speak on the above topics at the Opera house of the evening of January 2. It will be a treat—don't miss it.

Every voter in Charlevoix and surrounding community who will be called upon to decide the great questions of the coming political campaign at the polls next fall should hear Mr. Lybarger.

Killed by Rolling Log.

James Mitchell of Elmira was the victim of an accident at W. W. White's Co's camp 9, last week, which resulted in his death. He was driving on top of a load of logs when an unexpected slide in the road threw the top log off. Mitchell jumped but the log caught him and rolled over his hips and abdomen, crushing the hip bones and inflicting internal injuries which resulted in his death a few hours later. He was 47 years of age and leaves a wife and five children.

GEORGE MCGRAW DEAD

Passed Away at Hotel Garland, Boyne City. Last Tuesday.

George McGraw, formerly clerk at Baker's Inn, of this city, and up to the time of his death clerk at the Hotel Garland at Boyne City, died last Tuesday after a few days illness. Mr. McGraw was formerly a locomotive engineer, being one of the first employed on the B. C. G. & A. railroad, and followed this line of work until his health failed him. Of late years he has clerked in the various hotels in this city.

George McGraw was 61 years of age at the time of his death. His remains were taken to Detroit for interment.

Let Hon. Lee Francis Lybarger strengthen your New Year's resolutions. He will be at the Charlevoix theatre January 2.

A Pane of Glass

By MARY HOADLEY GRISWOLD

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

There was no reason why John Dorman should not have replaced the pane of glass as soon as it became broken. Especially was there no valid reason why he should have postponed it until holiday time. It would have saved him some labor and Mrs. Dorman much annoyance had he been more prompt, and there would have been no story to tell.

John Dorman was the village undertaker. In the house of mourning he was sympathetic, tactful and considerate. In the social circle he was witty and a teller of good anecdotes. At home he governed his children discreetly, cherished his wife tenderly and lost no chance to have fun. That was the true reason for his neglect of the broken windowpane.

Who broke the window glass or how does not matter. It was the library window, and that did matter to Mrs. Dorman when John lacked a square of pasteboard into the sash to stop the draft till such time as he should attend to it properly. Mrs. Dorman had her own views as to propriety of appearance, and a pasteboard pane in a front window of an otherwise artistic dwelling on the main traveled road was distinctly out of harmony. In vain John begged her to remember that a thing is beautiful according to its usefulness; that the pasteboard pane kept out the cold and no doubt was at that moment the preserver of their lives by preventing the entrance of pneumonia. The missing pane of glass continued to be a favorite topic of conversation with Mrs. Dorman, or, rather, of monologue, since John after awhile became merely a listener. However, the pressure which Mrs. Dorman brought to bear by means of language impelled the neglected John to move in the matter.

He delayed as his opportunity the afternoon before New Year's day, when Mrs. Dorman was out shopping. Expertly he cut and fitted the pane of glass, potted it in place, tacked the pasteboard back outside the new glass and removed all traces of his labor. He found time also before Mrs. Dorman's return to step into Neighbor Alieu's a moment. It seemed that such an event as the replacing of that old pane of glass should be celebrated in all neighborhoods. The Allens quite agreed with Mr. Dorman, and the little surprise party for Mrs. Dorman seemed quite complete.

That evening John Dorman sank into his easy chair before the grate and picked up the evening paper with a view to reading. Mrs. Dorman, however, forestalled him, having something on her mind.

"That missing pane of glass is no credit to the house, John. I had not realized how disreputable that bit of pasteboard looks stuck into that window. It may stay there tonight, for the wind is on that side of the house, but tomorrow morning, glass or no glass, that pasteboard shall go into the stove. There has been delay enough," Mrs. Dorman spoke as one determined.

"I'll see to it first thing in the morning," promised John.

A little later the Allens came in and sat down with Mr. and Mrs. Dorman to a game of whist. As the second hand was being dealt Mr. Allen shivered slightly. A moment later Mrs. Allen, also seeming to feel the draft, asked permission to throw a wrap across her shoulders. As the hand progressed Mr. Allen shivered again and unconsciously turned up his coat collar, "consciously turning it down again when his wife remonstrated.

It was evident that the room was too cool for comfort. John Dorman could understand that, but could not speak consistently since it was due to his own negligence. Mrs. Dorman, however, was governed by no such restriction. She laid down her cards and took up the window subject.

so less than pneumonia for the entire family and for every one else who has the courage to venture in to sit with us for an evening. Perhaps, John, you will find it more convenient to hurry us all than to set one little pane of glass."

"Really, my dear," he apologized, "I do mean to attend to it. It should have been done long ago. I give you my word of honor I will have that glass set tomorrow morning."

The words, intended to soothe Mrs. Dorman's mind, did divert her thoughts, but in a manner entirely foreign to the plan of John.

She sprang up with an air of determination and seized the brass handled poker from the fire set on the hearth.

"I will see to it now that you keep your promise tomorrow morning," she cried. "That miserable sheet of pasteboard shall not be your excuse another moment."

With a thrust of the poker Mrs. Dorman attempted to annihilate the pasteboard pane. There was a crash of shattered glass, a tearing of pasteboard, and then indeed the worst which had penetrated the room. Mrs. Dorman masterfully concealed her surprise at finding the glass had been set. She saw at once the joke; she saw also that the joke was not entirely upon herself. Tomorrow morning John would need that glass, and it would not be a task to his liking either.

THERE WAS A CRASH OF SHATTERED GLASS.

With perfect composure Mrs. Dorman restored the brass handled poker to its place on the hearth and remarked hospitably:

"As the glass cannot be replaced until morning, let us adjourn to the sitting room and finish the rubber there. Afterward, John, I am sure you will be glad to step over to Hilton's and bring us vanilla and chocolate mixed."

WALKED 177,900 MILES.

Burns' Record Equals Seven and One-third Times Distance Around World. George A. Burns, the oldest track walker in point of service on the Pennsylvania railroad, has just put his one hundred and seventy-seven thousand nine hundred and thirty miles behind him. In keeping still over the track placed in his care he has walked the equivalent of seven and one-third times around the world in the last thirty-five years. Journeying four times a day between Greensburg, Pa., and Youngwood yard, a distance of 3.53 miles, he has inspected 5,723,800 splice plates on half that many rail joints.

Other Pennsylvania track watchmen who have distance records are William Young of Franklin, Pa., with 154,144 miles in twenty-two years and eight months; Dennis Winters, Norristown, Pa., with 111,924 miles in twenty-four years; Simon Owens, Washington, with 135,428 miles in twenty-three years and four months; and Julius Heltz of Edgewood, Md., who has covered 101,100 miles in twenty-three years and three months. These five men together have walked nearly 1 million miles.

His apartments at Claverly hall, one of the swellest of the gold coast dormitories, are furnished in fine style. His father allows young Astor $5,000 a year for pocket money and pays all his bills.

Condemns Wedding Fees. Ministers who accept fees for officiating at weddings were attacked by the Rev. J. B. Lemon at the Baptist ministers' conference at Cleveland, O. He declared such fees are no more than "waiters' tips" and should be refused if ministers would preserve their self respect.

Cart System For County Pikes. The cart system of taking care of the roads in Knox county, Tenn., will first be tried upon the Tazewell and Jackboro pikes, according to the action of the Knox county road commission at a recent meeting. If it works successfully it will be placed on other pikes.

New Year's Gifts

By EMILY GRANT HUTCHINGS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

It is worthy of comment that in all Latin countries the day for exchanging gifts is New Year's day, while in all Saxon countries it is Christmas. The reason for this difference in customs are easy to trace. The people in the north of Europe celebrated the feast of Frey, the winter solstice, by bestowing gifts on their loved ones and those to whom they were indebted. In Rome the time for gift giving was the feast of Janus. At the present time "Le Jour de l'An" (the day of the year) is regarded in France as of far more importance than "Noel," Christmas day.

Although the habit of giving presents to the loved ones on Christmas is not unknown in France, the giving of gifts on New Year's is almost compulsory, the exchange of remembrances having degenerated into a mechanical force. Certain absolutely useless articles are manufactured simply as New Year's gifts, and when once they have been purchased they pass into the regular New Year's currency. Those who receive them this year put them away and pass them on next year to some friend or relative. It is nothing unusual for a gift to find its way in the course of a few years into the hands of the original donor, no whit the worse for its vicissitudes. Indeed, the recipient of the much used message of affection is not offended in the least, as persons of the Anglo-Saxon race would be.

In England the regular time for bestowing gifts has always been the Twelfth holiday in honor of the birth of Christ, yet there was an established custom of giving presents to the man-ment to the floor to keep out rats, and if burrows are used set them up some what from the floor.

Of course every apple grown on the farm will not be worth putting down cellar, but the lower qualities are worth going into cellar if they can be so thoroughly pressed as to extract all the sugar instead of leaving a high proportion of it in the pomace.

"Three pounds of sugar to a bushel of apples is a high result with the ordinary hand mills. But with an eighty-ton hydraulic press I have been able to recover four gallons of juice from fifty pounds of fruit, double the quantity I could recover with the hand mills, and yet I left in the pulp about 12 per cent of the juice," says Professor W. B. Alwood of the United States department of agriculture.

"Practically 25 per cent of the total weight of apples went out in pomace, or from 4 to 8 per cent of the sugar. With the best power mills under a most efficient working system it is certain that practically 5 per cent of sugar is thrown out in the pomace."

"There are something like 5,000,000 bushels of apples worked up every crop year in New York state alone for byproducts. If we assume that 25 per cent of this fruit will be left as pomace we will have about 600,000,000 pounds of pomace, which will contain 3,000,000 pounds of sugar, or 1,500 tons. Data collected for 1909 indicate that this quantity of pomace is produced and that 5 per cent of this pomace is sugar."

"I am not able to tell how much of this pomace is actually or partially lost, nor can I tell precisely how to recover all the sugar it contains, as this investigation has just been begun, but I want to emphasize this idea, that this 1,500 tons of sugar, if recovered, would make 3,000,000 gallons of vinegar, which would go a long way toward paying the expense of managing the orchard. One of the largest manufacturers of vinegar in the state told me recently that he expected pure cider vinegar to go to 30 cents wholesale in the next two years."

"In regard to the large amount of sugar that goes out in the pomace as waste, I have never yet seen a manufacturer or a farmer who handled this pomace so as to recover nearly all the sugar left in it. Thousands of tons of pomace are thrown out without the slightest attempt being made to recover the sugar. Some people put it back on the soil, but it ought not to be put on the soil at all until well rotted."

"It has been well established that it can be successfully used for cattle food in France and England and it is fed very successfully. Vermont and Massachusetts experiment stations have also experimented with it and for several years have been feeding it successfully to milk cows."

"Certainly not."
"Only good apples go down cellar, don't they?"
"Of course."
"Is it the good apples or the good cellar that makes the bad boy good?"
Here man's patience became exhausted and Johnny was not only hustled down to darkness, but he got something that kept him warm down there for a long time.

All of which leads up to the point that an apple cellar should be the cleanest and sweetest corner of the house.

Nothing else should ever be stored in it. Its walls should at least be twenty inches thick, and it should have abundant windows to be kept open all summer to draft air and kept entirely free of any decay. There should be no moldy boards nor any smell of mildew; in other words, the air should be et to breathe.

When the apples are stored the draft should be stopped, and when steady cold sets in you should shut the cellar tight, and let it stay closed until May. You can place such a cellar as this conveniently under part of your barn, possibly, or under your carriage house, only there should be no stable adjacent. The door overhead should be covered with autumn leaves, spread thickly.

The thermometer all winter should stand at about 33—just above freezing. Put your apples in shallow bins; co-

An Absolute Cinch. It is said that only about thirty days stand between the average city wage earner and starvation. Most farmers could "keep the wolf from the door" quite a bit longer than that.

The Call of the Heart

A New Year's Event

By CARLOTTA PERRY

It is not often that the prodigal returns on Thanksgiving day to sit at the table where a plate is always laid for him; that Christmas brings a restoration of peace and good or that Easter sees a resurrection of buried hopes. But here is a family episode at New Year's which is exceptional.

They were an old fashioned family, and they lived in an old fashioned country house.

They always watched the old year out and the new year in, and when from the near-church tower the old bell lingered on the last stroke of 12 with much ceremony the outer room of the great hall was thrown open and the old year might depart and the new one enter. And according to a time honored custom each one made wish for something that was most desired at the hands of the New Year. There was a tradition that strange and beautiful things had come to pass because of this wishing.

Mr. Walter Graham, the head of the family, was a man of warm heart, but with an intense pride and no impertinence.

Ten years before the time of which this story tells the eldest daughter of the house had clandestinely married a man to whose patient and faithful court paternal consent with unforgiving prejudice was refused. The father, in his wrath, forbade her ever to cross the home threshold again.

The girl's heart had not misled her. The man was in every way worthy. Happiness and prosperity had been their portion.

The holidays at Graham House, though still the occasion of hospitality and mirth, were days on which memory was sadly busy. The loving mother felt more keenly on these festive days the estrangement of which she might not even speak.

Always when New Year's eve came Mr. Graham would slip away from the family and guests and spend an hour alone in thought of the daughter who had disobeyed him. From these retrospections he had always concluded and more unreluctant than ever.

On the New Year's eve of which this story tells a merry company was gathered in Graham House.

As usual, a little before midnight Mr. Graham slipped away for his try with bitter memories, but when just a moment before the time for opening the door he came down the grand staircase there was a new look on his face.

"Dear friends," he said gently, "well, not all who love us wish with us the peace, love and charity may enter Graham House this blessed New Year's eve and abide forevermore."

The dear mother, with a sob of joy in her voice, the brothers and sisters and all the guests said softly, "Peace, love and charity to Graham House for evermore." Then, as the midnight bell rang out, the door swung open to the starlit sky, the snow white world, and each one welcomed the New Year, making the wish dearest to his heart.

Now, this is what happened next. There on the porch they stood as if enraptured. The daughter and the husband and two smiling for elated little children. The youngest lifted up his voice gleefully, saying: "We've heard your voice. Did you call?"

The old man stooped and gathered the little ones in his arms. "Yes, I called you," he said. "She heard right the call of my heart."

WAKING UP.

Wyoming Business Men Plan Building New Roads. The people of Wyoming and especially the business men are availing to the advantages of building good automobile roads across the state. The large influx of tourists in automobiles this year has brought the good roads question forcibly to the attention of Wyoming people, and a state wide movement looking to the building of new roads and the betterment of old ones is being inaugurated.

The people of Evanston, in the southwest corner of the state, have joined with Utah in improving the road between Evanston and Ogden, and as soon as this work is completed the work will be continued eastward to the boundary line between Utah and Sweetwater counties.

Good Roads Boosters to Meet. The greatest good roads gathering the nation has been known to be held at Richmond, Va., Sept. 12 to 15. The first annual meeting of the American Association for Highway Improvement will be held in that city, and President Taft is expected to make the principal address.

Problem of the Electric Eel. Invention during the next two or three centuries will probably be in the direction of imitating the wonderful economy and the simple direct methods of nature, says Professor John G. McKendrick. Take the electric eel. Its electric organ is in no sense a storage battery, but a contrivance by which electric energy is liberated at the moment when it is required. At rest the organ shows so small an electromotive force that a good galvanometer is required to detect it, but a sudden nervous impulse from the eel's spinal cord raises a potential of many volts with very little heat and so small an expenditure of matter as to defy the most expert chemist to weigh it.

LEGAL NOTICES

that he decided was a good one, for it enabled him to suggest that she ride along with him to inspect the quarry.

So several hours he spent in her company, in which she was much the same girl as before, natural, unaffected; light-hearted, smiling and laughing, a good fellow, talking horses with unflagging enthusiasm, making friends with the crusty-tempered Wolf, and expressing a desire to ride Bob, whom she declared she was more in love with than ever. Against his better judgment, Daylight gave in, and, on an unrequited stretch of road, changed saddles and bridles.

"Remember, he's a greased lightning," he warned, as he helped her to mount.

She nodded, while Bob pricked up his ears to the knowledge that he had a strange rider on his back. The fun came quickly enough—too quickly for Dede, who found herself against Bob's neck as he pivoted around and bolted the other way. Daylight followed on her horse and watched. He saw her check the animal quickly to a standstill, and immediately, with reins across neck and a decisive prod of the left spur, whirl him back the way he had come and almost as swiftly.

"Get ready to give him the quirt on the nose," Daylight called.

He hung almost gleefully upon her actions in anticipation of what the fractious Bob was going to get. And Bob got it, on his next whirl, or attempt, rather, for he was no more than half-way around when the quirt met him smack on his tender nose. There and then, in his bewilderment, surprise and pain, his fore feet, just skimming the road, dropped down.

"Great!" Daylight applauded. "A couple more will fix him. He's too smart not to know when he's beaten."

Again Bob tried. But this time he was barely quarter around when the doubled quirt on his nose compelled him to drop his fore feet to the road. Then, with neither rein nor spur, but by the mere threat of the quirt, she straightened him out.

"I Could Ride With One of the Clerks Without Remark, but With You—No."

Dede looked triumphantly at Daylight.

"Let me give him a run?" she asked.

Daylight nodded, and she shot down the road. He watched her out of sight around the bend, and watched till she came into sight returning. She certainly could sit her horse, was his thought, and she was a sure enough hummer. God, she was the wife for a man! Made most of them look pretty slim. And to think of her hammering all week at a typewriter. That was no place for her. She should be a man's wife, taking it easy, with silks and satins and diamonds (his frontier notion of what befit a wife beloved), and dogs, and horses, and such things.

But the quarry was doomed to pass out of his plans for a time, for on the following Sunday he rode alone. No Dede on a chestnut sorrel came across the back-road from Berkeley that day, nor the day a week later. As the third week drew to a close and another desolate Sunday confronted him, Daylight resolved to speak, office or no office. And as was his nature, he went simply and directly to the point. She had finished her work with him, and was gathering her note pad and pencils together to depart, when he said:

"Oh, one more thing, Miss Mason, and I hope you won't mind my being frank and straight out. You've struck me right along as a sensible-minded girl, and I don't think you'll take offense at what I'm going to say. You know how long you've been in the office—it's years, now, several of them, anyway; and you know I've always been straight and aboveboard with you. I've never what you call presumed. Because you were in my office I've tried to be more careful than if—if you wasn't in my office—you understand. But just the same, it don't make me any the less human. I'm a lonely sort of a fellow—don't take that as a bid for kindness. What I mean by it is to try and tell you just how much those two rides with you have meant. And now I hope you won't mind my just asking why you haven't been out riding the last two Sundays?"

She played nervously with a pencil for a time, as if debating her reply, while he waited patiently.

"This riding," she began, "it's not what they call the right thing. I leave it to you. You know the world. That's the trouble. It's what the world would have to say about me and my employer, meeting regularly and riding in the hills on Sundays. It's funny, but it's so. I could ride with one of the clerks without remark, but with you—no."

"Look here, Miss Mason," said Daylight. "I know you don't like this talking over of things in the office. Neither do I. It's part of the whole thing, I guess; a man ain't supposed to talk anything but business with his stenographer. Will you ride with me next Sunday, and we can talk it over thoroughly then and reach some sort of a conclusion. Out in the hills is the place where you can talk something besides business. I guess you've seen enough of me to know I'm pretty square. I—I do honor and respect you, and, and all that, and I—"

He was beginning to flounder, and the hand that rested on the desk before him was visibly trembling. He strove to pull himself together.

"I just want to harder than anything ever in my life before. I—I can't explain myself, but I do, that's all. Will you—just next Sunday? Tomorrow?"

Nor did he dream that her low acquiescence was due, as much as anything else, to the beads of sweat on his forehead, his trembling hand and his all too evident general distress.

"Of course, there's no way of telling what anybody wants from what they say," Daylight rubbed Bob's rebellious ear with his quirt and pondered with dissatisfaction the words he had just uttered. They did not say what he had meant them to say.

"What I'm driving at is that you say flatfooted that you won't meet me again, and give your reasons, but how am I to know they are your real reasons? Maybe you just don't want to get acquainted with me, and won't say so for fear of hurting my feelings. Don't you see? I'm the last man in the world to shove in where I'm not wanted. And if I thought you didn't care a whoop to see anything more of me, why I'd clear out so blamed quick you couldn't see me for smoke."

It had been a happy day. Daylight had met her on the back-road from Berkeley, and they had had hours together. It was only now, with the day drawing to a close and with them approaching the gate of the road to Berkeley, that he had broached the important subject.

She began her answer to his last contention, and he listened gratefully.

"But suppose, just suppose, that the reasons I have given are the only ones—that there is no question of my not wanting to know you?"

"Then I'd go on urging like Sam Scratch," he said quickly. "Because, you see, I've always noticed that folks that decline to anything are much more open to hearing the case stated. But if you did have that other reason up your sleeve, if you didn't want to know me, if—if, well, if you thought my feelings oughtn't to be hurt just because you had a good job with me."

Here, his calm consideration of a possibility was swamped by the fear that it was an actuality, and he lost the thread of his reasoning.

"Well, anyway, all you have to do is to say the word and I'll—clear out. And with no hard feelings; it would be just a case of bad luck for me. So be honest, Miss Mason, please, and tell me if that's the reason—I almost got a hunch that it is."

"Oh, but that isn't fair," she cried. "You give me the choice of lying to you and hurting you in order to protect myself by getting rid of you, or of throwing away my protection by telling you the truth, for they you, as you said yourself, would stay and urge."

Daylight smiled grimly with satisfaction.

"I'm real glad, Miss Mason, real glad for these words."

"But they won't serve you," she went on hastily. "They can't serve you. I refuse to let them. This is our last ride, and—here is the gate."

Ranging her mare alongside, she bent, slid the catch, and followed the opening gate.

"No, please, no," she said, as Daylight started to follow.

Humbly acquiescent, he pulled Bob back, and the gate swung shut between them. But there was more to say, and she did not ride on.

"Listen, Miss Mason," he said, in a low voice that shook with sincerity. "I want to assure you of one thing. I'm not just trying to fool around with you. I like you, I want you, and I was never more earnest in my life. There's nothing wrong in my intentions or anything like that. What I mean is strictly honorable."

"I Like You, I Want You and I Never Was More Earnest in My Life."

Daylight said: "A sort of on-the-run, 'flowdy, glad-to-make-your-acquaintance, won't-you-be-mine' proposition."

She nodded and broke into laughter, in which he joined, and which served to pass the awkwardness away. He gathered heart at this, and went on in greater confidence, with cooler head and tongue.

"There, you see, you prove my case. You've had experience in such matters. I don't doubt you've had slathers of proposals. Well, I haven't, and I'm like a fish out of water. Besides, this ain't a proposal. It's a peculiar situation, that's all, and I'm in a corner. I've got enough plain horse-sense to know a man ain't supposed to argue marriage with a girl as a reason for getting acquainted with her. And right there was where I was in the hole. Number one, I can't get acquainted with you in the office. Number two, you say you won't see me out of the office to give me a chance. Number three, your reason is that folks will talk because you work for me. Number four, I just got to get acquainted with you, and I just got to get you to see that I mean fair and all right. Number five, there you are on one side the gate getting ready to go, and me here on the other side the gate pretty desperate and bound to say something to make you reconsider. Number six, I said it. And now and finally, I just do want you to reconsider."

He was such a boy, this big giant of a millionaire who had half the rich men of San Francisco afraid of him. Such a boy! She had never imagined this side of his nature.

"How do folks get married?" he was saying. "Why, number one, they meet; number two, like each other's looks; number three, get acquainted; and number four, get married or not, according to how they like each other after getting acquainted. But how in thunder we're to have a chance to find out whether we like each other enough is beyond my savvy, unless we make that chance ourselves. I'd come to see you, call on you, only I know you're just rooming or boarding, and that won't do."

"It's getting late now, anyway," Daylight hurried on, "and we've settled nothing at all. Just one more 'flowdy, anyway—that's not asking much—to settle it in."

She gathered the reins into her hand preliminary to starting.

"Good night," she said, "and—"

"Yes," he whispered, with just the faintest touch of imperativeness.

"Yes," she said, her voice low but distinct.

At the same moment she put the mare into a canter and went down the road without a backward glance, intent on an analysis of her own feelings.

FATHER OF McNAMARAS

Lived on Small Farm Just Outside of Cheboygan all Summer.

Was Trying to Live Down Unpleasant Epoch in His Early Life.

Cheboygan must share a small part of the notoriety that has come about through the arrest, trial and confession of the McNamara brothers because the father of these two fiends lived on a small farm just outside the city limits all summer, and will be remembered by a great many however, but few knew his identity. The Democrat became aware of his presence here from the first, but because the man was making an honest and a hard attempt to live down an unpleasant epoch in his past life we kept still, but now that he has gone, the details come out in the stories being printed in the daily papers about the McNamara boys, crime, and every one connected with them. John McNamara, the father of the two boys, was brought to Cheboygan last spring by Prof. J. R. Chamberlin of the Ohio State University who bought a small tract of land near the city through the Vet. S. Maloney real estate agency. Prof. Chamberlin is one of the many that has decided to stake a bundle on Cheboygan county's fruit raising prospects.

The old gentleman has served a term in the Ohio penitentiary for a crime against his daughter. He has not lived with his family since the crime was committed, and has had no concern in the two sons in the California prison.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Rock Elm Grange No. 705

Regular session of Rock Elm Grange called to order December 23 by worthy Master Whitfield. Vacancies filled as follows: G. K. Daniel, Kitson; L. A. S., Mrs. Van Gorder. Grange opened in due form and minutes of last meeting read. The secretary presented a bill of $1.75 for supplies which was allowed. Brother Boyd Hipp and Sister Mildred Hutton were obligated in the third and fourth degrees.

We then proceeded with our annual election of officers. Daniel Kitson acted as teller. The election resulted as follows:

Master—Fred J. Van Gorder. Overseer—Daniel S. Kitson. Lecturer—Mrs. E. J. Van Gorder. Steward—Joe Whitfield.

Ass't Steward—Boyd Hipp. Chaplain—Mrs. D. S. Kitson. Treasurer—Abe Stevenson. Secretary—Leon Van Gorder. Gatekeeper—Edwin Rose.

Ceres—Mrs. Boyd Hipp. Pomona—Mrs. H. E. Hutton. Flora—Mrs. Victor Lacroix. L. A. S.—Mildred Hutton.

Local Insurance Director—Levi Metz.

Organist—Marjorie Cleland. Brother Van Gorder and Metz were appointed as finance committee.

The lecture hour consisted of songs, recitations and discussions. Grange closed in form. The next meeting will be held January 6, 1912. All members urged to be in attendance.

them to produce paying crops of fruit.

Second—To handle the soil as to conserve the elements of fertility and add to its producing power against the time when the trees must draw more heavily upon it for the production of fruit.

How to accomplish these two objects for best results at least expense is the problem before every person who has the care of a young orchard.

I have often been asked the question, how much will it cost per acre to care for an orchard from the time it is set out until it will begin to bear fruit. This is a question that cannot be answered definitely nor even approximately without knowing more of the circumstances. Much depends on the kind of fruit trees, the character of the soil, whether the owner lives on the farm or not and what system of farming is practiced on the remaining portion of the farm.

Michigan is a state of great and diversified resources. Some are fruit specialists, confining their efforts entirely to the production of fruit but the great majority of Michigan farmers who grow fruit, do, and I think always will combine fruit growing with other branches of farming more or less diversified. In my own case I have narrowed it down to two lines of work and seek to produce for sale from the farm, nothing but fruit and dairy products.

On a farm of fairly good soil, where live stock is kept, and where not over one-third to one-half of the cultivated area is devoted to fruit, I believe that if the trees are set the proper distance apart the land in a young orchard, and especially in a young apple orchard, may be made to pay all the expenses of caring for the trees from the time they are planted until they begin to produce profitable crops of fruit. My custom has been to grow forage and soiling crops to be fed out to dairy cows, returning to the orchard at least an equivalent in stable manure for all the fertility removed by the crops taken off. The cultivation necessary to produce a good thrifty growth of trees. It should begin early while the moisture is in the soil and is kept up continuously at short intervals until the middle of July or first of August; then a cover crop should be sown and no further cultivation given during the season. I want to emphasize especially the importance of frequent thorough cultivation for the first two years.

A space of four feet or more on each side of the rows of trees should be kept under continuous clean cultivation until time to sow the cover crop which should never be omitted. We must remember that cultivation is an exhaustive process on the soil using up humus and liberating plant food, which if not taken up by the roots of growing plants may be lost to the soil.

The growth of the cover crop takes moisture and fertility from the soil which tends to check the growth of the trees just at the time when they ought to stop growing. It holds the fertility by its growth and readily gives it up for the next year's growth of the trees and also tends to maintain the proper content of humus and add to the water holding capacity of the soil. A cover crop also holds the surface soil from blowing away and protects the ground during winter from severe freezing.

Young trees that are neglected the first year may live and make some growth but are much more apt to die the second year. The remainder of the space between the rows may be devoted to growing forage crops and for that purpose we have used mostly corn and medium red clover grown in alternate spaces. The spaces on which corn grows one year will be in clover next year. Seeding is done at the time of the last cultivation of the corn and a light seeding of oats also sowed with the clover seed. The oats grow up taller than the clover, help to hold the snow during the winter for the young clover plants. If any of the clover is used for feeding it should be the first crop cut early, and all that grows afterward during the season left on the ground. The corn is either cut green and fed to the cows or put into the silo.

As the trees grow the strip on the side for cultivation should be widened and finally the corn growing dropped out entirely. I have also used peas and oats, rye and vetch for soiling purposes. For a cover crop to be sown on the spaces that have been in clean cultivation during the early part of the season, I know of nothing better than a mixture of oats and vetch. The vetch is a great nitrogen gatherer. Clover and stable manure also supply humus and nitrogen. By alternating corn and clover we get the full fertilizing value of the clover plant.

I have also used occasionally a light dressing of hardwood ashes saving all that we produce on the farm for the young trees and sometimes hauling them 16 miles for that purpose, this however was done in winter when the team was not needed for other work.

I want to emphasize the importance of care in working around the trees. A careless man has no business in a young orchard. Barking of trees may result to great injuries to them.

Protection from girdling by mice and rabbits may be secured by banking up around the trees in the fall or by the use of tarred paper or other material wrapped around the trunks of the trees.

It seems unnecessary to speak of the importance of keeping the foliage in a young orchard in a healthy condition but it has been my observation that spraying is often neglected in the young orchard.

Pruning is also a matter of great importance. The young trees should be started right, headed at a uniform height and as low as we can and still give room for cultivation under the trees. By beginning early and giving attention to pruning each year, we largely avoid the necessity of ever cutting off large limbs. We should aim to secure well balanced top, compact enough to hold up its load of fruit yet spreading and open enough to admit light and air to all parts of the trees.

All losses are promptly paid in full by the insurance companies I represent, Myrtle Young. 14

CHOOSING DELEGATES TO NATIONAL CONVENTIONS

Five States Require Direct Election Others May Adopt Plan.

Choosing of delegates to the next Democratic national convention by direct vote, through state wide primaries, will be inaugurated by a number of states. This innovation is fixed by law in some of the states, and it is thought it will be voluntarily adopted by others.

As is now known, five states will have law passed for the national convention by direct vote. These states and the dates on which they will hold their primaries for the election of delegates to the national convention are as follows: North Dakota, March 19; Wisconsin, April 2; Nebraska, April 17; Oregon, April 19; New Jersey, May 23.

The National Democratic Progressive league is pointing out that the state committee in any commonwealth may, if the Democrats of that state want, done, direct that delegates be chosen by direct vote of the Democrats in the state.

The legislature in Texas has passed a law advising the Democratic state committee that it ought to provide for the election of delegates to the Democratic national convention by popular vote.

The supporters of Governor Woodrow Wilson for the presidential nomination are in favor of the direct vote method because, they say, it will mean more delegates for their candidate.

The La Follette people, on the republican side are very much in favor of the election of delegates by direct vote, and the managers of the campaign of the Wisconsin senator express the hope that in several of the northern states agreements may be reached under which the old convention method will be set aside for the direct primary. The La Follette managers have already made a definite proposal along this line in the state of Iowa.

They have indicated to the Republicans in charge of the machinery in that state that they are anxious to have the question as to whether President Taft or Senator La Follette shall have the delegates from that state go direct to the Republican voters for answer. They make no secret of the fact that they intend to make the same proposal in several other states in the coming west, as well as in some of the far west states.

The men, both Democrats and Republicans, who are urging that the direct vote plan be used in as many states as possible, are pointing out that in most states a political party may choose delegates to the national convention under any plan it seems fit to adopt. The question of expense has been raised, but the men who are advocating the direct vote plan insist that any political party ought to be willing and able to bear the expense of the new method of choosing delegates. The whole subject is likely to receive a great deal of attention between now and January next, when state political committees will be very generally reorganized, and will be adopting plans for the choosing of delegates to the national convention.

Identifying Bullets. In an address to the Paris Academy of Sciences Professor Battaglia contends that when a leaden bullet travels through flesh, it leaves characteristic marks upon it, which are not obliterated by the subsequent passage of the bullet through flesh, provided that it does not strike a bone. It is even possible, he claims, to identify the nature of the garment through which the bullet has passed by a careful examination of the marks on the lead.

Allie Moore Takes Pride in Calling Himself a "Charlevoix Boy."

Allie Moore, the afore-time champion roller skater, and who always takes pride in calling himself the "Charlevoix Boy," writes the following to a friend in this city from Liverpool, England, where he is doing a vaudeville stunt.

He is on a tour under contract with a vaudeville syndicate, and goes from Liverpool to Cardiff, Wales, and from there to Scotland, where he will skate in Glasgow.

In a month or so he will go to Paris and from there to St. Petersburg, Russia. According to his letter he is doing well and hopes to visit good old Charlevoix some time in 1913. He adds:

"Many a night I dream I am in the old sail boat, just coming up to the dock to have a word with the boys, but some way or other just as I get up to jump on the dock with a line, the boat seems to head reach and pay off on the other stretch, and I am never able to land. Only a dream, but I hope to make it a reality."

Brutus Potato Buyer Gets $76.28 Damages from G. R. & I. Railroad.

Jesse S. Dennis secured damages from the G. R. & I. railroad in justice court last week, amounting to $76.28. Dennis, whose home is in Brutus, shipped a carload of potatoes to Kansas City, and alleged that the railroad agent at Brutus forgot to notify the Kansas City agent that the products might be examined before delivered. The consignee refused to accept the potatoes, and by the time arrangements had been made to have the car opened had purchased elsewhere. The amount of damage was set according to the drop in potatoes during the time the car remained unsold at Kansas City.

Soon to Leave Charlevoix.

C. L. Otto came up from Charlevoix Sunday to close up some interests here and say goodbye to his many friends before returning to his old home in Cresline, Ohio, where he is going into the milling business for himself. "Tom" Otto came to East Jordan thirteen years ago to take a position as miller in the old waterpower gristmill operated on Deer Creek by W. H. Porter in years gone by. Later, when the place was purchased by the Light & Power Co., he took a similar position at the Argo mill B and two years ago he went to Charlevoix to become superintendent of the Argo mill A. Undoubtedly Mr. Otto's chief service to the community was the organization of the local fire department which under his efficient leadership became one of the best volunteer fire companies of the state. We sincerely trust that success may attend him in his new undertaking—East Jordan Enterprise.

Mr. Otto and family left Charlevoix last week with the best wishes of their many friends here.

58 PER CENT ALREADY IN FARMS

Remaining Lands Being Rapidly
Taken Up By Settlers

From 1904 to 1910 Over One-Half Million Acres Added to the Farm Lands—Figures Showing Increase.

Fifty-eight per cent of Western Michigan is already in farms. Furthermore, its remaining lands are rapidly being taken for agricultural purposes. During the six years between the censuses of 1904 and 1910, over one-half million acres were added to the farm lands. The percentage increase amounted to 133 per cent.

Nearly ninety per cent of the land in Ottawa county is now into farms and better than 85 per cent of Kent county belongs to the agriculturists. Kalkaska county is the least developed of the twenty in the Western Michigan territory, but 22 per cent of its lands being into farms.

The exact per cent of each county that is into farms, according to the 1911 census, is as follows:

1. Ottawa county, 89.0; 2. Kent county, 88.3; 3. Montcalm county, 84.9; 4. Mecosta county, 78.2; 5. Leelanau county, 73.6; 6. Oceana county, 70.1; 7. Osceola county, 67.3; 8. Newaygo county, 59.8; 9. Grand Traverse county, 57.1; 10. Muskegon county, 57.4; 11. Mason county, 51.2; 12. Benzie county, 40.1; 13. Charlevoix county, 45.3; 14. Antrim county, 47.5; 15. Emmet county, 40.3; 16. Manistee county, 40.3; 17. Wexford county, 40.0; 18. Missaukee county, 39.0; 19. Lake county, 23.7; 20. Kalkaska county, 22.0.

The figures which tell what proportion of the farm land is improved also give Ottawa county the lead, 76.3 per cent being improved. In Lake county but 38.6 per cent is improved. The ranking of the 20 counties is as follows:

1. Ottawa county; 2. Kent county; 3. Montcalm county; 4. Oceana county; 5. Grand Traverse county; 6. Muskegon county; 7. Mason county; 8. Mecosta county; 9. Antrim county; 10. Wexford county; 11. Kalkaska county; 12. Leelanau; 13. Osceola county; 14. Manistee county; 15. Newaygo; 16. Benzie county; 17. Charlevoix county; 18. Emmet county; 19. Missaukee county; 20. Lake county.

In Lake county the average size of the farms is 119.8 acres, and in Ottawa county 70.4 acres.

The average number of improved acres per farm is 38.3 for Kent county and 37.2 for Emmet county.

The average value of the Kent county farm is $3,517 and of the Charlevoix county farm $2,701. The average values of the farms for the several counties of the region are as follows:

1. Kent county, $3,517; 2. Ottawa county, $3,150; 3. Mason county, $4,273; 4. Oceana county, $4,239; 5. Leelanau county, $4,239; 6. Grand Traverse county, $4,173; 7. Montcalm county, $4,070; 8. Muskegon county, $3,977; 9. Newaygo county, $3,942; 10. Manistee county, $3,580; 11. Osceola county, $3,176; 12. Mecosta county, $3,166; 13. Lake county, $3,068; 14. Missaukee county, $3,036; 15. Kalkaska county, $3,009; 16. Antrim county, $2,982; 17. Wexford county, $2,905; 18. Benzie county, $2,866; 19. Emmet county, $2,804; 20. Charlevoix county, $2,701.

The average acre valuation of the farm land in the several counties varies from $40.76 in Ottawa county to $14.03 in Lake county. The exact figures are as follows:

1. Ottawa county, $40.76; 2. Kent county, $39.00; 3. Mason county, $30.08; 4. Grand Traverse county, $27.26; 5. Oceana county, $27.71; 6. Muskegon county, $25.56; 7. Montcalm county, $26.44; 8. Manistee county, $22.75; 9. Newaygo county, $21.43; 10. Benzie county, $20.71; 11. Leelanau county, $20.52; 12. Wexford county, $18.79; 13. Osceola county, $17.58; 14. Antrim county, $17.46; 15. Missaukee county, $17.37; 16. Emmet county, $17.13; 17. Mecosta county, $16.07; 18. Kalkaska county, $16.15; 19. Charlevoix county, $15.33; 20. Lake county, $14.03.

COHEN-LEVINSON

Popular Charlevoix Girl Married at St. Louis, Missouri.

Miss Sara Levinson and Mr. Arthur I. Cohen of Jackson, Michigan were married at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. Goldman of St. Louis Mo., Thursday evening, December 28, at 6:00 p. m., only the immediate family being present, Dr. Leon Harrison officiating.

The bride was charmingly gowned in white embroidered marquisette over white satin, the bodice being of pearl garniture, the veil being real lace, the wreath of natural lilies-of-valley. The bride carried a shower bouquet of white rose-buds and lilies-of-valley.

The groom wore conventional black. A seven course dinner followed.

They left at midnight for an extended eastern trip. Jackson will be their future home.

Mrs. Cohen is a well known and popular Charlevoix girl, having lived here all her life.

The Courier joins the many friends in extending congratulations.

CENSUS REPORT

As Taken From the State Agricultural Bulletin.

Farms Average $32.48 and Total State Wealth More than a Billion.

The census bureau has issued a bulletin on agriculture in Michigan which is full of facts and figures of general interest. It shows that Michigan, which ranks eighth in population among the states, is twenty-first in land area, and that more than half the state's area is in farms, which are valued, with their buildings, equipment and stock at $1,088,850,389.

The average value of farm land per acre for the state is $32.48.

During the last decade the population of the state increased 380,191, or 16.1 per cent; the number of farms, 3,699, or 18 per cent; the land in farms, 1,378,916 acres, or 7.9 per cent; while the improved land in farms increased 1,032,828 acres, or 8.8 per cent. During this period the average size of farms increased by more than five acres.

Farm property, which includes land, buildings, implements and machinery, and live stock (domestic animals, poultry and bees), increased in value during the decade 1900-1910 nearly $400,000,000, or 75.7 per cent. This great increase is made up of increases of nearly $192,000,000 in the value of land, and of almost $127,000,000 in the buildings. There is also an increase of nearly $80,000,000 in the value of farm equipment, which include implements and machinery and live stock, of which nearly three-fourths represents the increase in the value of live stock, and the remainder the increase in the value of implements and machinery. In considering the increase in the values of agriculture the general increase in the prices of all commodities in the last ten years should be borne in mind.

The total wealth of the state in the form of farm property is over a billion dollars, of which 82.8 per cent is represented by land and buildings, 12.7 per cent by live stock, and 4.5 per cent by the implements and machinery.

FARMERS' MUTUAL HOLDS ITS ANNUAL MEETING

An Effort is Being Made to Straighten Out Affairs of the Past—Courier Asks for Information
From Its Officers.

The annual meeting of the board of directors of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company was held in Petoskey Tuesday, January 2. The report of the board of auditors appointed by the company and the insurance examiners were read and the work of the past year reviewed, besides the transaction of such other regular business which came before the meeting.

The Farmers' Mutual has passed through a rather stormy year, owing to mismanagement in the past, which resulted in the company having to borrow over $12,000 for fire losses, covering the years 1903, 1905-6-7-8 and 1910, and the payment of nearly $2,800 interest to the First State Bank of Petoskey. This condition had been allowed to exist, in part at least, because in many ways the provisions of the law under which mutual companies were organized during this period were defective. Under the old law mutual companies were not compelled to make an assessment upon its policy holders for the full amount necessary to pay the actual running expenses, and the result was that each of the two companies doing business in the county failed to assess enough to carry on their business. Assessments were paid at the end of the year, and all policy holders were supposed to pay pro rata to the amount of insurance they carried, enough to cancel all indebtedness. Instead of doing this the officers of the company assessed but a portion of the actual amount needed to carry on the business. Each year a balance was left and money was borrowed from local banks to cover the shortage. This left a balance of unpaid running expenses each year, until the load was more than the company could carry.

The legislature of 1910-11 amended this act, making it compulsory for all mutual companies to assess its members each year a sufficient amount to pay all of losses and expenses of the year's business. This compelled each of the two companies to levy an assessment to cover all indebtedness of the past as well as all expenses and losses of the year just completed. In many cases this assessment ran above a hundred dollars and caused great hardship upon the policy holders. Those carry policies did not understand why their assessments were so high, not knowing that in the years past they had not been assessed enough to carry on the actual business and losses of the company. A bitter war had existed between the two companies during these years. Every effort had been made by each to enlarge its membership, and one of the talking points to gain membership was the low rates, and the low rates were made possible by the companies not assessing enough to pay the actual running expenses, and when the law was amended, all shortage had to be covered, and the heavy assessment was the result. Under the newly amended law, it is compulsory that an amount large enough to pay all losses and expenses of the year's business be assessed, and this provision will make a mutual policy one of the safest and most satisfactory forms of insurance now written on farm property.

The two mutual companies doing business in this locality were caught by the provisions of this act, and were forced to pay up all loans and shortages of the past. The Citizens Mutual decided to go into a receiver's hands, while the Farmers' Mutual employed Geo. E. Nichols of Louis as their attorney, and proceeded to spread a special assessment for the purpose of paying their indebtedness.

The indebtedness of both companies was about the same. The court ordered the Citizens' Mutual to spread an assessment of about $10,000 to pay $12,500 of debts, while the Farmers' Mutual spread a special assessment of approximately $17,500 to pay a like amount of indebtedness, which it collected will pay the indebtedness with interest and cost of collection.

The financial report of the auditors of the Farmers' Mutual shows that $5,212 has been collected since September 1 on this special assessment, which has been applied on its indebtedness, and the ready response on the part of those holding policies during the years when the shortage originated, gives assurance of an early liquidation of all its indebtedness. Its business for the year 1911 has been most satisfactory, and shows a net balance of $875 in the bank.

The annual stockholders meeting will be held at the company's offices in Petoskey next Tuesday, at which time four directors will be elected.

The above statement is substantially as we have been able to gather from the officers and policy holders of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance company, with request that the Courier publish the facts in regard to the situation of the two companies. This the Courier will be only too glad to do when it has the facts in its possession. The truth is, however, that the Courier has given little attention to the affairs of either of these companies and is not well informed. It knows that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction among members of these two companies and that there is a wide spread feeling that great injustice is being done them. We have made what little inquiry we could, since receipt of the foregoing statement, and feel that in justice to all concerned that further facts should be given by the officers of the companies, and, at the suggestion of those who are interested in the matter, the following list of questions is propounded. The Courier to the officers. Upon receipt of the answers to these questions, we shall be in better shape to speak further on this question which we know is of great interest to a large number of our readers, but we wish to speak advisably when we do express any specific opinion and make any specific statement of facts, and therefore we will wait until a future issue, before expressing any opinion as to the situation of things or where the responsibility for such conditions lie, and when the facts are obtained, the Courier will pursue its usual policy of speaking out truthfully and fearlessly on the subject.

Did you make and file with the commissioner of insurance and the county clerk in the county in which the home office of the company is situated, the reports required by Section 7273 of the Compiled Laws of 1907?

Did you publish such sworn statement and report twice during the month of January in a newspaper printed in such county, as required by section 7274 of the Compiled Laws of 1907? If so, will you procure certified copies of the same from the county clerk and furnish them to the Courier?

Did you make and file with the commissioner of insurance the affidavit of such publication, as required by section 7274 of the Compiled Laws of 1907?

In the above statement it is admitted that the annual assessments were not in every case made to include all the liabilities of the company at the date of such assessment. Do you as officers, know that by so doing, you were violating the by-laws of your own company, as well as Act 265 of the Public Acts of 1903 and thereby tending yourself liable to a criminal prosecution, the punishment whereof is a fine not exceeding $1,000 nor less than $500 or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than six months nor more than one year or both, such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court?

Can you as business men, entrusted with the management of these respective companies and enjoying the confidence of the members thereof, give to these members any rational excuse for your dereliction of the duty admitted by your statement?

Is it not true that the reasons you did not levy assessments each and every year sufficient to square up the liabilities of the company, was the fact that you were in competition, the one company with the other, and desired to make a favor.

CROPS PAY FOR FARM

Bellaire Pastor Pays for Farm From One Season's Returns.

The Rev. W. P. Mosher, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Bellaire, Antrim county, Western Michigan, realized enough from the sale of the second year's crops to pay for a forty-acre farm. His statement regarding his farming operations is as follows:

"Two years ago I bought 40 acres of land, two and one-half miles from Bellaire, for $625. This year (1911) my two sons worked it during their school vacation and raised $140 worth of corn and fodder from about six acres; $176 worth of potatoes, 335 bushels from three acres of new ground, first plowing, so not well subdued; ten acres of Golden Wax beans, 153 bushels at $2 brought $306; bean straw $8. The total from the 19 acres was $636. You can see this year's crops brought more than the whole 40 acres cost. Besides this we have three acres of beautiful fruit trees, set a year ago last spring. I would not sell this farm for twice what it cost. This is a great country for anything and everything—fruit and general farming."

GOOD ROADS POPULAR

The State Has Built 850 Miles in Six Years

Report Shows Michigan is Hard at Work Bettering Highways.

There have been 850 miles of good roads built in Michigan, by the aid of the state reward, since the highway department was established July 1, 1905, according to a statement made to Governor Osborn by Highway Commissioner H. T. Ely. On this mileage there has been $585,290 paid to the state reward.

Of the total mileage constructed 311 miles were gravel road and 313 miles macadam road. This is not all, however, for as a result of recent activities there are 600 miles in course of construction, or just completed, on which the reward is pending. During the year ending June 30, 1911, there were 304 miles constructed, of which 216 miles were gravel road, the form of highway construction which seems to be most popular in this state and on which the state has paid $103,876 in reward.

The officials say that several counties are planning equally as extensive operations next year, some of them proposing to complete their county systems and get the benefits of easy travel in bad weather as well as in good.

DELL UNDER TRAIN

Petoskey Barber Had Foot Badly Crushed—Amputation Necessary.

Bert Hammond, a well-known barber employed in McCarthy's shop in Petoskey, attempted to jump from a moving train Sunday night and slipping on the ice, had a foot so badly crushed that amputation was necessary above the ankle. He boarded the train at the station and jumped off at the Howard street crossing, two blocks away, when the cars were going at considerable speed. Hammond's home is at Kalkaska, where his father, James Hammond, is the proprietor of the Hammond House. He is 31 years of age and has a wife and two children.

LEFT FOR NEW HOME

Mr. and Mrs. John Kane Will Make Home at Sheboygan, Wisconsin.

On Wednesday, December 20th, occurred the marriage of Laura, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Kirby of this city and John Kane of Sheboygan, Wisconsin.

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, being performed by Reverend F. M. Taylor. The house was prettily decorated and marriage vows were taken between an arch of evergreens. Refreshments were served to the guests, the out-of-town attendants being Pearl Curtis of Manistee and George Kane of Sheboygan, brother of the groom.

The Courier joins in wishing the couple a long life of wedded happiness. Mr. and Mrs. Kane left Thursday, December 28, for their future home at Sheboygan, Wisconsin.

DATES SET FOR SERIES OF MEETINGS

Charlevoix County Farmers' Institute
Preparing for Big Time

ROUND-UP MEETING AT EAST JORDAN

Prominent State Speakers Will Talk on Various Topics

Meetings So Arranged That All Can Attend—
January 20 Set for Charlevoix—Good Program Promised.

John A. Newville, secretary of the Charlevoix Farmers' Institute Society, was in the city last week making preparations for a series of institute meetings to be held throughout the county from January 15 to January 24, and the final round up meeting to be held at East Jordan, Thursday and Friday, February 1 and 2.

The meetings have been arranged so that every farmer in the county can, if he will, attend one or more of them, and the opportunity thus offered should not be missed. There is no farmer who does not feel that he can be told how to farm at a better advantage and with more profit to himself, provided the man who tells him has had actual experience and knows exactly what he is talking about. The dates of the meetings have been arranged as follows:

Boyne Falls, Monday, January 15.
Boyne City, Tuesday, January 16.
Horton Bay, Wednesday, January 17.

Maple Grove, Thursday, January 18.

Bay Shore, Friday, January 19.

Charlevoix, Saturday, January 20.

Norwood, Monday, January 22.

Marion Center, Tuesday, January 23.

Ironton, Wednesday, January 24.

The county roundup institute will follow the above dates and will be held at East Jordan, Thursday and Friday, February 1 and 2.

The state speakers for the roundup will be A. L. Hopkins of Bear Lake, C. E. Bassett of Fennville, J. W. Helme of Adrian, deputy state dairy and food inspector, and Mrs. Emma A. Campbell of Ypsilanti.

The officers of the society are making a great effort to make the series of the meetings the most successful ever held in the county and ask the co-operation of every farmer interested in the betterment of the community in general. One thing should be remembered regarding these meetings, and that is that in the attendance and interest shown largely depends the number of meetings to be held in the county, and such being the case it is up to the farmers of Charlevoix county to turn out and help in this great effort for their betterment. The speakers are men who are thoroughly posted on the subject they are to discuss, and many new topics will be gone over thoroughly.

The program for the meeting to be held in Charlevoix January 20, at the court house, gives promise to be an interesting one, and will be published in detail in these columns at a later date. E. O. Ladd of Old Mission will be the state speaker, also speakers of local prominence will take an active part.

UP FOR SELLING BOOZE

Arden Watson Druggist of Boyne City, Accused of Selling Beer.

For some time reports have been current in Boyne City that the proprietor of one of the drug stores in Boyne City was implicated in selling liquor, but no reliable information could be obtained until Wednesday, when a warrant was issued for the arrest of Arden Watson, proprietor of the Watson drug store of that city, charged with selling beer. At the hearing in Justice Hammond's court, it was learned that sometime in November Watson had sold a bottle of beer to two young men of the village, each of the young men buying a bottle. The case is exciting considerable interest and will be settled in the courts later.

CHAPTER XV.

Life at the office went on much the way it had always gone. In spite of their high resolve, there was a very measurable degree of the furture in their meetings. In essence, these meetings were stolen. They did not ride out brazenly together in the face of the world. On the contrary, they met always unobserved, she riding across the many-gated backroad from Berkeley to meet him halfway. Nor did they ride on any save unfrequented roads, preferring to cross the second rings of hills and travel among a church-going farmer folk who would scarcely have recognized even Daylight from his newspaper photographs. He found Dede a good horse-woman—good not merely in riding, but in endurance. There were days when they covered sixty, seventy, and even eighty miles; nor did Dede ever claim any day too long, nor another strong recommendation to Daylight—did the hardest day ever see the slightest change of the chestnut sorrel's back. "A sure enough hummer," was Daylight's stereotyped but ever enthusiastic verdict to himself.

own mind of the sensational joy-rides and general profligacy with which the newspapers had credited him—thinking this, and wondering whether or not in his modesty, she would claim knowledge of it. To his surprise, her answer was that and uncompromising. "No; I don't." "I know I've been brash on some of those rides that got into the papers," he began his defence, "and that I've been travelling with a lively crowd—" "I don't mean that," she said. "I know I know about it, too, and can't say that I like it. But it is your life in general, your business. There are women in the world who could marry a man like you and be happy, but I couldn't. And the more I cared for such a man, the more unhappy I became. You see my unhappiness. In turn, would you mind making me happy? I should make a mistake, and he would make an equal mistake, though his would not be so hard on him because he would still have his business." "Business?" Daylight gasped. "What's wrong with my business? I play fair and square. There's nothing underhand about it, which can't be said of most businesses, whether of the big corporations or of the cheating, lying, little corner-grocerymen. I play the straight rules of the game, and I don't have to lie or cheat or break any word." "Don't you see," she went on, "the whole game is to make everybody gamble in one way or another. The corner-grocerymen, against the weather and the market on his crops. So does the United States Steel Corporation. The business of lots of men is straight robbery of the poor people, but I've never made that my business. You know that. I've always gone after the robbers." "I missed my point," she admitted. "Wait a minute." And for a space they rode in silence. "I see it more clearly than I can state it, but it's something like this. It's business work, and then's work that isn't business. The former works the soil and produces grain. It's making something that is good for humanity. It actually, in a way, creates something, the article that will fill the mouths of the hungry." "And then the railroads and market-traders and the rest proceed to rob that grain of that same grain," Daylight broke in. "There ain't much difference between playing halfway robber like the railroad hauling that farmer's wheat to market, and playing all robber and robbing the robbers like I do. And, besides, halfway robbery is too slow a game for me to sit in. You don't win quick enough for me." "But what do you want to win for?" Dede demanded. "You have millions and millions, already; why can't you do good with all your money?" Daylight laughed. "Doing good with your money! Ain't it funny, to go around with brass knuckles and a big club breaking folks' heads and taking their money away from them until I've got a pile, and then, repenting of my ways, going around and handing out the heads of the other robbers are breaking? I leave it to you. That's what doing good with money amounts to. Every once in a while some richer folks soft-hearted and takes to driving an ambulance. That's what Carnegie did. He smashed heads in pitched battles at Homestead, regular wholesale head-breaker he was, held up the suckers for a few hundred million, and now he goes around dribbling it back to them. Funny? I leave it to you." He rolled a cigarette and watched her half curiously, half amusedly. His replies and harsh generalizations of a harsh school were disconcerting, and she came back in her earlier position. "I can't argue with you, and you know that. No matter how right a woman is, men have such a way about them—well, what they say sounds most convincing, and yet the women is still certain they are wrong. But there is one thing, the creative joy; and it's a higher joy than mere gambling. Haven't you ever made things yourself—a log cabin up in the Yukon, or a canoe, or raft, or something? And don't you remember how satisfied you were, how good you felt, while you were doing it and after you had it done?" While she spoke his memory was busy with the associations she recalled. He saw the deserted flat on the river bank by the Klondike, and he saw the log cabins and warehouses spring up, and all the log structures he had built, and his sawmills working night and day on three shifts. "Why, loggone it, Miss Mason, you're right—in a way. I've built hundreds of houses up there, and I remember I was proud and glad to see them go up. I'm proud now, when I remember them. And there was Ophir—the most God-forsaken mouse-pasture of a creek you ever laid eyes on. I made that into the big Ophir. Why, I ran the water in there from

The Klondike, eighty miles away. They all said I couldn't, but I did it, and I did it by myself. The dam and the flume cost me four millions. But you should have seen that Ophir—power plants, electric lights, and hundreds of men on the payroll, working night and day. I guess I do get an

CHAPTER XVI.

All-week every one in the office knew that something new and big was afoot in Daylight's mind. On Sunday Dede learned all about it.

"Look at it," said Daylight, extending his arm in a sweeping gesture.

utes wholesale, and making two minutes grow where one minute grew before? Oh, yes, and winning a few trees, too—say several million of them. You remember the quarry I made believe I was looking at? Well, I'm going to buy it. I'm going to buy these hills, too, clear from here around to Berkeley and down the other way to San Leandro. I own a lot of them already, for that matter. But that's the word, I'll be buying a long time to come before anything much is guessed about it, and I don't want the market to jump up out of sight. You see that hill over there. It's my hill running clear down its slopes through Piedmont and halfway along those rolling hills into Oakland. And it's nothing to all the things I'm going to buy." He paused triumphantly. "The ferry system between Oakland and San Francisco is the worst one horse concern in the United States. You cross on it every day, six days in the week. That's say, twenty-five days a month, or three hundred a year. How long does it take you one way? Forty minutes. If you're lucky, I'm going to put you across in twenty minutes. If that ain't making two minutes grow where one grew before, knock off my head with little apples. I'll save you twenty minutes each way. That's forty minutes a day, times three hundred, equal to twelve thousand minutes a year, just for you, just for one person. Let's see; that's two hundred whole hours. Suppose I save two hundred hours a year for thousands of other folks—that's farming some, ain't it? Come on. Let's ride up that hill, and when I get you out on top where you can see something, I'll talk sense."

able report and to show that the cost of insurance for that year was low, and in this way deceive the members by falsifying the facts?

In the statement above it says that the companies borrowed money at the banks from year to year to take care of that part of the expense of the company which was not included in the assessment. Under what authority was this done and is such a loan so made by a bank or other institution or person to the company a valid debt collectible against the company?

It states in the above statement that the general law applying to Mutual Fire Insurance companies was amended at the 1911 session of the legislature. Will you give the number of the Act or the page in the Public Acts where such law may be found? Do you not know that no such law was enacted in 1911, but that the one you refer to was enacted in 1903 and has been in force from that time until the present?

ERADICATION OF SCAB.

Systematic Dipping Will Free the Sheep Flock of This Pest.

Scab is caused by the irritation of a minute insect that lives and propagates on the skin of sheep. It also lives, more or less, on the wool fibers. Away from the sheep, on posts or on the earth, it can also live for an indefinite time, perhaps for several weeks, writes Joseph E. Wieg in the Breeder's Gazette.

The scab insect comes from an egg. This egg is not easily destroyed by dipping. Perhaps there is no known dip that will surely destroy both the insects and the eggs. Therefore, if a man dips his sheep at intervals of three months he will almost certainly have always scab to combat. The time needed for the developing of an egg laying insect from the egg itself is a variable quantity. One should not give a second dipping sooner than seven days after the first, lest some eggs survive both dippings. He should not delay the second dipping more than eleven days, lest some insects may have hatched, attained maturity and themselves laid eggs again.

No one can surely free a flock of sheep of scab with one dipping. Nor is it at all necessary to be forever dipping sheep. Scab is comparatively easy of eradication, if certain principles are observed. First, be very careful in gathering the sheep that none is left in the pasture. Next, be very thorough in the operation of dipping. We will not here discuss the formulas for dips; there are many efficient preparations on the market, and there is the exceedingly efficient lime and sulphur preparation, which when carefully made is very effective and may have considerable virtue as a deterrent of re-infection.

There seems little doubt that dips used as hot as one can bear to thrust his naked arm in and hold it there for a half minute are more efficient than those used cold. Also if the water with which the dip is mixed is lime impregnated and "hard" it is better to soften it with lye, though an excess of lye will injure the wool. In ten days dip the entire flock again, using the same care. If now it can be put on clean, uninfested ground, no further dipping will be needed. The flock should, however, be carefully watched and any suspected individual taken hold of at once. If the sheep must be turned back to the old and infested pasture dip the third time within ten or twelve days. To do these three dippings at one time will cost no more than to do them at intervals of months. The three dippings will, if thoroughly done, absolutely clean the flocks of scab. Now watch for its reappearance from chance infection.

PLAN LONG HIGHWAY.

Improved Road to Be Built From Mexico to Alaska.

That a well improved road from the Mexican boundary to the Alaskan north is now a certainty was the expression before the annual meeting of the Pacific Highway association in Portland, Ore. Delegates from California, Oregon, Washington and British Columbia told of the work that is being accomplished and said that sentiment is now strong for the highway project.

The report of A. E. Todd of Victoria, B. C., was especially encouraging, he reporting that the road from Victoria to Hazelton, eighty miles from the Alaskan boundary, would be open next year.

The Boss' Wife

A Case Where a Woman's Strategy Is Successful

By CLARISSA MACKIE
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The Crane sat all alone on the bench outside the cookhouse door. He had chosen to sit there because the high singing of the Celestina's voice filled in self communion was company for him. The Lark house was empty to the merry crowd which had made it home. One after another the merry god had enured the Lone Bull boys until the Crane, as he was named because of his ungaily height, was the only one left heart free. Married cowpunchers didn't get the ginger somehow as the bachelor ones. Can't enjoy a lynchpin mellow, and their wives always afraid they're going to fall off and get hurt.

The Crane did the sweethearts and wives of his comrades a rank injustice, for each one had all the spirit and "ginger" of the men they loved.

"Sour grapes!" teased Mrs. Clintock, the boss' wife as she listened unconcerned to Gabriel's soliloquy. "Why don't you get married yourself, Mr. Crane? She came around the corner of the cookhouse and sat down on the bench beside the despondent cattleman.

"I suppose you've always been too busy to think about marrying," began Mrs. Clintock softly. "I don't suppose you ever saw a woman you'd care to make your wife."

The Crane was silent for several moments. He brought out another pipe from his pocket, filled it with tobacco and held it unlighted in his big bronzed hand.

"You're mistaken there, ma'am," he said deliberately. "If I had my own way I'd have got married fifteen years ago."

"What happened?" asked Mrs. Clintock breathlessly.

"She married another fellow," his voice was monotonous.

"Oh, dear, how horrid of her!"

"Not if she liked him best," defended Crane.

"Did she?"

"Seems so—or she wouldn't have married him."

"You don't appear to be positive about that fact. Were you—were you engaged to her?"

"Almost."

"How near?"

"All but asking her. I put it off until I came back from getting some cut."

THE CRANE

"I SHALL ALWAYS LOOK ON WOMEN WITH AWE."

He over the Second ranges, and when I came back she'd married a travelling salesman and gone away."

"Let me see, the Second ranges are in Idaho," hazarded Mrs. Clintock.

"Yes."

"I suppose you were cow punching then?"

"Steady."

"Near Newton's place is near the Second ranges. He married my cousin."

"That's where I worked."

"The nearest town is Antelope," ventured Mrs. Clintock, one eye on Crane's thoughtful face.

He turned a pair of humorous gray eyes to hers. "You oughter been a detective," he said quietly.

"I ought to be up at the big house this very moment," cried the boss' wife breathlessly. "I believe I hear the baby crying."

She hurried up the slope to the large lighted house, pausing on the veranda to call down to the lonely figure on the bench. "Why don't you come up there and set the photograph going? No need to sit down there alone."

"Maybe I will by and by," said the Crane.

Mendacious Mrs. Clintock peeped in at the slumbering baby, set the lamp on her writing desk and drew a sheet of paper toward her. The letter she wrote was dated with interrogative marks. It was addressed to Oscar Newton's wife and its destination was Antelope, Ida.

She thrust a record into the phonograph, wound up the crank and as it flung forth the strains of "Love's Old Sweet Song," she hurried down the hill toward Jim Lewis' house. "If you mind going up and sitting with the baby, Mr. Crane? Eye got to go down to Lewis'. They're going to a cacon in the morning, and I've got mail to send along."

"I'll take the letters down to Jim, proposed Crane obediently.

"Oh, no, no," laughed Mrs. Clintock. "You look after baby and be sure and don't wake him up."

"The Lord forgave," ejaculated Crane, stuffing his pipe in his pocket.

When Mrs. Clintock returned the big cattleman was endeavoring to hush the lute cries of the infant Clintock. "Here, ma'am," he said tenderly the squirming baby to its mother's outstretched arms. "I shall always look on women with awe, ma'am, jest for the way they can turn off the music with a word. I been talking Dutch to this feller for a half hour, and he only bawls back at me."

"Mother's precious!" soothed Mrs. Clintock, and the precious immediately placed a rosy thumb in his mouth and closed his blue eyes contentedly.

"It does beat all!" ejaculated Crane admiringly.

"What woke him up?" demanded Mrs. Clintock with sudden suspicion, for she had detected a look of tenderness in Crane's eyes. "He was sleeping like a lamb when I left."

"I looked at him," confessed the Crane sheepishly. "I thinks to myself, a cat can look at a king, and I guess a cattleman kin look at a calf baby."

"You didn't touch him?" persisted Mrs. Clintock.

"I guess I hypnotized him like that Trilby feller," evaded Crane.

"Trilby was a girl," corrected the boss' wife, ending the baby wailing her round chin. "Did you touch that baby, Theodore Crane?"

Crane reddened to his ears. "Glad it all," he complained. "I did, if you must know. I looked at him, ma'am, and he looked so consumed cute—laying there sucking his thumb. I kissed the little cuss and he woke up and howled at me."

"He's a naughty little boy," chided Mrs. Clintock, touching a finger to the baby's dimpled cheek. "Kiss him again, Mr. Crane; I don't believe he'll mind now."

She held out the sleeping baby and Crane bent his head awkwardly and pressed a kiss on the fair skin.

"There, be never stirred! He takes it as a compliment that a big busy man should want to kiss a little boy."

Mrs. Clintock's motherly eyes were full of tears as she replaced the baby in the crib and returned to the sitting room.

Crane was leaning over the phonograph, awkwardly fitting on a new record.

"I found a tune I used to know," he explained without looking his head.

"Help yourself," said Mrs. Clintock as she went out to the veranda to meet her husband. She had whispered in his sympathetic ear of the conversation she had had with the lonely cattleman and of the letter she had hastened to send to Idaho when the strains of the phonograph broke forth once more.

"What's that tune?" asked Boss' Clintock, his arm around his wife.

"It's Ascher's 'Alice, Where Art Thou?'" returned the little woman.

"Dick, I believe her name is Alice?"

"You're right as usual is my safe bet," grinned the boss, kissing his wife.

A week later the boss' wife flew down the hill toward the bunk house, where the Crane was eating a solitary supper. Wah Lee, the cook, padded in and out of the room, tunelessly chanting his eternal dirge. Crane effectually stopped the noise by tossing a plate toward his bare heels. As Wah Lee slipped sprawling into the kitchen Mrs. Clintock thrust a rosy face inside the door.

"Do I have a cup of coffee?" she asked breathlessly.

"Yes, ma'am," cried the Crane, getting a chair for her and yelling for the coffeepot. When he had placed bread and butter and cold meat before her and filled a steaming cup she looked at him appealingly.

"I hope you won't be mad at me for what I've done," she began. "I've meddled with your affairs."

"What have you done?" asked Crane tensely.

He thought, would be to surreptitiously darn his socks, as she had been wont to look after the Lone Bull boys before the tyrant baby came.

"Was her name Alice Thorp?" asked Mrs. Clintock excitedly.

Crane stared, and a red flush stained his bronzed cheek. He nodded grudgingly. "It was."

"And she married a man named Weed?"

Again he nodded, and she saw interest in his gaze.

"Well, I took the liberty of writing to my cousin in Antelope, and she says Mrs. Weed is a widow now and has returned to Antelope to live with her father, who is an old man."

"I know him well," said Crane dreamily. "A real gentleman, old Thorp was."

"Well?" Mrs. Clintock's voice was expectant.

"What are you going to do now? My cousin says Alice is as sweet and pretty as ever and that it is common belief that she only married Weed for spite and that she looks so sad sometimes—and once she inquired after you."

"Only once?" demanded Crane jealously. His chair scraped away from the table, and a fighting look came into his eyes.

"The boss says you can take a week's vacation if you want to," said Mrs. Clintock, rising from the table and turning toward the door. "He says he'll make you foreman of the ranch if you want the job and that the house is large enough for three."

A vision of Alice Weed and her father dimmed the Crane's sharp gray eyes. He bent his head with a grace of the warm impulse and kissed Mrs. Clintock's plump little hand.

"God bless you, ma'am!" he said in an unsteady voice.

Perceiving that she had not the faintest idea of the boss' mind, he hurried to the door and slipped out.

Pail of Sand Good Friend.
Always keep handy a pailful of clean sand. Nothing is more useful about the house. It cleans rust; just plunge a rusty knife or tool into the sand several times and see for your self. Then if a pan of grease on the stove starts to blaze, don't douse the stove with water and run out of the kitchen screaming for help or for a Bill. Use sand.

It smother the blaze quickly, dissipates the smoke, and instead of missing up the stove, as would water it really cleans it.

Don't throw away a punctured water bag as being useless. Try filling it with sand heated in a pie plate on shallow pan. The sand will retain heat a long time, and for every practical purpose will be found as good as hot water.

Harness that Will Last Years

The horse harness that is really cheapest—like a man's clothes—is the harness that will stand the longest wear in rain or sunshine. I have made harness for a number of years, and am sure I can make one for you that will be satisfactory in every respect—and the price will be no more than harness sold elsewhere.

Oakland.

"Look at it," said Daylight, extending his arm in a sweeping gesture. "A hundred thousand people, there, and an reason there shouldn't be half a million. There's the chance to make five people grow where one grows now. Here's the scheme in a nutshell. Why don't more people live in Oakland? No good service with San Francisco, and, besides, Oakland is asleep. It's a whole lot better place to live in than San Francisco. Now, suppose I buy in all the street railways of Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, San Leandro, and the rest—bring them under one head with a competent management? Suppose I cut the time to San Francisco—one-half by building a big pier out there almost to Goat Island and establishing a ferry system with modern up-to-date boats? Why, folks will want to live over on this side. Very good. They'll need land on which to build. So, first I buy up the land. But the land's cheap now. Why? Because it's in the country, no electric roads, no quick communication, nobody guessing that the electric roads are coming. I'll build the roads. That will make the land jump up. Then I'll sell the land as fast as the folks will want to buy because of the improved ferry system and transportation facilities.

"You see, I give the value to the land by building the roads. Then I sell the land and get that value back, and after that, there's the roads, all carrying folk, back and forth and earning big money. Can't lose. And there's all sorts of millions in it. I'm going to get my hands on some of that water front and the tide-lands. Take between where I'm going to build my pier and the old pier—it's shallow water. I can fill and dredge and put in a system of docks that will handle hundreds of ships. San Francisco's water front is congested. No more room for ships. With hundreds of ships loading and unloading on this side right into the freight cars of three big railroads, factories will start up over here instead of crossing to San Francisco. That means factory sites. That means me buying in the factory sites before anybody guesses the cat is going to jump much less, which way. Factories mean lots of thousands of workmen and their families. That means more houses and more land, and that means me, for I'll be there to sell them the land. Then there's the water. I'll come pretty close to owning the watershed. Why not the waterworks too? There's two water companies in Oakland now, fighting like cats and dogs and both about broke. What a metropolis needs is a good water system. They can't give it. They're sick-in-the-mud. I'll gobble them up and deliver the right article to the city. There's money there, too—money everywhere. Everything works in with everything else. Each improvement makes the value of everything else jump up. It's people that are behind the value. The bigger the crowd that herds in one place, the more valuable is the real estate. And this is the very place for a crowd to herd. Look at it. Just look at it! You could never find a finer site for a great city. All it needs is the herd, and I'll stampede a couple of hundred thousand people in here inside two years. And what's more, it won't be one of these wildcat land booms. It will be legitimate. Twenty years from now there'll be a million people on this side, the bay. Another thing is hotels. There isn't a decent one in the town. I'll build a couple of up-to-date ones that'll make them sit up and take notice. I won't care if they don't pay for years. Their effect will more than give me my money back out of the other holdings. And, oh, yes, I'm going to plant eucalyptus, millions of them, on these hills."

"But how are you going to do it?" Dede asked. "You haven't enough money for all that you've planned."

"You thirty million, and I'll need more I can borrow on the land and other things. Interest on mortgages won't anywhere near eat up the interest on land values, and I'll be selling land right along."

In the weeks that followed, Daylight was a busy man. It meant quick work on a colossal scale, for Oakland and the adjacent country was not slow to feel the tremendous buying. But Daylight had the ready cash and it had always been his policy to strike quickly. Before the others could get the warning of the boom, he quietly accomplished many things. At the same time that his agents were purchasing corner lots and entire blocks in the heart of the business section and the waste lands for factory sites, Daylight was rushing franchises through the city council, capturing the two exhausted water companies and the eight or nine independent street railways, and getting his grip on the Oakland Creek and the bay tide-lands for his dock system. The tide-lands had been in litigation for years, and he took the full by the horns—buying out the private owners and at the same time leasing from the city fathers. By the time that Oakland was aroused by this unprecedented activity in every direction and was questioning excitedly the meaning of it, Daylight secretly bought the chief Republican newspaper and the chief Democratic organ, and moved boldly into his new offices. Of necessity, they were on a large scale, occupying four floors of the only modern office building in the town—the only building that wouldn't be torn down later on, as Daylight put it. There was department after department, a score of them, and hundreds of clerks and stenographers. As he told Dede:—

"I've got more companies than you can shake a stick at. There's the Alameda & Contra Costa Land Syndicate, the Consolidated Street Railways, the Yerba Buena Ferry Company, the United Water Company, the Piedmont Realty Company, the Fairview and Portola Hotel Company, and half a dozen more that I've got in refer to a notebook to remember. There's the Piedmont Laundry Farm, and Redwood Consolidated Quarries—Starting in with our quarry, I just kept a-going till I got them all. And there's the ship-building company—I didn't get a name for yet. Seeing as I had to have ferries, I decided to build them myself. They'll be done by the time the pier is ready for them."

For months Daylight was buried in work. The outlay was terrific, and there was nothing coming in. Beyond a general rise in land values, Oakland had not acknowledged his irruption on the financial scene. The city was waiting for him to show what he was going to do, and he lost no time about it. The best skilled brains on the market were hired by him for the different branches of the work. Initial mistakes he had no patience with, and he was determined to start right, as when he engaged Wilkinson, almost doubling his big salary, and brought him on from Chicago to take charge of the street railway organization. Night and day the road gangs toiled on the streets. And night and day, pile-drivers hammered the big piles down into the mud of San Francisco Bay. The pier was to be three miles long, and the Berkeley hills were denuded of whole groves of mature eucalyptus for the piling.

At the same time that his electric roads were building out through the hills, the hay-fields were being surveyed and broken up into city squares, with here and there, according to best modern methods, winding boulevards and strips of park. Broad streets, well graded, were made, with sewers and water-pipes ready laid, and named and numbered from his own quarrels. Cement sidewalks were also laid, so that all the purchaser had to do was to select his lot and architect and start building. The quick service of Daylight's new electric roads into Oakland made this big district immediately accessible, and long before the ferry system was in operation hundreds of residences were going up. The profit on this land was enormous. In a day, his onslaught of wealth had turned open farming country into one of the best residential districts of the city.

But this money that flowed in upon him was immediately poured back into his other investments. The need of electric cars was so great that he installed his own shops for building them. But no matter what pressing was on Daylight, his Sundays he reserved for his riding in the hills. It was not the rainy winter weather, however, that brought these rides with Dede to an end. One Saturday afternoon in the office she told him not to expect to meet her next day, and when he pressed for an explanation.

"I've sold Mah."

Daylight was speechless for the moment. Her net meant one of so many serious things that he couldn't classify it. It smacked almost of treachery. She might have met with financial disaster. It might be her way of letting him know she had seen enough of him. Or—

"What's the matter?" he managed to ask.

"I couldn't afford to keep her with my forty-five dollars a ton," Dede answered. "My brother's expenses have been higher, as well, and I was driven to the conclusion that since I could not afford both, I'd better let the mare go and keep the brother."

"Who bought her?" he asked.

Dede's eyes flashed in the way long since familiar to him when she was angry.

"Don't you dare buy her back for me," she cried. "And don't deny that that was what you had in mind."

"If You'd Just Let Me Buy Her Back."

"I wish you would reconsider, Miss Mason," he said softly. "Not alone for the mare's sake, but for my sake. Money don't cut any ice in this. For me to buy that mare wouldn't mean as much as it does to most men to send a bouquet of flowers or a box of candy to a young lady. There's nobody I feel chummy with except you, and you know how little we've chummed—once a week, if it didn't rain, on Sunday. I've grown kind of to depend on you. If you'd just let me buy her back—"

"No, no; I tell you no." Dede arose impatiently, but her eyes were moist with the memory of her pet. "Please don't mention her to me again. If you think it was easy to part with her, you are mistaken. But I've seen the last of her, and I want to forget her."

Daylight made no answer, and the door closed behind her. Half an hour later he was conferring with Jones, an erstwhile elevator boy and rabid proletarian whom Daylight long before had grubstaked to literature for a year. The resulting novel had been a failure. Editors and publishers would not look at it, and Daylight was now using the disgruntled author in a little private secret service system he had been compelled to establish for himself. Jones, who affected to be surprised at nothing after his crushing experience, betrayed no surprise now when the task was given him to locate the purchaser of a certain sorrel mare.

"How high shall I pay for her?" he asked.

"Any price. You've got to get her, that's the point. Drive a sharp bargain so as not to excite suspicion, but get her. Then you deliver her to that address up in Sonoma County. The man's the caretaker on a little ranch I have there. Tell him he's to take whacking good care of her. And after that forget all about it. Don't tell me the name of the man you buy her from. Don't tell me anything about it except that you've got her and delivered her. Savvy?"

But the week had not passed, when Daylight noted the flash in Dede's eyes that he had trouble.

"Something's gone wrong—what is it?" she said boldly.

"Mah," she said. "The man who bought her has sold her already. If I thought you had anything to do with it—"

"I don't even know who you sold her to," was Daylight's answer. "And what's more, I'm not hothering my head about her. She was your mare, and it's none of my business what you did with her. You haven't got her, that's sure, and worse luck. And now, while we're on touchy subjects, I'm going to open another one with you. And you needn't get touchy about it, for it's not really your business at all. It's about that brother of yours. He needs more than you can give him. Selling that mare of yours won't send him to Germany. And that's what his own doctors say he needs—that crack German specialist who rips a man's bones and muscles into pulp and then moulds them all over again. Well, I want to send him to Germany and give that crack a flutter, that's all."

"If it were only possible!" she said, half breathlessly, and wholly without anger. "Only it isn't, and you know it isn't. I can't accept money from you—"

"Now look here, Miss Mason. You've got to get some foolish notions out of your head. This money question is one of the funniest things I've seen. Suppose you was falling over a cliff, wouldn't it be all right for me to reach out and catch you by the arm? Sure it would. You're stumbling in your brother's way. No matter what notions you've got in your head, you've got to get out of the way and give him a chance. Will you let me go and see him and talk it over with him? I'll make it a hard and fast business proposition. I'll stake him to get well, and that's all, and charge him interest."

She visibly hesitated. "And just remember one thing, Miss Mason: It's his leg, not yours." Still she refrained from giving her answer, and Daylight went on strengthening his position. "And remember, I go over to see him alone. He's a man, and I can deal with him better without women-folks around. I'll go over tomorrow afternoon."

(To be continued next week.)

Charles Durham, Livingston, Ill., has succeeded in finding a positive cure for bed wetting. "My little boy wet the bed every night clear through the floor. I tried several kinds of kidney medicine, and I was in the drug store looking for something different to help him when I heard of Drury's Kidney Pills. After he had taken them two days we could see a change, and when he had taken two-thirds of a bottle he was cured. That is about six weeks ago and he has not wet in bed since." Sold by Frank N. CHINESE PUZZLE FOR THE JUDGES Disposition of a Great Estate Hinges on It.

COMES FROM PHILIPPINES.

Supreme Court Must Decide Whether Millionaire Celestial Died in "Year of the Rat" or "Year of the Pig"—May Call in Chinese Expert.

Unless one of the august judges of the supreme court of the United States volunteers to take up and become the Chinese expert of that tribunal it is almost a certainty that the court will have to employ a Chinese expert in language and customs to straighten out a case from the Philippine Islands now pending before it for final settlement.

It is all a question of money money in piles amassed by a wealthy Chinaman, resident of the Philippine Islands. Sy Qula was the name of the Chinaman when he left his native Celestial empire and went to the land of the Philippines early in the last century. The heirs in the islands converted Sy Qula to Christianity and thereafter he bore the name of Vicente Romero Sy Qula. He married a Filipino woman and left his fortune, running into millions, to his children by his Filipino wife. A fortune accumulated in repeated earnings in the rice and hemp crops and wise speculation in real estate.

Vicente Romero Sy Qula was nearing the century mark when death claimed him. His heirs had hardly entered into enjoyment of the fortune when their inheritance was questioned by the Chinese family of a woman who claimed that she had been married to plain Sy Qula in China before he began his Philippine career.

Contentions of Heirs.

The Philippine heirs contend that the Sy Qula married in China was not the Sy Qula who as Vicente Romero Sy Qula became their father.

The contestants have placed in evidence the family tablets of the Chinese Sy Qula family, large wooden tablets covered with Chinese hieroglyphs. The tablets look like Chinese laundry tickets and are now in the possession of the supreme court judges. The defendants have had the tablets translated by experts, who say that the Sy Qula, whose marriage and death is recorded on them, died ten years before the Filipino Sy Qula. This interpretation is disputed by the Chinese applicants for the wealth of Sy Qula; and their experts translate the tablets so that the death of the Chinaman is given in accordance with the date of Sy Qula's death in the Philippines.

In view of the fact that Sy Qula, one of the experts on Chinese customs and language, who figures in the case, is not certain as to whether he was born in "the year of the rat" or in "the year of the pig." It will be rather difficult for the supreme court judges to decide whether or not the Sy Qula of the Chinese applicants is the Sy Qula of the Filipino heirs. It is hard to identify a Chinaman, according to the best authorities on criminology, but to accomplish this difficult task is now up to the supreme court, and the case has come on an appeal from the decision of the highest court in the Philippine Islands. The court there upheld the contention of the heirs that their Sy Qula was a different person from the Chinese applicants' Sy Qula.

Grievance of Witnesses.

The "funeral teller," who was master of ceremonies at the burial of the Chinese Sy Qula and who picked the place on the barren hillside outside of Amoy, where the funeral was held, is positive that the Chinese Sy Qula is no other than the Philippine millionnaire. He has told the courts in the Philippines that he ought to know all about it, for he has the ability to know all things.

The Philippine heirs have a grievance which is also up to the supreme court. The Chinese witnesses in the case were sworn in the Christian way on the Bible. In view of the fact that the witnesses were not Christians the attorneys for the Philippine heirs demanded that the Chinese manner of swearing witnesses be employed, a demand which the courts overruled and to which an exception was noted.

Every day, however, during the progress of the taking of testimony the attorneys for the defense had with them in the court a crate of white roosters. Each witness was challenged when he swore Christian fashion. The defense wanted to put them to the rooster test. The judge would not have it.

The rooster test is a fearsome thing in the Chinese trials. The witness standing in the court, claps of the head of the rooster, which must be pure white, and he does so exclaims, "If I do not tell the truth may my head be chopped off as I chop off the head of this rooster."

HAVE AIRY BEDROOMS.

No Farmer's Child Should Contract Consumption These Days.

There is little doubt that a large portion of the cases of tuberculosis among farmers has its origin in the low, close, unventilated sleeping rooms common to the story and a half dwelling. To save a little in the cost of lumber the farmer has, unwittingly no doubt, prepared conditions the most favorable for the development of germs, which may at any time find lodgment in the lungs of his children. A case is cited where four boys and girls, born of robust parents, but compelled to pass their nights in close, half story rooms, were carried off by consumption almost as soon as they reached maturity, while to their necessity the disease was unknown. The so-called bungalow type of dwelling is little more than a revival, under another name, of the old planer, pestiferous story and a half dwelling.

If the owner will only sleep on his wide porch—winter and summer he may afford to live in it. But to sleep in a room whose ceiling will not allow one to stand upright except on a limited portion of the floor and where the air space is totally insufficient for health is enough to commit slow suicide. If high ceilings are anywhere desirable, that "where" is in sleeping rooms.

A LESSON FROM JAPAN.

Only Big as Kansas, She Has More Than 4,000 Agricultural Schools.

Japan has about the area of Kansas, but her percentage of agricultural land is about that of New Hampshire. It doesn't look as if she would need many agricultural schools, does it? Most of her farms are so small that they would not make a stack yard for one of us.

Yet, twenty-three years ago, says a Japanese writer in Hoard's Dairyman, Japan had six schools where farming was taught. And then came the twenty years of her most rapid progress. China was defeated in war and then the mighty Russia. The whole strength of the nation was expended on those things which would enable her to carry the awful load of army, navy and bonded debt. And what became of the six agricultural schools?

Instead of being allowed to dwindle they have multiplied, until in 1908 there were in Japan 4,375 agricultural schools!

In these schools were enrolled 182,209 pupils, and in that year there were graduated from these schools 33,406 children.

ELECTRIC CURRENTS NO JOKE.

A new French system of electrification consists simply in standing upright in the ground small iron rods with noncorrosible points, the theory being that these rods cause electric discharge from their points and create electric oscillations in the ground. For cereals quarter inch rods about six feet long are suggested. It is alleged that plants grown in the ground so electrified—spinach, strawberries, currants, green peas, etc.—are both earlier and better than others grown in neighboring plots having no rods.

TO KEEP PLANTS MOIST.

Simple and Inexpensive Help in Season of Drought.

To keep young plants moist in dry weather set a pail or other receptacle of water at the edge of their bill and hang over the edge a rag long enough to reach to the bottom of the pail and to the roots of the plants. Leave this overnight and it will put the water just where it is needed without wasting any. In the morning take away the pail and lay the rag around the roots. This prevents excessive evaporation.

Dairy Doings.

The economical butter cow—the butter cow that produces most largely is seldom the smallest eater.

Milking must be done quickly—quickly and thoroughly. Anything that irritates the cows, such as roughness or slow milking, will shorten the milk flow.

Butter should come in twenty minutes of churning and never longer than half an hour. Good salt should be used and great care taken that it is well worked in.

The demand for good, high producing milk cows is great and steadily increasing. Dairying is becoming one of the most substantial industries connected with farming and country life.

Barney's Dairyman not only adds plant food to the soil; it does more—it improves the mechanical condition, increases the water holding capacity and raises the temperature in early spring. The intelligent use of Barney's Dairyman has made thousands of worn and unprofitable soils, profitable and lifted the farm mortgage.

WHY ALL SHOULD AID GOOD ROADS

Means Profit For Everybody, Farmer or Banker.

ALL TRADES ARE BENEFITED.

Merchants Will Enjoy Wider Trade Relations. Publishers Larger Circulation. Hotel Proprietors More Tourists and Bankers More Deposits. Owning to Increase in Profits.

The work of improving public roads is not up to a certain class of people. It is up to everybody, whether he be a farmer or banker. All should be interested, as good roads mean profit, says the Ohio Good Roads Federation for instance.

If you are a farmer your farm will increase in value, you can raise more profitable crops, your cost of hauling will be lower, you can market your products when prices are best, your children can get to school, your family can attend church, your physician will be in closer touch with you, your boys and girls will stay on the farm, and you will have better mail service, more social life and happier conditions all around.

If you are a merchant good roads will enlarge your trading radius and make it possible for purchasers to reach you every day in the year and thereby increase your sales.

If you represent a chamber of commerce or a board of trade, because the public roads are commercial feeders to the cities and every improvement of those roads means a greater prosperity to the cities through increased agricultural production and greater stimulus to all industries.

If you are a highway official, because you are striving for better methods of road construction and maintenance and more efficient road administration.

If you are a railroad man, because improved roads mean greater production, consequently more traffic, prevent freight congestion, bring more industries, more roads, more tourists.

If you are an automobile user, because you can get the benefit of your machine every day in the year, your repair bills will be lower, longer and better cars will be possible at all seasons of the year.

If you are a dealer in farm products and implements, because you can receive the products and deliver the implements at all times.

If you are an automobile manufacturer, because every mile of improved roads means a greater demand for both pleasure and commercial cars, increases wealth and consequently the power to purchase.

If you are a publisher or editor, because improved roads make wider circulation possible, increase advertising by stimulating commercial enterprises, and because road improvement is the most important economic question of the age.

If you are a manufacturer of road machinery or road materials, because road improvement means more business.

If you are the proprietor of a hotel, because improved roads mean more tourists and more commercial travel. New England, with its system of good roads, gets $20,000,000 a year from tourists alone.

If you are a banker, because good roads will increase agriculture, commerce and manufacture, depositors, deposits and dividends.

If you are a progressive citizen, because you cannot progress so long as your state and nation remain in the mud.

Ashtar Club Parlors.

The Ashtar club parlors are now nicely fitted out on the second floor of the Paddock building, and are connected with the Masonic Lodge rooms located over the Sentinel office. In the parlors everything has been made to make it a place for the members to spend their leisure time during the day and during the evening the attendance is usually large. A new pool table, and wall hangings have just been put in, making it a fine place to spend the winter evenings.

MANY POST CARDS ARE DESTROYED

RURAL CARRIERS JOB IS NO SNAP

Don't Ask Him to Fish Around in Mail Box for Pennies

Keep a Supply of Stamps on Hand—The Proper Way to Get a Money Order Paid.

The Detroit papers state that 175,000 post cards were destroyed at that office during the holidays because they were unaddressed. This calls attention to some postoffice rules which patrons of all post-offices ought to know.

A postal card is not addressed and is signed by Bill or Molly or in any way except by the full name and address of the sender, of course it cannot be sent or delivered nor is there anything which can be done with it except to destroy it.

Post cards must have postage paid in full. A card of postal card size requires but one cent, but if the card is made in whole or in part of cloth, leather, wood or any other material than card board, or of a size not permissible by law, and has writing other than the address, signature and a greeting, it must have at least 2 cents postage. So, too, cards having mica, tinsel or any rough substance on them must be enclosed in envelopes and tightly sealed and they require at least 2 cents postage.

Patrons on rural routes should remember that the law does not permit the use of their rural boxes for anything except mail. No person except the owner of the box and the rural carrier has any right to even open the box of any patron. Any other person who opens this box for any other purpose violates the law. Any person who opens this box to put in letters, circulars, packages or anything whatever on which postage has not been paid with the expectation that you or anyone else will take it out violates the law. Rural boxes are exclusively for the reception of legitimate mail on which postage has been duly paid by stamps affixed and these stamps must be canceled before this mail can be delivered.

Here is another point to which all should give careful attention as it is almost sure to lead to your letters not being mailed. The law requires that stamps should be affixed to all mail. Carriers are not required to fish around in the boxes for pennies with which to buy stamps for letters. Each patron should keep stamps or stamped envelopes constantly on hand. Buy before you out. If by accident you are not supplied, then put the money in an envelope, or wrap it up securely, put the amount on the outside and put by itself in the mail box so that the carrier can readily find it. Don't think that the carrier has a snap. He is one of the hardest worked men in the community. Any patron who thinks the job is an easy one will soon change his mind if he once gets it. Help him all you can.

There are several things about money orders not well understood. The other day a gentleman came to a neighboring office and presented a money order drawn to his wife which he had signed by her authority on the face, signing her name. It could not be paid to him. No postoffice force wants to refuse to pay an order and so discommodate the holder of the order, but the law is rigid and postoffice employees are held strictly accountable. The way to get money on a money order is this:

If presented by the person to whom it is drawn, write your name in the proper place on the face just as it is written on the order.

If to be presented by any other person, turn the order over, write the name of the person to whom it is to be paid and your own name on the back in the place provided for that purpose. Give the order to the one who is to collect it and when brought to the window, he or she should endorse it on the face just as his name has been written on the back.

All persons not personally known to the postoffice force or some of them should be identified.

Merchandise is fourth class. The rate of postage is one cent an ounce. Books and photographs are one half cent an ounce. They must be so wrapped as to be subject to examination without breaking the seal. If sealed or if they contain written matter, they must pay postage at 2 cents an ounce. All letters out of town or on route are 2 cents an ounce. Leaving unsealed does not lessen the rate of postage.

WILL INTRODUCE BILL

Congressman Loud Will Make an Effort to Help Potoskey.

A Washington dispatch says: Congressman Loud proposes to help Potoskey overcome a disadvantage with which it labors as compared with Harbor Springs. He has introduced a bill providing that $15,000 be expended in dredging Potoskey harbor to a greater depth, the money to be taken from a balance fund for the Potoskey breakwater.

As it is now the more important vessels despite the breakwater go right past Potoskey to Harbor Springs, where there is one of the finest natural harbors on Lake Michigan.

Mr. Loud also introduced a bill providing $80,000 for a federal building at Charlevoix.

CHAPEL & CO. SELL

Dispose of Holding After Nineteen Years in Business

Bruno Herman of St. Joseph Will Take Possession This Week.

Last week a deal was made whereby F. N. Chapel & Co. disposed of their drug store to Bruno Herman of St. Joseph, a druggist of twenty years experience, and who comes well recommended from his former place of business.

The firm of F. N. Chapel & Co. have been in the drug business in Charlevoix for 19 years, and are one of the most well known drug firms in northern Michigan. The first four years in business they were located in the Croner building, now occupied by the 5 and 10 cent store. During the year they bought the lot where the present store now stands and erected the building which for the last 15 years has been their home.

Mr. Herman was in business in Joseph until about a year ago, when he disposed of his interests there, and has since been looking for a location. From what we can learn, he has been in nearly all the western states and finding nothing that suited him, returned to Michigan, where he learned there was a chance of buying in this city. Upon his arrival here it did not take him long to close the deal, claiming Charlevoix as the best location he had found since disposing of his St. Joseph holdings.

Mr. Herman arrived in the city today and the store will be closed for a few days, during which time inventory of the stock will be taken, and when reopened he will assume its management.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapel will leave about the first of February for the west to look after their interests there.

MRS. BARRETT DEAD

Had Been Brought Here from East Jordan for Medical Attendance.

Mary Elizabeth Barrett, wife of Charles Barrett of East Jordan, died at her home on Clinton street Sunday morning between nine and ten o'clock, after a long and severe illness from heart trouble.

Mrs. Barrett was born in Kent county in 1860, and for about thirty years has lived at East Jordan.

Last June she was moved here so that she might receive better medical attention and has since been here until the time of her death. She is the mother of four children, who beside the husband are left to mourn their loss.

The services took place from the home Tuesday morning. Those from out of town attending were her daughter, Florence, of East Jordan, and Mrs. Grace Cole of Mootana, who was with her mother during her illness and death.

CONDITIONS ARE BETTER

Local Option Blessing to County Says George H. VanPelt

Takes a Whallop at "Wet" on Method Used in Getting Names.

The following communication, written under date of January 4, by our fellow townsman, George H. VanPelt, clearly defines his position on the "wet" and "dry" question. It is written in his characteristic manner and contains some points which will trouble the propertors of "the working men's club rooms" to answer.

"Prohibition does not prohibit, says some people. That is true when taken as a separate and positive statement, but it does help to prohibit, and prevent a whole lot of double-dyed villany, suffering from hunger, from lack of clothing, from deep degradation, abuse of wives and children, as well as many other things.

"The past three years experience of Charlevoix being without saloons will go down in history as the beginning of better days. Of course there has been bootlegging, pigs without eyes, officers without either ears or eyes and law breakers galore, but in spite of these, the people have grown better mentally, morally and physically. Wives have been happier, both they and their children clad, schooled and fed. Storekeepers have not lost as many bad debts and their collections have been better and a general improvement in the affairs of the city and this, on account of the absence of the open saloons and its accompanying evils. So if prohibition does not prohibit, it does most surely work for the betterment of mankind.

"The saloon element circulated papers which were presented to the voters to be signed, saying that every voter must put himself on record as to whether he wants the saloon or not, and when someone said, 'I don't want a saloon,' they said, 'Well then, sign on this side,' and the man signed thinking he had cast his influence on the law and order side and against the saloon, when in reality every name on the list was for a saloon. Undoubtedly many men vote for the open saloon because they wish to be thought independent, while in reality they are afraid of the success and taints of the saloon-keepers which are flying at them. When you are asked to vote for the saloon, just look the questioner squarely in the face and first answer this mental question, which will naturally present itself. 'Now suppose I were in a big hall, and someone would get up and announce, 'I'm in favor of the saloon will all go on one side of the room, and those opposed to the saloon will go over on the opposite side.' Then after each party has gone to their respective places, look both crowds over, and you take my word for it, the appearance or rather the difference in the appearance between the men on the liquor and saloon side, as compared with those on the law, order and no saloon side, will be so great that you will then be able to say, 'I'll not vote for your nasty old saloon, because I do not want it. I know of too many families who have been broken up and their homes made desolate in consequence of the saloon.'

"Another movement which is bound to mean a great deal to our city is one started by the Warner-Newton Company of Grand Rapids, Michigan. It is conceded that there are lands in this vicinity which would produce an abundance of everything that any farm in any country whatever could produce were they given the proper care and attention. Now comes an opportunity for the opening up of these lands and with this opportunity—the land owners will give heed—will come people. This big movement is in charge of people who understand the promoting of big affairs and if we all join together and help it is bound to prove a success.

The Warner-Newton Company of Grand Rapids desires to secure as many options as possible on swamp and farm lands in Charlevoix county. On securing these lands the company will further promote the movement by settling people on the farms to care for them. It must be remembered that the great Panhandle district in Texas was the result of an action of this kind and it must also be known that Mr. Newton of the Warner-Newton Company of Grand Rapids was the man who engineered the big Panhandle affairs. This firm has a representative in Boyne City, to whom all who are interested should call for particulars. This movement, if carried out, should mean something to us all and we should do all in our power to make it a success. Mr. Ira J. Benveniste is the representative in Boyne City—Boyne City Journal.

MESICK AND MILLER

Charlevoix Boy Member of Potoskey's New Law Firm.

Combination Promises to be a Very Strong One Legally.

Mesick & Miller is the name of a new law firm that began business last week. The members of the firm are Hon. W. S. Mesick, who has conducted a law office in Potoskey for several years, and Leon Miller, who recently became his assistant. Mr. Mesick since coming to Potoskey from Mancelona a few years ago, has built up an extensive practice and is interested in many business enterprises. He was at one time a member of the lower house of congress.

Mr. Miller came to Potoskey six months ago, his home being at Charlevoix previous to that time. He is a graduate from the literary department of the University of Michigan as well as the law department of the same school. The offices on Howard street which have been occupied by Mr. Mesick will be the headquarters of the new firm.—Potoskey Evening News.

Leon Miller is a graduate of the Charlevoix schools, class of 1905, and the following fall entered the University of Michigan, taking up the six years literary-law course. Last spring he graduated with honors from the U of M. and on July 11, entered the law office of Mr. Mesick, and has been with him until the partnership was formed. His many friends to the city wish him success in his new venture.

GIFTS OF APPRECIATION

Presented by Members of G. A. R. and W. R. C. to its Officers.

The W. R. C. and G. A. R. installation Thursday evening was a success in every detail. At the close of the installation, President Mrs. C. R. Bellinger, with a few words of appreciation in behalf of the W. R. C., presented worthy secretary Mrs. Amanda Moore with a beautiful salad dish, as a remembrance from the members for the faithful work and high esteem in which she is held by all. This was followed by a few remarks from press correspondent, Mrs. Pollie Bagleton, to the worthy president for her faithfulness in performing her duties for the past two years, and in behalf of the G. A. R. she was presented with a beautiful salad dish. It is the desire of the W. R. C. to do all they can to cheer the hearts of the few that are left of the dear old G. A. R.

After a fine program, which was greatly enjoyed by all members, a delicious chicken pie supper was served, making it an evening long to be remembered.

SHRINERS SUMMER CITY

Committee Said to Have Chosen Shores of Pine Lake

Will Be Mammoth City Several Weeks of Year—No Confirmation.

Many rumors are afloat regarding the location of the headquarters of the A. O. U. N. M. S. of the United States. A committee of this high Masonic order was in Potoskey and vicinity last fall for the purpose of looking at land, but no report was made.

It is rumored that the committee has decided on Pine Lake to Charlevoix county as the location, but nothing definite can be obtained, as the committee, which was appointed to investigate affairs for the supreme shrine of the United States, will not make its report until August; so the information regarding Pine Lake location can not be given out as authentic.

Potoskey is greatly interested in the project, for should the city decide upon Pine Lake this city will receive many benefits, while Charlevoix county will have the responsibility. The headquarters will be a regular city, and will contain about 100,000 people during a part of the year. As the matter is national, locations have been offered all over the United States.—Potoskey Evening News.

This article taken from the Potoskey Evening News about covers the facts regarding the Shriners and the chance of their locating here. From what can be learned the location for the city lies between Charlevoix and one of the western states. The committee was here last fall, and several times representatives have since been here looking the ground over. Many claiming to be on the inside state that it is a sure thing, while on the other hand, it is claimed that no definite information will be given until the committee on location make their report. To the mean-while, let us all hope for Charlevoix.

CHARLEVOIX WON

Cleaned Upon Harbor Springs by a Score of 23-6.

Last Friday evening the Harbor Springs Independent basketball team and the Charlevoix Independent played one of the hardest fought games that has been witnessed here for some time. The visiting team thought it had the game won from the start, but before it was over, they greatly changed their minds regarding the ability of the home team.

In picking on individual stars, there were none far either, both playing a team work game, Charlevoix making the better showing of the two teams.

The score was 23 to 6 in favor of Charlevoix. A small crowd witnessed the game.

SOCIALISM WILL NOT RELIEVE CONDITIONS

So Claims Mr. Lybarger in Debate Held Friday Night.

MUST CURB TRUSTS AND MONOPOLIES

Heavy Tax Should be Levied Upon All Corporations

Must Reserve Individual Initiative and Main-ain Free and Open Competition in All Lines.

The debate Friday evening at the opera house between Lee Francis Lybarger of Philadelphia and Joseph Warnock of Harbor Springs, was well attended despite the inclement weather. The question as presented for debate was as follows: "Resolved, That taxation of Monopolies will secure justice and freedom for all, but that the Socialistic solution, even just, means industrial despotism."

Mr. Lybarger, who had delivered his lecture the Tuesday evening previous under the auspices of the lecture bureau, took the affirmative and Mr. Warnock the negative side of the proposition. Each speaker was given fifteen minutes time, when his opponent followed for a like period, and this plan of procedure was followed until each had had the floor four times.

Mr. Lybarger is a fluent and forceful speaker, and brought out his points so plainly that anyone could understand what he was contending for. Both speakers agreed up to a certain point, it being contended by both that the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few was a menace to the safety of the public, and that some method must be devised to curb the trusts and monopolies. Mr. Lybarger held that the source of all wealth was the land, and his remedy for preventing monopoly in any form, was for the government, both national, state, and municipal, to levy a heavy tax on the incomes of all corporations whose net profits exceeded a reasonable amount. He enlarged upon this theory, but this is in substance his remedy for existing conditions. He denied that socialism would in any way relieve present conditions, and asserted that the claims put forth by socialists were dreams of visionary, though sincere men. He asserted that if the socialistic idea could be put into operation, it would mean industrial despotism, far worse in its results than we now have. On the other hand, he claimed that his plan would preserve the individual initiative, and maintain free and open competition in every line of enterprise. His points were well brought out, and while the Courier does not agree entirely with his theories, he put up an excellent argument for the ideas he holds.

Mr. Warnock, while not an experienced debater, upheld the socialistic theories to a most creditable and forceful manner. He, of course, denied that Mr. Lybarger's remedy would result in any benefit to the nation, and claimed that the only relief in sight was the adoption of the socialistic plans as set forth in the standard literature of that organization. Mr. Warnock's statements as to how he would apply the socialistic remedy was not very clearly defined. He stated that the socialists would secure the right of labor "peacefully if possible, but otherwise secure them anyway." A number of socialists who were present were not pleased with this frank statement from the speaker, and claim that this statement does not express the intentions of the great conservative element among their ranks.

It is claimed by both speakers that labor is the source of all wealth, and should receive a fair (Continued on Page 8.)

PREMIUM PILLOW TOPS

Those who are entitled to sofa pillow tops are requested to send in the picture they desire to be used at once. Many have neglected to do so, and the consequence is that those who sent in their pictures at an early date are anxious for their pillow tops. We have been waiting to get enough of the pictures to send in at least 20, at once, but many have neglected to send in their copy. Attend to this at once.

Germs Spread in Skin

Eczema, Psoriasis and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seems a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema. A 25c bottle will prove this to you.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble but have never seen such remarkable cures as those from D. D. D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

We are so confident that D. D. D. will reach your case that it will cost you nothing if the very first full size bottle fails to make good every claim. If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D. D. D. anyway. We know that D. D. D. will help you. F. G. Hines & Co., Druggists

WHEAT NOT INJURED

According to Views of Correspondents Throughout State

Average Price in State is Eighty-Eight Cents Per Bushel—Corn Sixty-Six Cents.

In answer to the question, "Has wheat during December suffered injury from any cause?" 228 correspondents in the state answer "yes" and 280 "no," and in answer to the question "Has the ground been well covered with the snow during December?" 51 correspondents answer "yes" and 479 "no."

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in December at 112 flouring mills was 92,081, and at 112 elevators and to grain dealers 215,533 or a total of 307,614 bushels. Of this amount 304,122 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 13,200 in the central counties and 13,292 in the northern counties and upper peninsula.

The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the five months, August-December, was 7,000,000.

Sixty-seven mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in December.

The average condition of live stock in the state reported as follows, comparison being with stock in good, healthy and thrifty condition: Horses and sheep 45, cattle 41 and swine 46. The average prices January 1st of some of the principal farm products in the markets where farmers usually market such products were as follows:

The average price of wheat per bushel was 88 cents; rye 83 cents; shelled corn 64 cents and oats 47 cents. The average price of hay per ton was $17.32. The average price of fat cattle was $1.50 per cwt.; of fat hogs $3.60 per cwt., and of dressed pork $7.50 per cwt.

The average price of each class of horses is as follows: Under one year old $51.72; between one and two years old $85.85; between two and three years old $124.45 and three years old and over $162.49.

Milk cows were worth $41.73 per head. Cattle other than milk cows, under one year old $21.11; between one and two years $20.56; between two and three years old $31.02 and three years old and over $39.53.

Sheep under one year $3.24 and one year old and over $3.75. Hogs not fattened, $5.08 per cwt.

The prices given are for the state. The price of wheat is 1 cent lower than one year ago and rye 11; corn 12; oats 13; and hay $3.78 higher.

The average prices of horses, etc., one year ago was as follows: Under one year old $32.51; between one and two years old $85.40; between two and three years old $123.26 and three years old and over $162.01.

Milk cows $43.90 per head. Cattle other than milk cows, under one year old $12.77; between one and two years old $21.41; between two and three years old $32.50, and three years old and over $41.41.

Sheep under one year old $3.00 and one year old and over $1.78. Hogs not fattened were worth $6.44 per cwt.

Charles Durham, Livingston, Ill., has succeeded in finding a positive cure for bed wetting. "My little boy wet the bed every night clear through the floor. I tried several kinds of kidney medicine and I was in the drug store looking for something different to help him when I heard of Foley's Kidney Pills. After he had taken them two days we could see a change and when he had taken two-thirds of a bottle he was cured. That is about six weeks ago and he has not wet in bed since." Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

School Reports

COUNTY NORMAL

Most of the members of the Normal class have returned to school from their various homes after the Christmas holidays. A few are still detained because of the impossible condition of the roads.

A pigeon that had become badly chilled was brought into the Normal by Mr. DeVoe Monday morning. After sometime it responded to the treatment given it and has now almost entirely recovered.

A number of the former graduates of the Normal visited the class before the Christmas vacation. Miss Bessie Northridge, class '10, who is attending school at Ypsilanti, was one of the visitors. Others were Miss Grace Papenhausen, class of '05 and Miss La La Simpson, class of '11, who are attending the M. Pleasant Normal, Miss Andrew Delaney, who is teaching at Bay Shore and Miss Ethel Murray, who has a school near Clarion, also visited the Normal.

The class appreciated very much the condition of the Normal room floor, which was thoroughly cleaned during the vacation.

The Danger of La Grippe

Is its fatal tendency to pneumonia. To cure your la grippe coughs take Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. R. E. Fisher, Washington, Kansas, says: "I was troubled with a severe attack of la grippe that threatened pneumonia. A friend advised Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and I got relief after taking the first few doses. I took three bottles and my la grippe was cured." Get the genuine, in the yellow package. Easy Stairs

The very name of ease is reached in stairs that have twelve to fifteen inches broad and risers five to seven inches high. The run or distance in most houses is too short to allow of this, but they should come as near it as the architect of the house will permit. It is so easy to elude such stairs that one hardly is aware of any effort.

DANGER IN DELAY

Kidney Diseases are too Dangerous for Charlevoix People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they get firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health is gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, limbo, urinary troubles, dropsy, and Bright's disease, follow as the kidneys get worse. Don't neglect your kidneys. Help the kidneys with the reliable and safe remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, which has cured people right here in Charlevoix.

Mrs. John Hull, 192 W. Lincoln Ave., Charlevoix, Mich., says: "I gladly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. I have used them and they have done me a world of good. I first used them about a year ago when I had a severe attack of lumbago. I suffered greatly and tried many remedies, but got no relief, until I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store. A few months ago, I was again having trouble from my kidneys and had backache and pains in my loins. I again procured Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly, bringing me entire relief. I value them very highly."

For Sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

CHAPTER XVII.

For six weeks band-running Daylight had seen nothing of Dede except in the office, and there he reluctantly refrained from making approaches. But by the seventh Sunday his hunger for her overmastered him. It was a stormy day. A heavy southeast gale was blowing, and squall after squall of rain and wind swept over the city. He could not take his mind off her, and a persistent picture came to him of her sitting by a window and sewing feminine fripperies of some sort. When the time came for his pre-luncheon cocktail to be served to him in his rooms, he did not take it. Filled with a daring determination, he glanced at his note-book for Dede's telephone number, and called for the switch.

At first it was the landlady's daughter who was raised, but in a minute he heard the voice he had been hungry to hear.

"I just wanted to tell you that I'm coming out to see you," he said. "I didn't want to break in on you without warning, that was all."

"Has something happened?" came her voice.

"I'll tell you when I get there," he evaded.

She came herself to the door to receive him and shake hands with him. He hung his mackinaw and hat on the rack in the comfortable hall and turned to her for direction.

"They are busy in there," she said, indicating the parlor, from which came the hoarse voices of young people, and through the open door of which he could see several college youths. "So you will have to come into my rooms."

She led the way through the door opening out of the hall to the right, and, once inside, he stood awkwardly rooted to the floor, gazing about him and at her and all the time trying not to gaze. In his perturbation he failed to hear and see her invitation to a seat.

"Won't you sit down?" she repeated. "Look here," he said, in a voice that shook with passion. "There's one thing I won't do, and that's propose to you in the office. That's why I'm here—Dede Mason, I want you, I just want you."

—So precipitate was he, that she had barely time to cry out her involuntary alarm and to step back, at the same time catching one of his hands as he attempted to gather her into his arms.

"Oh, I knew I'm a sure enough fool," he said. "I—I guess I'll sit down. Don't be afraid, Miss Mason. I'm not real dangerous."

"I'm not afraid," she answered, with a smile, slipping down herself into a chair.

"It's funny," Daylight sighed, almost with regret: "here I am, strong enough to bend you around and tie knots in you—here I am, used to having my will with man, beast or anything—and here I am sitting in this chair, as weak and helpless as a little lamb. You sure take the starch out of me."

"I—I wish you hadn't asked," she said softly.

"Mebbe it's best you should know, a few things before you give me an answer," he went on, ignoring the fact that the answer had already been given. "I never went after a woman before in my life, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The stuff you read about me in the papers and books, about me being a lady-killer, is all wrong. There's not an iota of truth in it. I guess I've done more than my share of card-playing and whiskey-drinking, but women I've let alone. There was a woman that killed herself, but I didn't know she wanted me that bad or else I'd have married her—not for love, but to keep her from killing herself. She was the best of the bunch, but I never gave her any encouragement. I'm telling you all this because you've read about it, and I want you to get it straight from me."

"I can't marry you," she said. "I like you a great deal, but—"

He waited a moment for her to complete the sentence, failing which, he went on himself.

"I haven't an exaggerated opinion of myself, so I know I ain't bragging when I say I'll make a pretty good husband. You could follow your own sweet will, and nothing would be too good for you. I'd give you everything your heart desired."

"Except yourself," she interrupted suddenly, almost sharply. "Don't you see?" she hurried on. "I could have far easier married the Elam Hamish fresh from Klondike when I first laid eyes on him long ago, than marry you sitting before me now."

He shook his head slowly.

"That's one too many for me. The more you know and like a man the less you want to marry him. Familiarity breeds contempt—I guess that's what you mean."

"No, no," she cried, but before she could continue, a knock came on the door.

His eyes, quick with observation

"Dede Mason, I Want You, I Just Want You."

like an Indian's, darted about the room while she was out. The impression of warmth and comfort and beauty predominated, though he was unable to analyze it; while the simplicity delighted him—expensive simplicity, he decided, and most of it left over from the time her father went broke and died.

She re-entered the room, and as she crossed it to her chair, he admired the way she walked, while the bronze slippers were maddening.

"I'd like to ask you several questions," he began immediately. "Are you thinking of marrying somebody else?"

"There isn't anybody else. I don't know anybody I like well enough to marry. For that matter, I don't think I am a marrying woman. Office work seems to spoil me for that."

"It strikes me that you're the most marryingest woman that ever made a man sit up and take notice. And now get to locate the lay of the land. Is there anybody you like as much as you like me?"

But Dede had herself well in hand. "That's unfair," she said. "And if you stop and consider, you will find that you are doing the very thing you disclaimed—namely, nagging. I refuse to answer any more of your questions. Let us talk about other things. How is Bob?"

Half an hour later, whirling along through the rain on Telegraph Avenue toward Oakland, Daylight smoked one of his brown-paper cigarettes and reviewed what had taken place. It was not at all bad, was his summing up, though there was much about it that was baffling. There was that liking him the more she knew him and at the same time wanting to marry him less. That was a puzzle.

Once again, on a rainy Sunday, weeks afterward, Daylight proposed to Dede. As on the first time, he restrained himself until his hunger for her overwhelmed him and swept him away in his red automobile to Berkeley. He left the machine several blocks away and proceeded to the house on foot. But Dede was out, the landlady's daughter told him, and added, on second thought, that she was walking in the hills. Furthermore, the young lady directed him to extend. Daylight obeyed the girl's instructions, and soon the street he followed passed the last house and itself ceased where began the first steep slopes of the open hills. The air was damp with the on-coming of rain, for the street had not yet dried though an open-air man. Why, I've got the prettiest little ranch, you ever laid eyes on up in Glen Ellen. That's where I got stuck for the brick-yard. You recollect handling the correspondence. I only laid eyes on the ranch that one time, and I so fell in love with it that I bought it there and then. I just rode around the hills, and was happy as a kid out of school. I'd be a better man living in the country. The city doesn't make me better. You're plumb right there. I know it. But suppose your prayer should be answered and I'd get clean broke and have to work for days wages? Suppose I had nothing left but that little ranch, and was satisfied to grow a few chickens and scratch a living somehow—would you marry me then, Dede?"

"Why, we'd be together all the time," she cried.

Then was the moment, among the trees, ere they began the descent of the hill, that Daylight might have drawn her closely to him and kissed her once. But he was too perplexed with the new thoughts she had put into his head to take advantage of the situation. He merely caught her by the arm and helped her over the rougher footing. At the edge of the grove he suggested that it might be better for them to part there, but she insisted that he accompany her as far as the house.

"Do you know," he said, "taking it by and large, it's the happiest day of my life. Dede, Dede, we've just got to get married. It's the only way, and trust to luck for it's coming out all right."

But the tears were threatening to rise in her eyes again, as she shook her head and turned and went up the steps.

CHAPTER XVIII.

When the ferry system began to run, and the time between Oakland and San Francisco was demonstrated to be cut in half, the tide of Daylight's terrific expenditure started to turn. Not that it really did turn, for he promptly went into further investments. Thousands of lots in his residence tracts were sold, and thousands of homes were being built. Factory sites also were selling, and business properties in the heart of Oakland. All this tended to a steady appreciation in the value of Daylight's huge holdings. But, as of old, he had his bunch and was riding it. Already he had begun borrowing from the banks. The magnificent profits he made on the land he sold were turned into more land, into more development; and instead of paying off old loans, he contracted new ones. As he had pyramided in Dawson City, he now pyramided in Oakland; but he did it with the knowledge that it was a stable enterprise rather than a risky placer-mining boom.

Work on Daylight's dock system went on apace; yet it was one of those enterprises that consumed money dreadfully and that could not be accomplished as quickly as a ferry system. Not content with manufacturing electricity for his street railways in the old-fashioned way, in power-houses, Daylight organized the Sierra and Salvador Power Company. This immediately assumed large proportions. Crossing the San Joaquin Valley on the way from the mountains, and plunging through the Contra Costa hills, there were many towns, and even a robust city, that could be supplied with power, also with light; and it became a street-and-house-lighting project as well. As soon as the purchase of power sites in the Sierras was rushed through, the survey parties were out and building operations began. And so it went. There were a thousand maws into which he poured unceasing streams of money.

In the spring of the year the Great Panic came on. The first warning was when the banks began calling in their unprotected loans. Daylight promptly paid the first of several of his personal notes that were presented.

His arms went about her, and he held her closely.

ed; then he divined that these demands but indicated the way the wind was going to blow, and that one of those terrific financial storms he had heard about was soon to sweep over the United States. How terrific this particular storm was to be he did not anticipate. Nevertheless, he took every precaution in his power and had no anxiety about his weathering it out.

And in the end, when early summer was on, everything began to mend. Came a day when Daylight did the unprecedented. He left the office an hour earlier than usual, and for the season it.

Since the rising wind proclaimed its imminence. As far as he could see, there was no sign of Dede on the smooth, grassy hills. In the right, displacing down into a hollow and rising again, was a huge, full-grown eucalyptus grove. Here all was noise and movement, the lofty, slender-trunked trees swaying back and forth in the wind and clashing their branches together. In the squalls, above all the minor noises of creaking and groaning, arose a deep thrumming note as of a mighty harp. Knowing Dede as he did, Daylight was confident that he would find her somewhere in this grove where the storm effects were so pronounced. And find her he did, across the hollow and on the exposed crest of the opposing slope where the gale amote its fiercest blows.

"It's the same old thing," he said. "I want you and I've come for you. You've just got to have me, Dede, for the more I think about it the more certain I am that you've got a sneaking liking for me that's something more than just ordinary liking. And you don't dust say that it isn't; now, dast you?"

"Please, please," she begged. "We can never marry, so don't let us discuss it."

Daylight decided that action was more efficient than speech. So he stepped between her and the wind and drew her so that she stood close in the shelter of him. An unusually still squall, blew about them and turned over her in the treetops, and both passed to listen. A shower of flying leaves enveloped them, and hard on the heel of the wind came driving drops of rain. He looked down on her and on her hair, wind-blown about her face; and because of her closeness to him and of a fresher and more poignant realization of what she meant to him, he trembled so that she was aware of it in the hand that held hers. She suddenly leaned against him, bowing her head until it rested lightly upon his breast. And so they stood while another squall, with flying leaves and scattered drops of rain, rattled past. With equal suddenness she lifted her head and looked at him.

"Do you know," she said, "I prayed last night about you. I prayed that you would fall, that you would lose everything—everything."

Daylight stared at her amazement at this cryptic utterance.

"That sure heats me. I always said I got out of my depth with women, and you've got me out of my depth now. Well, you've just got to explain, that's all."

His arms went around her and held her closely, and this time she did not resist. Her head was bowed, and he could not see her face, yet he had in premonition that she was crying. He had learned the virtue of silence, and he waited her will in the matter. Things had come to such a pass that

A DOUBLE PART

It Was Played by a Russian Revolutionary With Serious Results

By PETER VALOVITCH
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I began my career as a revolutionist by acting as a pretended spy for the government. Working in secret on two sides I found to be doubly perilous. On one occasion I made a narrow escape from being put out of the way by the very men I was serving. I was working in the interest of the prime minister or pretending to work in his interest and at the same time was a member of a secret revolutionary circle. In order to guard against danger from the circle I chose one of its members, Michael Orloff, for my confidant, trusting to him in case

WHISPERED IN HIS EAR.

I became known as a government agent to assure my comrades that I was working a deep laid scheme in the interest of the revolution. I laid a plan which I felt sure would give me the entire confidence of the minister. I told him that I had discovered the meeting place of a circle whose members were conspiring to assassinate him. My intention was to have him send a force to arrest the circle, of which I was a member, while they were in session. But I intended that the force should arrive after the meeting had broken up. At the proper moment I would announce to the circle that I was a pretended spy for the government and inform them of the plan I had laid. They would disperse, leaving documents to show that the place had been used by revolutionists, but nothing to incriminate any one of them.

It was a hazardous scheme, but I felt that if it were successful it would give me a footing with the government on which to found a still greater benefit to the revolution. But I dare not tell the members of the circle beforehand what I was about to do, for I was not sure but that some one of them was a government spy, such as I pretended to be. Such things now and then occurred.

On a certain day I told the minister that the revolutionary body whose members were conspiring to assassinate him would meet at a certain place at 11 o'clock at night. If he would send a force there at half past 11 he would capture them. The meeting hour was really 10 o'clock, and I intended by 11 to have warned my associates. I charged the minister to have the force at the meeting place at the exact hour and minute I had given him, else the plan would go amiss. And so it would, but for the circle instead of the government.

Though by keeping the matter a secret from my comrades till the last moment I headed off any one of the members who might be a government spy, there was another danger, but I did not count on it. Suppose one of our number should secretly be playing the same game I was.

Our circle met at the appointed hour, 10 o'clock. I waited anxiously for Orloff to come in, since if my scheme should depend upon his evidence, but the president called the circle to order, and Orloff had not arrived. Half an hour elapsed while we were in session, and still he did not come. Then suddenly something happened which filled us with consternation. Peter Vronsky, one of the circle, came in hurriedly and said:

"We are betrayed."

Every man started from his seat. The president directed that we remain where we were.

"By whom?" he asked.

"One of our number."

"Which one?"

"I do not know."

Fortunately the eyes of the members were concentrated on the man who gave the information, so that no one noticed the pulse that spread itself over my face when the words "I do not know" were spoken. I recovered myself, for I inferred that some one would elapse before I should be identified as the traitor. But, however, now I longed for Orloff.

Every possible precaution had been taken since our first meeting to insure against surprise and to deceive any force which might come upon us as to our real character. There were several scientific men in our midst, and certain instruments and books used by them were kept on hand to be produced in case of emergency to prove that we were a society intended for the advancement of science. These devices were brought out and all incriminating documents burned.

We had barely got things in order when there was a sound of footsteps without, and a man wearing a heavy beard that concealed his mouth and chin and with his hat drawn down over his eyes entered.

"You are my prisoners!" he said.

"Why so?" asked our president.

"You have been accused of plotting the assassination of a minister."

"We are men of science met for its advancement."

"You cannot deceive the government by any such trick."

"Surely we will be given an opportunity to prove what we are."

"You will be given an opportunity to prove nothing. You will be marched from this room to Siberia."

The man who arrested us, backed by a force whom we could hear moving about in the hall, ordered us to stand up in line preparatory to being marched away. It seemed to me that the only thing for me to do was to declare myself a spy for the government.

I beckoned to our captor and whispered in his ear that I had given the information upon which he acted and asked to be taken to the minister.

Immediately a great change came over every one present.

"Enough!" exclaimed the president. "Our ruse has been successful." Looking at his watch he added, "We still have an hour to get away, and before we go it behooves us to make way with the traitor." Then addressing me: "Vronsky, who has been pretending to be a government spy, learned this morning that some one of our number had betrayed us, and we were to be arrested tonight at half past 11 o'clock. Since he did not learn the name of the informer we adopted a ruse to discover him. This man who has made the arrest is Scherleff, one of our number, and those in the hall are other members of our circle."

Scherleff pulled off a false beard, and I recognized him at once.

"Comrades," continued the president, "it is necessary to put the traitor out of the way at once, for we must leave this place within a very short time. We will draw lots as to which one of us shall stab him to the heart, a method of execution that will be with out noise and attract no attention."

But one person could interpose between me and death—that was Orloff. Why he was not at the meeting I knew not, but I had charged him to be there.

But he did not bid him why it was essential. I hurriedly told the circle every circumstance that had led me into my present position, but not one of them believed a word I said.

"If this is true," cried one of them, "you are at least a fool not to have made some arrangement by which you could prove your case. And a fool among us is as much to be feared as a traitor."

"Orloff's my confederate," I said, "and he is not here. Send for him."

"We have not time. Before he could reach us the hounds you have set upon us would be here."

"Come," said the president, "prepare the lots."

The secretary hurriedly scratched the name of every man present on a separate piece of paper, and they were placed in a hat. Then I was required to draw the name of my executioner. I put my hand in automatically, for it seemed that the currents of my feelings neutralized one another, and drew out one of the slips. The president seized it and read out a name, but I was too overcome to hear what it was. I saw my executioner take off his coat and roll up his shirt sleeves. Then one of the circle handed him a long dagger. I was seized by two others, led to one end of the room and turned about. I saw as if in a haze my executioner standing at the other end, looking pale and sick at heart at the work he was about to do. Then, at a word from the president, he advanced toward me.

There was a sound of footsteps without, the door was opened and Michael Orloff strode in leisurely. Seeing me standing where I was and one of the circle advancing toward me holding a knife in his hand while the others looked on, some vengeful, others shrinkingly, Orloff's face took on an expression of surprise.

"Orloff," I cried, "save me!"

"Hold!" said the president to the executioner. Then to Orloff, "Are you a depository for a secret concerning this man?"

"Yes."

"What is it?"

"Shall I tell?" Orloff asked of me.

"For heaven's sake, yes, tell all."

"He has been pretending to play the part of informant for the government. His heart is really with us."

"Can you prove that he has really been acting for us?"

"Yes."

"How?"

"By documents he has left in my possession."

"Very well. Let us go at once. Within twenty minutes our retreat will have been cut off."

We left the apartment at once, but I was kept in the center of the others and carefully guarded until it became possible to examine the documents that I had left with Orloff, after which I was exonerated from the charge of being a spy. But I never again attempted to play a double part.

HOW TO USE COSMETICS.

Methods of Assisting Nature in Beautifying the Face.

"Making up often has a distinctly beneficial effect upon character, and many women who habitually use cosmetics are justified in attempting to beautify themselves."

This theory was propounded by a leading medical man who has devoted considerable attention to the practice among society women of making up, who thinks the results of his observation show that the common attitude of condemning the woman who makes use of face pastes, paints and powders is often wrong.

"Appearance means such a lot to a woman, mentally as well as socially," he said, "that she is justified in aiding or improving nature if she sees fit."

"Making up is indeed essential to the happiness of some women. A girl who has some slight personal defect—a scar, a poor complexion or bloodless lips, for example—is enormously handicapped."

"The knowledge of her defect, the thought that others may notice and talk about it, makes her shy and lacking in self confidence."

"She shuns other people's society on this account and becomes morbid and miserable, missing much of the joy in life."

"Now, why should such a girl be punished for a defect that she can conceal? Why should she shrink from using artificial means to hide her blemish for fear of what the world may say?"

"I know one case of a life absolutely ruined simply because of complexion troubles, and I know of several cases where women have become happy and useful members of the community through making up."

"So as long as a woman's makeup is not so obvious as to be objectionable her means to an end are justifiable."

"She does no one any harm, and she does herself a great deal of good."

"The knowledge that her particular defect is no longer visible to all her holders, gives her a contented mind, and that has its inevitable result upon her character and outlook on life."

"She becomes self possessed instead of self effacing, a welcome acquaintance instead of a shunned one."

"Actresses are women for whom I have the warmest admiration. They are mostly warm hearted, sensible and cheerful. That is because they make the best of themselves in face and form."

Some Silo Cautions.

Should the masons be careless and not wet the stones when applying the mortar the stones will draw the water from the mortar and it will crumble. Then when the tremendous pressure of 100 tons of silage is applied disaster results. So it is better to use wire or rods every few inches.

A good many people in northern latitudes do not provide a roof for their silo. Just because that is all right in milder sections does not make it successful there. An open silo will freeze easily. Better roof it tightly and keep the doors closed in winter.

Be sure to set the foundation on solid ground; otherwise the silo may settle to one side and crack, making expensive repairs necessary. If rock prevents the digging of a deep foundation, blast it out, but remove the windows from the barn before the explosion.

William A. Freeland in Farm and Fireside.

Dairy Notes.

Cooling the milk as soon as it is drawn from the cow will improve its quality, and it must be remembered that a first class price can be demanded only by a product of high quality.

The best stock is the stock that is never permitted to stop growing. Feed the calves so that their development will be natural from birth to maturity.

The dairy farmer who has plenty of timothy hay should sell this and buy alfalfa or clover. It is poor policy to feed timothy to the cows.

A herd of good dairy cows is the best insurance against hard times or a slump in prosperity.

THAT NEW OIL STOVE

R. A. Emery Has an Experience Long to be Remembered.

The cold weather for the past week has been responsible for many serious occurrences, one of which Register of Deeds R. A. Emery plays the prominent part. One day the latter part of the week he purchased a small oil stove, intending to place it in one of the upstairs bedrooms. He took it home and to try it out, filled it with oil and placed it in one of the rooms. He did not look at it again until after the supper hour, when it came to his mind that he had failed to look after it since the time he lighted it. Upon opening the door he found the room full of smoke and everything covered with soot. The loss will amount to fully $100.00.

PONY ON THE FARM.

He's on "Amosin's Little Feller," but Also Useful.

Only the farmers who own ponies realize how much these little animals do toward making farm life easier. As a rule, the Shetland is too small to be of much use, but when it is crossed with a larger breed the result is a strong, vigorous pony that not only can furnish fun for the children, but can do enough work to more than pay for its board and care. Unlike the larger work animals, a pony can be used for light tasks where it is a yearling and thus become profitable when very young.

A pony requires very little feed. One that was pastured on a medium sized lawn had all it could do to keep the grass trimmed. If the animal is put out to browse in fence corners or along the road he will forage for himself until late in the fall and will require very little feed even when shut up in bad weather. If there is no room in the barn a rough shed will furnish shelter enough, with coarse litter for bedding and a little hay for the pony to eat. There is great danger in overfeeding, yet the faithful little animal should not be starved. Ponies at times like chopped apples or carrots and other vegetables, and these will help to keep them in fine condition. It is seldom necessary to feed grain to a pony.

We have a little vagabond, bought at a sale for almost nothing, to which the pony is hitched nearly every day in busy seasons, and the children think take a hand in the work, says a writer in Country Gentleman. They could not manage the work horses, for these are heavy and headstrong, but the pony is fun for them. It is a common sight to see them in the pony cart going after vegetables or to the truck path for potatoes, corn, turnips or melons and on a thousand and one other errands that are known only to farmers.

It is also profitable to raise a pony each year, for, considering the cost of keeping them, the little animals sell almost as well as horses. A yearling pony mare brought $80 at one sale, and the entire cost of raising and keeping her did not exceed $20. Though no busy farmer wants to give his entire time to the pony business, yet a pony of two to sell each year means a real little sum and one that represents very little labor. Gentle ponies, well broken to the saddle and cart, often sell for as much as $150 to $200, but they are not rare. There is not an animal on the farm which, to say nothing of the delight that it gives to the children, will bring larger returns year after year, and cause so little trouble and expense as a quiet, gentle pony mare.

POULTRY NOTES BY C. M. BARNITZ, RIVERSIDE, ILL.

NEVER SATISFIED.
Rain, rain, rain, drop, drip, drop!
Is it Noah's flood? Will it never stop?
Wish it would get dry once more!
My, but rain's an awful bore!
Boo, boo, boo, this awful rain!
Hope it never rains again!

Dry, dry, dry! Oh, the cloud of dust!
If it doesn't rain something's sure to bust
God, send down a waterspout!
I'm dried up inside and out.
Let 'er tickle! Let 'er pour!
Let 'er rain forevermore!

Cold, cold, cold—way below zero!
Is this awful winter never going to get Wish hot summer days were here!
I shall freeze to death, I fear!
Thunder, what a big con! bill!
Hurry, I've another chill!

Hot, hot, hot! Ain't it awful hot?
Where on earth is there a nice cool spot?
Take me up to Cook's north pole.
Drop me down a deep ice hole.
Rue us winter! Rush it now!
Wow, wow, wow!

SYSTEM NEEDED FOR FARM FLOCKS.
Uncle Sam's chief poultry asset is the farm flock, and some government smart aleck gives it a knock by saying that the average farm hen lays but sixty eggs per year.

If nothing good came out of 'Nazareth, how about poultry statistics from Washington? The farm Biddy does a better egg stunt—accurate egg records from Uncle Sam's 5,000,000 farm flocks will prove it—but if the farm hen on some farms does not reach her maximum it is not generally because she is a mongrel mutt, but because of lack of system.

By system we do not refer to the gold brick hoanza books, by which one is able to become rich quick from four bees on a lot 6 by 10, but we speak of scientific, sensible, natural methods, by the application of which a flock pays, and pays the maximum.

On many farms there are no special breeding pens, where the best producers are penned to beget their kind, but eggs for hatching are taken from the general flock. These flocks often consist of old and young, mature and immature fowls. By such a bit of misadventure a strain from best layers can not be built up. With no selection there can be no improvement. With a mixed up flock one cannot expect but their like. Stamina, egg production, uniform bonum market carcasses come from selected thoroughbred breeders bred straight.

On some farms all the eggs are not found on the day laid. Ueas may in any old place; hence the bad reputation of the baymow egg and the standard that farmers by careless nesting and handling cause the rot and spurs. We are not knocking the farmer here, but simply say that some farmers should control their hens better, should have better nesting facilities, for tons of eggs are lost in hidden nests, and many are spoiled for table and hatching because they lie in the heat. Some farmers still stick to corn the year around. This is not egg food, but fattener and not the best fattener at that.

There is need for the study of content tables and formulation of feeds to suit the needs of the fowl for the purpose in view, so that fowls may be finely finished for market or winter eggs may be more plentiful on some farms.

As to housing, there is general improvement in poultry house construction. Some farmers have yet to learn that a henhouse is not just for roosting, but that it should be a light, dry, clean, roomy, comfortable, well ventilated hen home, a place for sleeping, sunning, dusting, eating and exercising to bring those high priced winter eggs and with the yards a comfortable place of confinement for hens while crops are growing.

DON'TS.

Don't fail to spray mother, hen's quarters often for crawlers.

Don't preserve eggs that are over a day old, and keep the water glass in a cool place.

Don't ship eggs away when it costs less money and trouble to secure a higher priced private trade at home.

Don't neglect to flavor the mash with a reasonable amount of salt and keep a block of rock salt in the pigeon loft.

Don't go crazy when a hen house jangles on your bald top. Think of John Biddy when John Bugbouse is on the job.

Don't let the blood drip on the feathers while dry picking and always keep white feathers separate, as they can make the best pie.

Don't fail to dress poultry in the style your market demands. To get and hold good trade you must cater to its whims and throw in some extra for good measure.

Don't dress fowls in a place unaccustomed from flies. One blowy can spoil a whole shipment. One maggot may chase away your best and most sensible customer.

ALL FROM ONE FARM!

Looks as if Missouri Man Holds the World's Record.

At the fourth annual farm product and live stock show here, says a Hellen (Miss) dispatch to the Kansas City Star, Mrs. J. H. Sheldon made an exhibit of farm products raised on her husband's farm, northwest of Holden, which included, white corn, yellow corn, popcorn, sweet corn, Kaffir corn, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, cabbage, cauliflower, carrot, parsnip, beet, turnip, salsify, chicory, radish, horse radish, leek, onion, garlic, kohlrabi, tomato, ground cherry, cantaloupe, watermelon, cucumber, gourd, acorn, walnut, hickory nut, peanut, red hawk, black hawk, wild grape, peach, apple (two varieties), peaches (two varieties), pears, quince, persimmon, canned red raspberries, black raspberries, grapes, cherries, blackberries, gooseberries and strawberries, asparagus, sage, catnip, horseradish, wax beans, green beans, lima beans, butter beans, snap beans, castor beans, coffee beans, cowpeas, seed, garden peas, seed, onion seed, mustard seed, spinach seed, cantaloupe seed, watermelon seed, pumpkin seed, turnip seed, Hubbard squash seed, Sibby squash seed, turnip seed, ham, bird, butter, milk, eggs, sugar cane, sunflower, narcissus bulbs, hyacinth bulbs, and tana, geranium, roses, carnation, fall sage plant, cowpea hay and twelve varieties of clover grass and forage plants.

Washing the Churn.
Before churning the churn should be scalded and then well chilled with cold water. This will not cause the temperature of the cream to rise, and it will close the pores of the churn so that the butter will not stick to the wood.

No Annoyance.
The wife of a very irritable landlord in Ireland once received a letter from a disaffected tenant warning her that her husband would certainly be shot, but that nothing would be done to injure or annoy her in the least.—London Telegraph.

THE TREATMENT FOR AZOTURIA.

Azoturia is a very peculiar affection of the horse, in which the animal shows a special form of lameness upon exercise, after having remained idle for a day or two, writes Dr. G. A. Roberts in American Agriculturist. The cause is not definitely known, and yet the circumstances under which the disease develops are rather constant, such, for instance, as an animal in vigorous condition, fed liberally upon nitrogenous food, remaining idle over Sunday, a holiday, or at other times.

Upon being taken out the following morning the animal usually shows an excess of energy, but before going far begins to go lame in one or both hind legs.

Years ago when the hackney was chiefly in the hands of wealthy amateurs he was ridiculed by partisans of the trotter as an animal that could only show on the line and horse fairs where, as a rule, form, action and good disposition are factors. The handsome mare with cold side, Sirfield Venus, she is owned by Reginald Vanderbilt and was a prize winner at the New York state fair.

It is until, if urged further, becomes completely paralyzed behind, going down and unable to rise. He also shows considerable pain, as though he might be suffering from some form of colic, with a profuse sweating. On reaching this point the animal usually ceases to void the urine, which, when drawn, appears a very dark brown or coffee color. The pulse and breathing are somewhat accelerated, and frequently there is considerable nervous excitement. The muscles of the loin and thigh are tense and rigid.

The treatment should begin as soon as the lameness shows itself. After a few hours of rest, the distress will be over. The more exercise given the animal after the lameness begins, the more severe the trouble, and the more energetic means of treatment required. In a case showing signs of nervous excitement, it should receive two tablespoonfuls of bromide of potassium every three or four hours until he becomes quiet. Sweating should be induced by blanketing wring out of hot water and covered with a dry one. Allow all the water the animal will drink and give it four tablespoonfuls sweet spirits of after three times a day if bladder is not paralyzed. If unable to void the urine, the bladder must be emptied three times daily. A laxative or purgative should be given early in the disease. If the animal remains somewhat stiff, give a teaspoonful in the feed twice a day of the following: Powdered nutmeg, four teaspoonfuls; powdered sulphate of iron, six teaspoonfuls; powdered gentian root, six teaspoonfuls.

Pure Breds Pay Best.
The farm should have on it all the good stock it will keep and the help you have can give the proper care. The well bred, profitable kind of horses will do the same work—except more of it—that the serums are now doing. It is just as cheap and much more profitable to have pure bred beef cattle instead of common stuff. If you are milking a few cows and selling the cream you can have, if you will, cows which produce five or six times as much milk as serums. You can have pure bred hogs which make pork cheaper than serums, and you can sell a sow or a boar for breeding purposes. A few sheep will help things along. Not one of these improved kinds of live stock will in any way prevent or interfere with the growing of wheat or corn for market which may just now have your undivided attention. Think this over. Resolve to get a few units of better than common stock next year. The good ones increase rapidly and soon you'll have all you can keep.

The Fall Fresh Cow.
Full fresh cows will, as a rule, yield from 10 per cent to 15 per cent more milk annually than those calving in the spring. Spring fresh cows give their highest flow of milk during the busy season and when the price of milk and butter is lowest. On the other hand, the fall fresh cow gives her highest flow when the prices are highest, and if unmixed right will keep up a good flow in the spring. Then, too, the fall fresh cow does not have to contend with the flies and hot weather.

Cooking Ham.
Ham is frequently too salt to fry without previous preparation. Put the slices in cold water and let them stand on the back of the range for about half an hour. Drain dry between towels, then fry in a hot spider.

When a whole ham is to be baked or boiled let it stand overnight covered with cold water.

BLUE GRASS FOR BEEF.

Interesting Experiment in Feeding at the Missouri Station.

It remained for the Missouri experiment station to conduct a careful test showing what feeds could be most economically used in connection with blue grass, says Orange Judd Farmer. The work was done under the direction of Professor F. B. Mumford. The main object of the experiment was to determine how to most rapidly increase the weight of cattle during their fattening period and also how to improve the quality of the beef. Representatives of the Hereford, Shorthorn and Angus breeds were used in this test. They were good cattle and were high grades, containing from one-half to seven-eighths pure blood.

The average of the five years' work shows that where nitrogenous supplementary feeds were used with young cattle, the rate of gain was greater than when corn alone constituted the sole grain ration. This is in line with other tests of the kind and was to be expected. One explanation given by Professor Mumford is that the larger gains resulted because of the palatability of the supplementary ration, resulting in the consumption of larger quantities of feed. It was quite fully demonstrated that it is highly profitable to feed at least a limited amount of nitrogenous food during the latter stages of the feeding period, particularly to cattle that have been receiving a grain ration consisting of corn only.

The character of the food had a great deal to do with the quality of the beef, as shown by slaughter tests. It was found that where nitrogenous rations were used, the beef was of a higher character than when a corn alone was fed. It was also found that more uniform and consistent gains resulted from the feeding of some nitrogenous

With many of the western breeders and fatteners the Aberdeen-Angus breed of beef cattle is a favorite. They are gentle and docile, adapted to early maturity, are very hardy and will withstand adverse conditions as well as other breeds. The cattle are extra good rustlers and thrive well on roughage alone. They are good breeders, and the mothers supply sufficient milk to raise their calves. The steers are second to none for the feed lot, and in looking over prize winners at various shows it will be found that the Angus are there with the goods. The Angus cow here with picture is an excellent type of the breed.

material. Then, too, the fatter the animal the more efficient relatively were nitrogenous feeds.

The most interesting and important part of the entire test was the relative cost of gains with the different feeds. It was not surprising, therefore, when it was found that the ration containing nitrogen invariably cost more than the ration of corn alone. Furthermore, the relative cost of each 100 pounds of gain was less from the lots receiving shelled corn than from the lots receiving rations in which nitrogen formed a part. The greater rapidity of the gain, however, the higher quality of the product more than offset this difference of cost.

Professor Mumford concludes with the statement that the results of the experiment for many years and with various kinds of cattle clearly indicate the great value of nitrogenous feeds in maintaining the appetite and in securing satisfactory gains during the latter part of the feeding period.

THE SWINEHERD.

It must be a good farm workman to whom the swineherd can be given. The swineherd's eye should be upon them every day.

The pig can eat more than he can digest and digest more than he can use. So it is not a fact that a pig can take care of all he can eat.

There is no feed better for young pigs and calves than sweet skim milk right from the separator.

Pigs, sows and fattening hogs should be kept in separate inclosures. They will be healthier and derive more benefit from their feeds by such handling.

The most profitable pork is produced by using as largely as possible other feeds than corn.

Sows that come from prolific families are more certain to inherit those qualities and become good mothers than those that descend from families that are less prolific.

Where it is possible it is best to defer selection of sow pigs for the breeding herd until they have made considerable growth.

PROFIT AND LOSS.

The difference between good and bad roads is often equivalent to the difference between profit and loss. Money wisely expended for this purpose is sure to return tenfold, and now that the states are expending in the aggregate $1,000,000 a day for road improvement conditions in the country are likely to be so improved that the trend toward the better will be stopped and the cities will turn out.

PETOSKEY PIONEER DEAD

Elton G. Jarman Was Well Known to Charlevoix Residents.

After an illness of a month, Elton George Jarman, a pioneer of Emmet and Charlevoix counties, died at seven o'clock last Wednesday morning, at the age of 72 years, at his home in Petoskey. An operation for rupture and heart trouble are directly responsible for his death.

Mr. Jarman was born June 24, 1839, at Clifton, North Hamptonshire, England, and was 19 years of age when he came, with his father and family, to this country, settling in Sheffield township, Lorraine county, Ohio.

After his marriage in 1860 he brought his family to Michigan and took up a homestead in Keweenaw township and were among the first settlers in that section. After the death of his wife in 1887, he moved to Petoskey and has since made that city his home.

Private funeral services were held from the home in Petoskey.

Rumors Abroad that Pere Marquette May Have New Set of Owners.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad may soon acquire control of the Pere Marquette.

The syndicate headed by New man Erb, which is acquiring control of the Pere Marquette will complete its labors before a fortnight. As soon as the syndicate secures a majority of the stock outstanding, negotiations will be begun with J. P. Morgan & Co., who hold 110,000 shares of the 261,863 outstanding, to cinch the deal.

The amalgamation of the C. & O. with the Pere Marquette will give the former system about 2,500 additional miles of road. Connection with the Hocking Valley branch of the C. & O. is made at Toledo to Chicago and east to Buffalo, as well as lines extending all through Michigan, which is gridironed by the Pere Marquette.

greater proportion of the wealth which it creates, than is now the case. Mr. Lybarger said that capital and labor were natural allies, and that the monopolies were the real enemy of both. Labor could not get along without capital, neither could capital get along without labor, but both of them were oppressed by the monopolies, who had seized upon the land and the natural increment thereof, and fattened himself at the expense of all the producing classes of the nation. This was one of the strongest points in Mr. Lybarger's argument, and in our opinion comes very near to expressing the real situation.

The debate has caused considerable comment, and while, as we said, we do not agree with either of the speakers, the great question now before the American people is one which every thinking man should study thoroughly, and by his ballot make an effort to bring about the desired result.

Both speakers are to be congratulated upon the able manner in which they presented their side of the question.

Brutality to Sea Elephant

The whole history of the sea elephant is a record of cruel and wasteful slaughter at the hands of man. One after another its haunts in the bleak islands of the southern ocean have been visited and the beasts relentlessly killed off. PEOPLE WILL HAVE ABSOLUTE CONTROL

Many False Ideas Afloat About the County Road System

NO GRADATION OF ASSESSMENTS

Tax Will be Same to All, Whether You Live on Road or Not

Impossible to Tax in Manner Told by Enemies of County Road System—Up to Supervisors.

It is astonishing how many false ideas are afloat about the cost of adopting the county roads system. One man says it will mean a tax of $10 an acre, another says it $15, while a third has got it all figured out how a man with one mile of the road will pay a certain tax, and another two miles away a different tax, just like a drain assessment.

All these guesses are as wild as the wind. The tax is not going to be ten dollars an acre, or any other sum per acre. Nor is there to be any gradation of assessments. The tax will be identically the same whether the taxpayer lives on a macadam road or in the middle of a swamp. It will be the same whether he lives on a farm in Marion, or runs a store or factory in Charlevoix. For all alike it is a single, uniform general tax which cannot exceed two dollars on $1,000 valuation, and which may be made much less than that. This tax limit will be found in Section 20 of the road law on page 572 of the Public Acts of 1903.

Moreover the people themselves—and that means the farmers of Charlevoix county—have complete and absolute control over even this small tax through the board of supervisors. Quoting from the above section of the law:

"At the annual meeting of the board of supervisors * * * such board shall pass upon the said determination [of the county road commissioners as to the amount of tax], and if a majority of such board of supervisors shall agree then such tax shall be apportioned among the several townships and cities of said county according to their equalized valuations. If the determination of the board of county road commissioners shall not meet with the approval of a majority of the board of supervisors, then the said board of supervisors shall proceed to decide upon the amount of tax to be raised for such year in such county for the purposes aforesaid, and may allow or reject in whole or in part any or all of the items for the sections of roads thus submitted for its consideration."

In short, the proposed county road system simply gives the supervisors power to sanction a very small additional tax for road improvement. It does not compel them to sanction any tax at all. If the majority of the board choose to cut down the tax by half, it will be only $1 on $1,000; if they cut it down three quarters, then it will be only 50 cents on $1,000; if they choose they can refuse to spend a penny, then there will be no tax whatever for the county roads that year.

There is no danger of the people being entrapped because the people have absolute control of the whole situation, every minute through their board of supervisors. And this means that the farmers have complete control, because the farmers always have controlled the board of supervisors and always will. It is a safe guess that the board of supervisors will never sanction any program of road-building that does not meet with the approval of a clear majority of farmers through the whole county, for the supervisors are nearly all farmers and taxpayers themselves, and they are elected by the votes of farmers and taxpayers.

To return once more to the amount of the tax, such talk as $10 or $15 an acre is absurd, as applied to this situation. No such tax is possible under the Michigan law. Maybe they pay such taxes in some counties in Indiana or Ohio, or some other place where counties issue bonds and build big systems of expensive roads all at once. But that is not the case here. We live in Michigan, and Indiana taxes have nothing to do with our case, any more than German taxes or Japanese taxes. The Michigan law says that the tax for all county road work cannot exceed $2 on $1,000 valuation, and may be as much less as the supervisors choose to cut it down.

Instead of $10 or $15 an acre, therefore, we would have about that sum for a large farm. If your land is assessed at $40 an acre on the tax roll, then if the full limit of tax were imposed you would have to pay ten cents an acre. If you are a small farmer, with a forty-acre farm on the roll for $40 an acre (and few farms are assessed higher than that), your tax might amount to as much as four dollars. If you have a big farm of 200 acres, and are paying taxes on $10,000 valuation, and the supervisors should authorize the heaviest possible year's tax under the law, then you would have to carry the crushing burden of $20 for that year. It is also to be remembered that the manufacturer in Charlevoix, East Jordan or Boyne City whose factory is valued at $50,000 would also be paying just five times as much as the man with the 200 acres farm. Now the farmers of Marion pay the whole cost of road work in Marion, and the farmers of Hayes the whole cost of road work in Hayes, and so on. Under the new plan there would be many millions of dollars worth of property in Charlevoix and the various cities and villages, which would be paying just as much tax for the county roads as the farmers whose lands abutted on those very roads. In addition the Death Comes as Relief to Mrs. Ruth Eugenia Carpenter

Had Been an Invalid for Several Years—
Funeral Held Monday.

Another one of our old settlers passed away Friday afternoon, January 12, at 2:00 o'clock, in the person of Mrs. Ruth Eugenia Carpenter, wife of Egbert Carpenter, now at Port Orange, Florida.

Ruth Eugenia Brown was born in June, 1836, at Palmira, New York and on June 2, 1855, was married to Egbert Carpenter, coming to Charlevoix in 1873, and has lived here from that time up to the present, except during the winter, which during the past thirty years was spent at Port Orange, Florida.

Mrs. Carpenter was the devoted mother of four children, three of whom are living, Mrs. Kate Miller and Mrs. Alice Hines, of this city; Mrs. Lillian McCrory of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. Jessie Burey, who died May 12, 1890.

Besides these Mrs. Carpenter had ten grandchildren, six of them grandsons who acted as pallbearers at the funeral, and two brothers, Bert and Joseph Brown, the latter who lives at Red Moon, Oklahoma, while Bert is one of our well known farmers.

A number of years ago Mrs. Carpenter had a stroke and never fully recovered. A week ago she fell, and this fall was the immediate cause of her death.

Her husband, owing to poor health, was unable to come home and he especially has the sympathy of the entire community at this sad time.

Mrs. Carpenter was loved by all who knew her and thought for several years has been invalid, will be missed by her large circle of friends.

The funeral services took place from the house of F. G. Hines, Monday morning, burial at Brookside cemetery. Those from out of town attending were Jones McCrory of Grand Rapids and Charles Burey of Traverse City.

LECTURE SATURDAY NIGHT

Prof. Reeves of the U. of M. Will Talk on Commission Form of Government.

Shall Charlevoix adopt the commission form of government? There is a widespread feeling that our present form is not the best and that there is room for much improvement. It is fortunate that at this time when the matter of a change or amendment of the charter is up for consideration that we can have the able assistance which Professor Reeves will undoubtedly give us in coming to an intelligent discussion as to whether the commission form of government is what we want. The Men's Bible class earnestly extend an invitation to all citizens to come and hear Professor Reeves at the Methodist church Saturday evening of this week.

PRESENT OFFICERS NOT ACCOUNTABLE FOR OTHERS

Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company Claim They are Doing Everything Possible to Right Wrongs of Past.

Editor of Charlevoix Courier:

In response to your invitation to the Mutual Insurance companies doing business and having done business in Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties to present a statement of the facts that led up to and are responsible for certain conditions existing in both companies, we present the following statement from the Farmers' Mutual:

We believe that it is generally known that all mutual companies doing business in this state are organized under act number 82 of the Public Acts of 1873 and amendments thereto. As implied by the question propounded to us, we are required to file with the commissioner of insurance annual reports and have the same published in the newspapers of the county in which the home office is located and also have our books examined by the commissioner of insurance or his deputy, and providing, that failure to comply with the law would invalidate our charter. Such reports have been filed by our company and reports published according to law.

The Act referred to as Act 203 of the Public Acts of 1903 provides, that if in any one year the total amount of the loss of any such Mutual company exceeds the amount of four mills on the dollar, the said officers of such company may carry forward one-half of such total amount of loss in excess thereof and may include such sum in an assessment to be made during the year immediately following.

As our readers will readily understand, the management of a Mutual company is being changed continually by the election of new officers and the manner of reasoning out a policy pursued by former officers can only be guessed at by the present management. We find however that in 1903 a four mill assessment was spread to cover losses and expenses and that the total losses and expenses were $8,900.85, while the levy only netted $7,150.74, leaving a deficit of $1,750.09, which was made up by a loan secured at the bank. In 1904 a levy of four mills netted $7,207.85, which was just sufficient to cover the losses and expenses of the current year and necessitated the borrowing of $1,800.00 to take care of the amount paid on the loan of 1903. This same condition existed in 1905 wherein a deficit of $346.50 was covered by loan. In 1906 a deficit of $2,080.49 was covered in like manner, as was also a deficit of $2,740.62 in 1907. The records show that an effort was made in 1908 to remedy this failure to assess sufficient resources to cover losses and expenses and this brought to the attention of the new officers the fact that while the company has in its possession, members' notes to the amount of $1,800.00 and judgments to the amount of $222.35 and uncollected assessments of $904.00, yet the amounts were in most cases so small that a forced collection would not net the company anything after costs were paid and forced the management to adopt a cash basis of settlement in future.

A special assessment levied to cover liability and the effort to collect the same, showed that many policies carried on the stock register and reported as being there were void and not assessable. Section 9 of our by-laws provided, that in case of sale of property the insurance thereon shall cease, and the company shall be thereby discharged from all liability, but the person or persons selling such property shall promptly notify the secretary in writing of such sale or they will be held liable for all subsequent assessments that may be made before such notice is received. A rigid investigation of policies on the register shows that several hundred transfers had been made and the property later insured a second time by the company and the first policy still held and was supposed to be alive because owner had failed to do his part and notify the company, and they were ignorant of any sale having taken place. In many other cases it was found that during the life of a policy the property insured had become depopulated or depleted to that extent that the policy was void and should have been cancelled. To show to what extent this difference between the stock on the policy register and assessable stock had reached we will cite the year 1908, which began the year with $3,080,200.00 on the policy register, but at the close of the year's inspection only $1,935,970.00 was actually found to be alive and assessable, and yet the members holding the balance had failed to have it cancelled voluntarily and it had to be reported as rejected stock by the secretary. The lack of this information led to the belief that a four mill assessment for 1907 should have netted over $12,000.00 but in fact only netted $7,686.16.

It is quite true that the rivalry between both mutual companies caused both men who were secretaries of their respective companies to hold on to all the stock they could so as to make a big show. This was poor business policy but not necessarily criminal.

The special assessment spread in 1903 netted about $2,600.00 but was spread on a basis of over $3,000,000.00 stock and would not be near enough to take care of the indebtedness if it had been collected, but this was discontinued when it was found that it was not spread on a correct basis as stated above.

The first thing to do was to find out just how much stock was liable for assessment each year that a deficit occurred and that would determine the exact percentage to assess per thousand of policies carried and to assess only the policies in force during the year the deficit occurred, and as the assessment is collected, credit the money to that year. This has been done and each year showing a deficit in receipts is being treated in like manner and as soon as the deficit for any one year is covered by the collection for that year, then no member of that year who has paid his special assessment can ever be held for any more liability for that special year.

The question of the legal right to borrow money to carry on the legitimate business of the Mutual insurance is encouraged by the law, and been emphasized by supreme court decisions and provided for in our case by Article 9 of Charter which says in part: "The board of directors shall have power to adopt such by-laws as to them seem necessary for the government of this company, and shall have the general supervision of the business of the company and the management of affairs, including the power to borrow money paying the current rate of interest thereon. Also to pay current rate of interest on unpaid losses." Pursuant to the provisions of Article 9 the board of directors at each annual meeting in January passed a resolution which appears on the minutes of such meeting authorizing the secretary and treasurer to borrow what money may be needed to carry on the business of the company, the same to be paid back from the proceeds of subsequent assessments. Had there been any question as to the legal right of insurance companies to borrow money, the banks would not have made those loans. The laws anticipate such loans by providing that losses must be paid within sixty days after they occur, and the assessment made at the end of the year to cover those losses." Article 9 was examined by Attorney General Henry E. Chase on May 6, 1905 and he certifies that it is in accordance with the provisions of the law.

As the officers of the Farmers' Mutual do not claim to be attorneys at law, any and all questions may be sent to George E. Nichols of Ionia, Michigan, who is a member of this company and also its attorney, and such questions will be promptly answered. We feel that we have trespassed on your kindness in allowing space for this explanation, but will willingly answer all questions arising in this work and say that our books are always open for inspection, as are also copies of all reports in our possession. A full and free explanation of conditions is desired by us and is due the people and you can count on us to do our share.

While we assume no responsibility for the acts of others we shall do all in our power to right any wrongs that may have been done and just as cheerfully pay back any money overpaid, as we demand any balance due us on old liabilities.

L. E. TUBBS, Sec'y and Treas.
E. B. WARD, President.

DEATH OF MRS. GEO. SMITH

Was One of the Earliest Settlers in This County.

A highly respected pioneer of this section was laid to rest in Antrim cemetery, Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Isabelle Laidlaw was born in Brookville, Canada, in 1833, and was married in 1834 to George Smith. They came to Michigan in 1868 and settled on the farm from which she was buried.

She was the mother of seven children, four of whom are left to mourn their loss. Mrs. Richard Shumpton of this city, John Smith of Bhaard, Norman Smith of the British northwest, and Albert, who made his home with his mother. Besides these there are a number of grand children, one, Roscoe, son of Norman, who was raised by his grandmother, he now being twelve years old.

Mrs. Smith was loved by all who knew her, and was "Grandma Smith" to all the children. The family have the sympathy of the surrounding country.

DESTROYED BY FIRE

School House at Ellsworth Burned to the Ground

Organ and a Few Books Were the Only Things Saved—Insurance $2,000.

During the early morning hours on Monday of last week fire was discovered in the school house at Ellsworth, which practically destroyed the building and everything in it. The janitor had been there quite early in the morning and had fixed the fires and returned to his home to get his breakfast. On his return at about 7:00 o'clock he found the interior of the building a mass of flames. An alarm was sounded but little could be done to save the structure. There was nothing saved from the building but the organ and a few books.

The building had three rooms and the first part was built about 20 years ago. It will be rebuilt, but nothing can be done until the coming spring. School is now being held in Macabee hall and Holiness church. Insurance to the amount of 2,000 was carried on the building but none on the contents.

BAD FALLS ARE COMMON

People Should Not Dig Trenches Across the Sidewalks.

Since the heavy snow came several people have had bad falls due to the manner in which residents dig out the snow on the sidewalks in front of their residences and places of business. In many instances trenches are dug from the walks leading from the houses across the sidewalk, and in other cases they are only dug about half way through, which makes a trap into which the passerby stumbles and often sustains a bad fall.

As the sidewalks are all improperly cleaned by the city there is an accumulation in some places of a foot or more of snow on the walks, and it will be best while the present method of cleaning the walks is used, to leave the walks as they are and not dig out any portion of them until a thaw comes this way. It will save broken bones and other bruises that in many cases are far worse.

COUNTY INSTITUTE. MEETING SATURDAY

Will be Held Morning, Afternoon and Evening at Court House.

E. O. LADD THE STATE SPEAKER

Topics of Vital Interest to Farmers
Will be Discussed

Normal Class Will Illustrate Work in the Evening—The Good Roads Question
Will be Discussed.

Every day of this week and the first three days of next week will be given over to institute work, the meetings taking place at various places throughout the county. Meetings were held Monday at Boyne Falls, Tuesday at Boyne City, Wednesday at Horton Bay, and on Thursday will be held at Maple Grove, Friday at Bay Shore, and Saturday will be Charlevoix day. Beginning the week on Monday at Norwood, Tuesday at Marion and Wednesday at Ironton, to be followed by the round-up at East Jordan the following week on February 1 and 2.

In a conversation over the telephone with Secretary John A. Newville, he stated that so far the meetings have been a success, although the attendance was small on account of weather conditions and impassable roads.

The meeting to be held in this city Saturday at the court house will prove of great benefit to all and special attention has been given to make the program of interest, not only to farmers, but to all people in general. E. O. Ladd of Old Mission will be the state speaker, and other topics of various nature will be ably handled by our local men. In the evening the Normal class will take an active part, and the audience will have another opportunity of hearing the Hon. Amel club singers and the Wilkinson brothers. Below is given the program in detail:

PROGRAM.

10:45 Introductory Remarks by President Nears.

POULTRY EXHIBITION

Plans for Show Well Under Way—Watch for Premium List.

Great preparations are being made for the Poultry Show to be held here February 7, 8, and 9. At a meeting of the executive committee held Thursday night plans were completed for the printing of the premium list and other features pertaining to the success of the show were discussed.

An interesting letter was received from Dr. George Ryeckart of Petoskey, one of the leading poultry men of northern Michigan, stating that he would be well represented at the Charlevoix show. Every member of the association is urged to make a special effort to make the show a success. Get your birds ready for exhibition now, and make this year's exhibition a hummer.

BALD HEADS NOT WANTED

Baldness is Too Generally Considered a Sign of Advanced Age.

A bald-headed person does not have an equal chance with one blessed with a healthy head of hair because baldness is no generally accepted as an indication of age. Many large corporations have established an age limit, and refuse to take men over 35 years of age as new employees.

Probably 65 per cent of bald-headed people may regain a good head of healthy hair if they will follow our advice and accept our offer. We have a remedy that we positively guarantee to grow hair on any head, unless the roots of the hair are entirely dead, their follicles closed, and the scalp has become glazed and shiny. We want people to try this remedy at our risk, with the distinct understanding that unless it does exactly what we claim it will, and gives satisfaction in every respect, we shall make no charge for the remedy used during the trial.

We know exactly what we are talking about, and with this offer back of our statements no one should doubt our word, or hesitate to put our remedy to an actual test.

We want everyone in Charlevoix who is suffering from any scalp or hair trouble, dandruff, falling hair, or baldness to try our Rexall "3R" Hair Tonic. We want them to use it regularly—say until three bottles have been used—and if it does not eradicate dandruff, cleanse and refresh the scalp, tighten the hair in its roots, and grow new hair, we will return every cent paid us for the remedy for the time being. There is no formality expected, and we exact no obligation from the user whatever.

We are established right here in Charlevoix, and make this offer with a full understanding that our business success entirely depends upon the sort of treatment we accord our customers, and we would not dare make the above offer unless we were positively certain that we could substantiate it in every particular. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

A UNIQUE PARTY.

How to Give a Jolly Hurdy Gurdy Dance.

The quaint hurdy gurdies which have so long been the delight of city children and the despair of the fastidious music lovers are in danger of becoming fashionable. A hostess at a summer resort hit upon this novel manner of furnishing music for her guests to dance by.

So successful did it prove that other hostesses quickly followed her example, and the hurdy gurdy, with its so-called Italian owner, was greatly in demand. Young people danced until nearly dawn to the alluring strains of "The Pink Lady" and the fashionable rhythm of "The Blue Danube."

It is proverbial that youth never tires of dancing, and apparently hurdy gurdies never tire of playing. The two are equally matched, for the hurdy gurdy man stops only long enough to change his tune, while youth stops only long enough to catch its breath.

The hurdy gurdy simplifies things immensely for the hostess who dares not wish to entertain elaborately. It once knocks pretension in the head and does away with the extraneous torture inflicted by the sometimes incompetent musicians who play for dancers.

For the hurdy gurdy has the advantage of really keeping time, and this is more than can be said of the average musician.

One has only to engage the hurdy gurdy man, turn on the lights, move the furniture and give an informal dance.

Promptly at the hour the pleasure-seeking Italian with his hurdy gurdy arrives. It is tenderly taken from its wheels and placed in a corner of the hall, and immediately he plays on and on with never a sigh nor a complaining word until dawn unless you stop him.

How Wheat Came to Earth.

A classic account of the distribution of wheat over the primeval world shows that Ceres, having taught her favorite, Triptolemos, the art of agriculture and the science of breadmaking, gave him her chariot, a celestial vehicle, and that in it he traveled night and day, distributing this valuable bread grain among all nations of the earth.

C. H. S. NOTES.

After a week of genuine hard work, we students have come to the conclusion that our vacation is truly at an end, and that we must put aside all frivolities and "dig in." As we madly try to crowd four weeks' work into two, in order to be prepared for our semi-annual "outburst of knowledge," which is so very near at hand, we find ourselves wondering why we did not do this earlier and "avoid the rush." The only redeeming feature is the consoling thought of reviews and we shall welcome them next week with open arms. When the exams are finally over, and we are anxiously awaiting our fate, we shall no doubt realize the truth of Longfellow's words: "We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing; while others judge us by what we have already done."

Judging from the fairly list this week some people have received a special invitation to arrive promptly at 8:00 a. m. and 1:15 p. m. A good chance for making a New Year's resolution.

The freshmen class has two new members: Marion Samuels and Clarence Meggison. Marion decided to stay at Charlevoix the remainder of the year instead of continuing at Ann Arbor. C. H. S. is best after all.

We are glad to have True Dalton with us again.

Ida Levinson was a C. H. S. visitor Thursday afternoon.

Carl Shapiro is attending the M. A. C. at Lansing.

The chemistry class analyzed baking powder Thursday in the laboratory. If you wish to know the contents of your brand of baking powder, apply to them.

The second basketball game of the season was played at East Jordan, Friday evening, resulting in a score of 15 to 30 in favor of East Jordan high school. At the end of the first half, the score stood 11 to 8 in favor of C. H. S., but in the second half our boys softened their hearts and decided to give the other side a present.

The rooms on the second floor of the central building were closed Monday because of the low temperature.

The members of the football squad had their picture taken Tuesday, and at the same time elected Ned Durance as captain of the 1912 team.

The juniors and seniors are looking forward with great interest to a Shakespeare class next semester.

LEGAL NOTICES

PRIMARY ENROLLMENT.

Notice is hereby given that in accordance with Act No. 21, Pub. Acts of 1906, as amended by Act 29, Pub. Acts of 1911, the Boards of Enrollment of the city of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, will be in session Saturday, January 27, A. D. 1912, in the several wards of said city, at the places designated below, viz.: First Ward—Hose House, Michigan Avenue. Second Ward—Council Chamber, Carnegie Library. Third Ward—Elston Hotel Office.

for the purpose of enrolling the names of all persons, members of whatever political party, who make personal application for such enrollment.

How Electors Can Secure Enrollment. Following is a brief statement of the different ways in which enrollment can be secured:

1. By personal application on enrollment day.

2. By written request accompanied by affidavit, an elector can enroll any day, but cannot vote at any primary held within two months. This affidavit and application must be delivered to the city clerk or other officer in charge of the enrollment book.

3. An elector who was sick or unable to appear on enrollment day or who became 21 years of age or an elector after enrollment day can have his name enrolled on primary election day and vote at that election by taking the necessary oath.

4. If an elector who has been duly enrolled as above changes his residence from one precinct in the state to another he can be enrolled in the new precinct by obtaining a proper certificate from a member of the Enrollment Board of the precinct wherein he formerly resided stating that he is duly enrolled in the precinct from which he has moved and is entitled to enrollment in the new precinct, or by taking oath.

No person can vote at any primary in Michigan unless his name has been enrolled under Act 29. All enrollment prior to August 2, 1911, is valid. An entirely new enrollment is required. An elector who declines or refuses to give the name of his political party cannot have his name enrolled. Said Bonds of Enrollment will be in session in each of said wards from 7 o'clock a. m. until 5 o'clock p. m. at said day of enrollment.

Dated this 9th day of January A. D. 1912.

E. J. BUTLER, Clerk of said City.

CHAPTER XIX—Continued.

"I want to know how all this is possible? How you are able to leave your business at a time like this? What you meant by saying that something was going to happen quickly?"

"Let's go and get married," he urged, all the whimsicality of his utterance duplicated in his eyes. "I've been working like forty horses ever since this blamed panic set in, and all this time some of those ideas you'd given me were getting ready to sprout. Well, they sprouted this morning, that's all. I knew I wanted to ride in the hills with you just about thirty million times more than I wanted to go to the office. And I knew all the time it was impossible. And why? Because of the office. The office wouldn't let me. And then I made up my mind that I was to the devil of the ways. One way led to the office. The other way led to Berkeley. And I took the Berkeley road. I'm never going to set foot in the office again. That's all gone, finished, over and done with, and I'm letting it slide clean to smash and then some. I'm wiping the slate clean. I'm letting it all go smash. When them thirty million dollars stood up to my face and said I couldn't go out with you in the hills today, I knew the time had come for me to put my foot down. And I'm putting it down. I've got you, and my strength to work for you, and that little ranch in Sonoma. That's all I want, and that's all I'm going to save out, along with Bob and Wolf, a suit-case and a hundred and forty hair brushes. All the rest goes, and good riddance. It's that much junk."

A knock at the door interrupted him, and he was left to stare delightedly at the Crouched Venus and on around the room at Dede's dainty possessions, while she answered the telephone.

"It is Mr. Hegan," she said, on returning. "He is holding the line. He says it is important."

Daylight shook his head and smiled. "Please tell Mr. Hegan to hang up. I'm done with the office and I don't want to hear anything about anything."

A minute later she was back again. "He refuses to hang up. He told me to tell you that Unwin is in the office now, waiting to see you, and Harrison, too. Mr. Hegan said that Grimsbaw and Hodgkins are in trouble. That it looks as if they are going to break. And he said something about protection."

It was startling information. Both Unwin and Harrison represented big banking corporations, and Daylight knew that if the house of Grimsbaw and Hodgkins went it would precipitate a number of failures and start a flurry of serious dimensions. But Daylight smiled, and shook his head.

He caught her by the hand and drew her to him.

"You let Hegan hang on to that line till he's tired. We can't be wasting a second on him on a day like this."

"But I know something of the fight you have been making," Dede contended. "If you stop now, all the work you have done, everything, will be destroyed. You have no right to do it. You can't do it!"

Daylight was obstinate. He shook his head and smiled tantalizingly.

"Nothing will be destroyed, Dede, nothing. You don't understand this business game. It's done on paper. All I stand for is paper. I've got the paper for thousands of acres of land. All right. Burn up the paper, and burn me along with it. The land remains, don't it? Nothing is going to be lost—not one pile out of the docks, not one railroad spike, not one dime boat. The cars will go on running, whether I hold the paper or somebody else holds it."

By this time Hegan had arrived in an automobile. The honk of it came in through the open window, and they saw it stop alongside the big red machine. In the car were Unwin and Harrison, while Jones sat with the chauffeur.

CHAPTER XX.

Three days later, Daylight rode to Berkeley in his red car. It was for the last time, for on the morning the big machine passed into another's possession. It had been a strenuous three days, for his smash had been the biggest the panic had precipitated in California. The papers had been filled with it, and a great cry of indignation had gone up from the very men who later found that Daylight had fully protected their interests. It was these facts, coming slowly to light, that gave rise to the widely repeated charge that Daylight had gone insane. It was the unobtrusive conviction among business men that no sane man could possibly behave in such fashion. On the other hand, neither his prolonged steady drinking nor his affair with Dede became public, so the only conclusion attainable was that the wild financier from Alaska had gone lunatic. And Daylight had grinned and confirmed the suspicion by refusing to see the reporter. He halted the automobile before Dede's door, and met her with his same rushing tactics, enclosing her in his arms before a word could be uttered.

"I've done it," he announced. "You've seen the newspapers, of course. I'm plumb cleaned out, and I've just called around to find out what day you feel like starting for Glen Ellen. It'll have to be soon, for it's real expensive living in Oakland these days. My board at the hotel is only paid to the end of the week, and I can't afford to stay on after that. And beginning with tomorrow I've got to use the street cars, and they are eat up the nickels."

He paused, and waited, and looked at her. Indecision and trouble showed on her face. Then the smile he knew so well began to grow on her lips and in her eyes, until she threw back her head and laughed in the old forthright, boyish way.

"When are those meo coming to pick for me?" she asked.

And again she laughed and simulated a vain attempt to escape his bear-like arms.

"Dear Elam," she whispered, "dear Elam." And of herself, for the first time, she kissed him.

"Now, I've got an idea," Daylight said. "We're running away from cities, and you have no kith nor kin, so it don't seem exactly right that we should start off by getting married in a city. So here's the idea: I'll run up to the ranch and get things in shape around the house and give the caretaker his walking-papers. You follow me in a couple of days, coming on the morning train. I'll have the preacher fixed and waiting. And here's another idea. You bring your riding togs in a suit case. And as soon as the ceremony's over, you can go to the hotel and change. Then out you come, and you find me waiting with a couple of horses, and we'll ride over the landscape so as you can see the prettiest parts of the ranch the first thing. And she's sure pratty, that ranch. And now that it's settled, I'll be waiting for you at the morning train day after tomorrow."

Dede blushed as she spoke.

"You are such a hurricane."

"Well, ma'am," he drawled, "I sure hate to burn daylight. And you and I have burned a heap of daylight. We've been scandalously extravagant. We might have been married years ago."

Two days later, Daylight stood waiting outside the little Glen Ellen hotel. The ceremony was over, and he had left Dede to go inside and change into her riding-habit while he brought the horses. He held them now, Bob and Mah, and in the shadow of the watering-trough Wolf lay and looked on. Already two days of ardent California sun and touched with new fires the ancient bronze in Daylight's face. But warmer still was the glow that came into his cheeks and burned in his eyes as he saw Dede coming out the door, riding-whip in hand, clad in the familiar corduroy skirt and leggings of the old Piedmont days. There was warmth and glow in her own face as she answered his gaze and glanced on past him to the horses. Then she saw Mah. But her gaze leaped back to the man.

"Oh, Elam!" she breathed.

Many persons, themselves city-bred, and city reared, have fled to the soil and succeeded in winning great happiness. In such cases they have succeeded only by going through a process of savage disillusionment. But with Dede and Daylight it was different. They had both been born on the soil, and they knew its naked simplicities and tawdry ways. They were like two persons, after far wanderings, who had merely come home again. There was less of the unexpected in their dealings with nature, while theirs was all the delight of reminiscence. What might appear sordid and squalid to the fastidiously reared was to them continually wholesome and natural. The commerce of nature was to them no unknown, and untried trade. They made fewer mistakes. They already knew, and it was a joy to remember what they had forgotten.

And another thing they learned was that it was easier for one who has gorged at the flesh-pots to content himself with the meanness of a crust, than for one who has known only the crust. Not that their life was meagre. It was that they found keener delights and deeper satisfactions in little things. Daylight, who had played the game in its biggest and most fantastic aspects, found that here, on the slopes of Sonoma Mountain, it was still the same old game. Man had still work to perform, forces to combat, obstacles to overcome. When he experimented in a small way at raising a few pigeons for market, he found no less zest in calculating in squabs than formerly when he had calculated in millions. Achievement was no less achievement, while the process of it seemed more rational and received the sanction of his reason.

The domestic cat that had gone wild and that preyed on his pigeons, he found, by the comparative standard, to be of no less paramount importance than in Charles Kilmour in the field of finance, trying to rub him for several millions. The hawks and weasels and coons were so many Downatts, Lettens, and Guggenhammers that struck at him secretly. The sea of wild vegetation that tossed its surf against the boundaries of all his clearings and that sometimes crept in and flooded in a single week was no mean enemy to contend with and subdue. His fatigued vegetable-garden in the nook of hills that faced of its best was a problem of engrossing importance, and when he had solved it by putting in drain-tiles, the joy of the achievement was ever with him. He never worked in it and found the soil unpacked and tractable without experiencing the thrill of accomplishment.

There was the matter of the plumbing. He was enabled to purchase the materials through a lucky sale of a number of his hair brushes. The work he did himself, though more than once he was forced to call in Dede to hold tight with a pipe-wrench. And in the end, when the bathtub and the stationary tubs were installed and in working order, he could scarcely tear himself away from the contemplation of what his hands had wrought. The first evening, missing him, Dede sought and found him, limp in hand, staring with silent glee at the tubs. He rubbed his hand over their smooth wooden lips and laughed aloud, and was as shame-faced as any boy when she caught him thus secretly exulting in his own prowess.

It was this adventure in wood-work.

THE EFFECTIVE LAXATIVE

Tastes Like and is Eaten Like Candy.

In our experience in the handling of drugs and medicines, we believe we have never had experience with any remedy that gave such great satisfaction to our customers as do Rexall Orderlies. This remedy is not like any other laxative or cathartic. It contains all the good features of other laxatives, but none of their faults.

Our own faith in Rexall Orderlies is so strong that we offer them to you with our own positive personal guarantee, that if they do not thoroughly satisfy you, you only need tell us and we will hand back to you every penny you paid us for them. Therefore, in trying them upon our recommendation you take no risk whatever.

Rexall Orderlies taste like and are eaten like candy. They do not gripe, cause nausea, excessive looseness, or any other annoyance. They act so easily that they may be taken at any time, day or night. They are particularly good for children, aged, or delicate persons. They are put up in convenient tablets in three sizes of packages. Prices, 10c, 25c, and 50c.

Remember, Rexall Remedies can be obtained in this community only at one store—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Mich.

report of the city attorney on ordinances relative to parties who are adjacent to sewers, connecting with the same, be accepted and placed on file, and that the city attorney acting with the ordinance committee be instructed to prepare an ordinance repealing ordinance number 37 and number 38 and containing the desired provisions. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Swinton that ordinance number 107 entitled an ordinance to regulate the milk supply and its sources for the city of Charlevoix be and the same is hereby adopted by the following aye and may vote:

Ayes, Swinton, Glassford, Nordrum, Rackow and Webster.

Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Webster and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the chairman of the Finance committee be instructed to enter into correspondence with various auditing concerns relative to an audit of the city books. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Webster that the report of the special charter committee be laid on the table for one week. Motion carried.

Following is the report:

To the Honorable, the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan:

The Special Committee to which was appointed pursuant to a resolution of your body, begs leave to the this preliminary report:

The members of the committee have been reading and investigating the various charters adopted and proposed, under the Home Rule for Cities Act, and at a meeting of the committee it was decided after careful consideration, that the best results for the city could be obtained from a charter which would contain, in brief, the following provisions:

Non-partisan elections; nominations to be made by petition for the primary, the two highest candidates in the primary to have their names placed on the final ballot, but with no party designation in any way.

Abolishment of the Board of Works, Board of Health, and perhaps the Cemetery Board, and concentration of power and duties now in the hands of such boards, in hands of three men, to be elected regardless of ward boundaries, to be called Commissioners or Mayor and Aldermen or any other title—these three to have entire charge, control and direction of all city affairs, and replacing the present board of aldermen and mayor.

Providing for the appointment of City Clerk, Treasurer, and other officers necessary and now appointed; the power to create and fill these offices if desired, and the power to discharge any appointee at any time for good and sufficient reasons.

Terms of office of these three Commissioners, if they be called such, to be six years with a further provision for a recall of any officer by the people on a petition of 5 to 10 per cent. of the voters at last city election.

Provisions for the initiative and referendum, and provision that no franchise be granted until the people have approved of same.

Provision that Commissioners shall receive not to exceed $1000 salary, combined, and that they may employ a "business manager" for the city, and that if one the commissioners be so situated that he can act in such capacity, he may be named as such business manager, the compensation may be received to be named by other commissioners, but not to exceed the limit of $1500 named above for all three.

The supervisors to be elected by wards as at present.

This is in brief the general plan we would recommend to be adopted, and we have drafted in proper shape for submission to the people, but before entering upon the work of drafting such an ordinance, we would like to submit this preliminary report. If such a plan meets with your approval, we will at once take up the preparation of a proper draft to submit to you for adoption, and to be then submitted to the voters.

We believe that a charter with provisions outlined above will give the city a more efficient, more economical, and more satisfactory business administration than can be possible under the present plan, and we earnestly ask your approval of this preliminary report, that we may immediately begin the preparation of a charter along these lines.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for the profuse floral offerings and their many kindnesses at the death of our little daughter, Edna, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Smith.

WORTH SEVERAL MEN.

Easily Made Carrier to Take Sacked Grain From Thrasher to Granary.

This sketch shows a device that will take the place of several men, according to a correspondent of the Farm and Fireside.

The hardest work in our community at thrashing time is the carrying of the sacked grain from the machine to the granary. To do this satisfactorily several men are required. This device cost only $3. It is attached to the hay carrier the same as a hayfork and holds seven sacks of oats. One man and a boy to lead the horse can operate it successfully.

The poles may be cut as follows: A is a 2 by 2 oak piece thirty-eight inches long. B is one-half inch basswood boards, thirty-six inches long. C are pieces 1 by 3 by 30 inches. D is pieces 1 by 3 by 30 inches. E is represent wires connecting the carrier with the hay traps. F is a piece 2 by 4 by 12, which opens the sliding door as it strikes the hopper, shown just below the carrier.

When filled this device is fastened to the blocks and follows the track until the sliding door strikes the hopper. It takes about a minute to empty the contents into the hopper, which is connected by a spout to bias below. In drawing the carrier back caution must be used to do so slowly. The hopper, as arranged for this carrier, is 23 by 25 by 30.

GOOD PHILOSOPHY.

Agriculture is the taproot of the tree of prosperity, says a Chinese proverb, and in this respect at least the heathen Chinese is everlasting right.

Live Stock and Dairy.

If you are a little short of feed get rid of the poor cows and replace them with good ones. Don't keep cows; make them keep you.

Farmers should learn that, while alfalfa hay is one of the finest of feeds for cows, yet green alfalfa is rather dangerous, particularly so if it has been frosted.

Early breeding tends to develop heavy milkers, and by good care and feeding this can be accomplished without dwarfing the size or weakening the constitution of the cow or her progeny.

Many young feeders make the great mistake of trying to push their cattle too rapidly. Never forget that the best and biggest gains are made the first month on the smallest amount of grain.

All cows that are weak, thin and coughing must be removed from the herd. Milk from unhealthy cows is not safe to use, and only cows in good health can make profitable use of the food given them. The herd should be inspected at regular intervals by a competent veterinarian.

It is the custom of Swiss mountaineers to hang bells on the necks of their cows, and so accustomed and attached do the animals become to these bells that the deprivation of them is felt as a punishment. If any cow has been guilty of straying or unseemly behavior, a break of discipline or any vicious trick the dispenser of the food is not to be withheld by blows, but by temporary deprivation of her bell, and this seldom fails to reduce her to order and to prevent a repetition of the offense.

FOR SALE OR RENT.

PRIMARY ENROLLMENT.

Notice is hereby given that primary enrollment under Act No. 28, Pub. Acts of 1906, as amended by Act No. 226, Pub. Acts of 1911, the Board of Enrollment of the several townships and wards of the county of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, will be in session on Saturday, January 19, A. M., 10 o'clock, at the court house in the city of Charlevoix, for the purpose of enrolling the names of all persons, members of whatever political party, who make personal application for such enrollment.

Following is a brief statement of the ways in which enrollment can be had in townships of cities during the year 1912: Enrollment dates this year are January 20th, and April 1st.

1. By personal application on enrollment day.
2. By a written request accompanied by affidavit, an elector can enroll any day, but cannot vote at any primary held within two months. This affidavit and application must be delivered to the township clerk or other officer in charge of the enrollment book.

3. An elector who was sick or unavoidably absent on enrollment day or who has come 21 years of age or an elector after enrollment day can have his name enrolled on primary enrollment day and vote at that election by taking the necessary oath.

4. If an elector who has been duly enrolled as above, changes his residence from a precinct to another, he can be re-enrolled in the new precinct by obtaining a proper certificate from a member of the Enrollment Board of the precinct wherein he formerly resided stating that he is duly enrolled in the precinct from which he has moved and is entitled to enrollment in the new precinct or by taking oath.

5. No person can vote at any primary in Michigan unless his name has been enrolled under Act No. 28. All enrollment to be made on or before August 1, 1912, is void. An elector who enrolls after August 1, 1912, is not entitled to vote at any primary held after that date.

6. Said Board of Enrollment will be in session in each of said wards from 7 o'clock a. m. until 10 o'clock p. m., on said day of enrollment.

Witness at Charlevoix, Mich., this 17th day of January, A. D. 1912.

The Girls' Covenant club met with Miss Pauline Markin last Friday evening. About ten members were present and a good time was enjoyed by all.

The Ing McCann made a trip over here last Friday from Beaver Island, returning the next day. Several passengers went back, having been storm bound here.

Amos Webster returned Friday from his ten days trip on the west shore. He reports that Charlevoix isn't the only place with cold weather and snow.

We have heard from Ed. Brown, son of P. S. Brown and formerly of this place, to the effect that he is now leader and teacher of a band at Norwood, Iowa.

If you are a voter and expect to vote at the coming primaries you had better enroll with the township clerk on the last Saturday of this month, which is the 27th.

The W. R. C. will observe Lincoln's birthday, February 8 instead of the 12th, as the hall is taken on that date. A supper will be served. The program will be announced later.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wildren are the proud parents of twin boys born Thursday, January 11. We understand it will be the "Family," theatre now, instead of the Majestic.

J. D. Parrish was adjudged insane Thursday, and will be placed in the Traverse City asylum. He has made several attempts to commit suicide, one of which nearly proved fatal.

One of Charlevoix's promising young men, John Lynkrip, is now at Grand Rapids, holding down a position as street railway conductor. We are pleased to hear that John is making good.

James McCrory left here Monday for Grand Rapids. Mrs. McCrory is visiting friends and relatives here and will remain for some time. Mr. McCrory came to attend the funeral of Mrs. E. Carpenter.

Those who attend the Ironton services are requested to take notice that the service will occur again next Sunday, the pastor having so far recovered from his accident as to be able to take up the work again.

Miss Magdalene A. Sheffield, who formerly made her home with P. S. Brown in this city, was married Wednesday, January 10, to C. Holman DeWitt, at Chicago. They will make their home at Waukegan, Illinois.

The Royal Fortenac hotel, which was owned by the Ann Arbor Railroad company, was completely destroyed by fire last Friday night. Firemen were unable to cope with blaze because of the zero weather. The loss is about $150,000. It will probably be rebuilt.

A letter received from Harrison Berdan states that he will return to Charlevoix sometime the latter part of February of the first of March, and will be "tickled as a boy with a new kile" when he arrives. He also states that he is well and sends regards to his many friends.

Rollie Lewis has formed a partnership with J. E. Converse of Boyne City. He was in the office of Mr. Converse all last summer so the work will not be entirely new to him. We are sure that this partnership will be a successful one and hope to see Rollie do his best.

The report comes from Bay Shore that there is a man, probably a fisherman, adrift on an ice floe at the mouth of the bay. A telephone message from that place to Petoskey stated that a woman had seen the man on the ice, and on looking a short time later, the ice had broken away and he was adrift.

Whether in favor of or opposed to the commission form of government, it will be of advantage to every citizen of Charlevoix to hear this matter discussed by a man so well equipped for the purpose as Professor Reeves. You will be welcome and that without price. At M. E. church Saturday night.

The Ladies' Aid society of the Congregational church will serve a supper in the parlors of the church next Tuesday evening from five to seven. After the supper the annual business meeting of the church will be held. This is very important meeting and the attendance of every member of the church is needed.

The house owned by Wesley How, and located just west of William McLean, was totally destroyed by fire this morning, at about eleven o'clock. It presumably caught in the upper story from a stovepipe. Most of the furniture downstairs was saved, but all that upstairs was burned. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

The R. N. of A. Camp No. 480, have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Oracle, Maggie Reed; Vice Oracle, Alva Howard; Chancellor, Rose Painter; Recorder, Bessie Biers; Receiver, Ada A. Driggett; Marshall, Sabine King; Inner Sentinel, Johanna Nowland; Outer Sentinel, Anna Paulsen; Manager, No. 3, Minnie Staley and Asst. Marshall, Janet Dorrance.

In the write-up last week of the W. R. C. and G. A. R. installation, the lodge correspondent, for some unknown reason, failed to mention that Ella Tillotson was the installing officer, and that both the W. R. C. and G. A. R. were greatly indebted to her, not only for the good work she accomplished, but for the lateness in the day when she was asked to do the work.

The Men's Bible class of Charlevoix are showing their disposition to be helpful to the citizens of Charlevoix by bringing Professor Reeves of the University of Michigan, and a man of exceptional ability and information in municipal matters to Charlevoix, to lecture on the commission form of government. Every one should turn out and hear him at the Methodist church, Saturday evening of this week. The lecture will start at 8:30 and is absolutely free. No admission fee, no collection.

We have received word today that in the game at Cheboygan last night between our Independent Basket Ball team and the Cheboygan team, Charlevoix team was victorious, the score being 7 to 21. Tonight they play at Mackinac and tomorrow night at Pellston. The boys are certainly doing some good work this season and we wish them success in the games that are to follow.

New York's postmaster is making an effort to clear the mails of letters of young girls written to boys without the knowledge of their parents, thus using the postoffice as a means of keeping up harmful flirtations, claiming that much misery, many broken hearts and many troubles would be avoided if parents would maintain a closer supervision over the letters of their children. Possibly if this scheme was adopted in Charlevoix, it would in a measure stop the same practice being followed by some men of families who are known to be using the mails for the same purpose.

FIRST OF THE YEAR

W. C. T. U. Held Interesting Meeting Friday Afternoon.

The last meeting of the W. C. T. U. held last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Wright Ripley, was a very interesting one. There was a very good attendance, though the day was stormy. This was the first meeting of the new year. Mrs. H. P. Parmelee read some interesting incidents of the woman's crusade in Hillsboro, Ohio, over thirty years ago. Rev. F. M. Taylor led the devotional exercises, reading psalm 145, known as the crusade psalm. This was followed by the crusade hymn, sung by those noble women of the crusade. Mrs. Harwick sang a solo, "There's a Shadow on the Home." Mrs. Parmelee read an interesting paper on "The Home as a Social Center." Mr. Taylor gave an interesting talk on "The Vandeville and its Influence." Jack Supernaw gave a recitation which was very well received. Mrs. Enla Martindale sang a solo, Miss Olivitt Allard accompanying her on the piano. Miss Himes' paper on "The Responsibility of the School in Directing the Amusements of Young People" was a most excellent one.

Mrs. A. L. Conter sang a beautiful solo; Miss Putnam playing the accompaniment. Mrs. W. J. Miller gently chided the W. C. T. U. for not turning out more to the meetings of the Parent's association which are being held in the school building, and which is an outgrowth of the W. C. T. U. Surely the mother in this instance should look after the child more. A very pleasant incident of this meeting was the presentation of a beautiful bedroom clock to Mrs. F. Dewey Rhile, one of our W. C. T. U. members, who is soon to leave us. Mrs. H. A. Putnam in a few well-chosen words made the presentation in behalf of the union, after which the beautiful song "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," was sung.

One new member was gained at this meeting; 21 members and 7 visitors were present.

Special for Saturday, January 20, Fresh Chocolate Peanut Cluster, 2c per pound at Bert Beaudon's. 31

ELECTED NEW DIRECTOR

Charlevoix State Savings Bank Holds Annual Meeting

At the annual meeting of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank the stockholders elected J. L. Crane as director to succeed Guy S. Brown, who retired from the board owing to the fact that he has moved his family to Victoria, B. C., where he is now permanently located with the Canadian Puget Sound Lumber company.

Mr. Crane is regarded as a very successful and substantial merchant and business man and no doubt will make a valuable director. The State Bank is to be congratulated on this addition to its board. The officers of the bank remain the same. R. P. Foley, president; G. C. Geiken and H. S. Harsha, vice-presidents and W. J. Rachow, cashier.

COMING JANUARY 22.

Monday, January 22, is the date when J. Leahy, the optometrist will be at Baker's Inn. One day only. Headache cured, crossed eyes straightened, glasses guaranteed. 242

ing and plumbing that brought about the building of the little workshop, where he slowly gathered a collection of loved tools. And he, who in the old days, out of his millions, could purchase immediately whatever he might desire, learned the new joy of the possession that follows upon rigid economy and desire long delayed. He waited three months before daring the extravagance of a Yankee screw-driver, and his glee in the marvelous little mechanism was so keen that Dede conceived forthright a great idea. For six months she saved her egomoney, which was hers by right of allotment, and on his birthday presented him with a turning-lathe of wonderful simplicity and multifarious efficiencies. And their mutual delight in the lathe, which was his, was only equalled by their delight in Meh's first tool, which was Dede's special private property. Daylight had made no assertion of total abstinence, though he had not taken a drink for months after the day he resolved to let his business go to smash. Soon he proved himself strong enough to dare to take a drink without taking a second. On the other hand, with his coming to live in the country, had passed all desire and need for drink. He felt no yearning for it, and even forgot that it existed. Yet he refused to be afraid of it, and in town, on occasion, when invited by the storekeeper, would reply: "All right, son. If my taking a drink will make you happy, here goes. Whisky for mine."

"Dear Elam," She whispered, "Dear Elam."

But such a drink meant no desire for a second. It made no impression. He was too profoundly strong to be affected by a thimbleful. As he had prophesied to Dede, Burning Daylight, the city financier, had died a quick death on the ranch, and his younger brother, the Daylight, from Alaska, had taken his place. The threatened foundation of fat had subsided, and all his old-time Indian leanness and thinness of muscle had returned. So, likewise, did the old slight hollows in his cheeks come back. For him they indicated the pluck of physical condition. He became the acknowledged strong man of Sonoma Valley: the heaviest lifter and hardest winded among a husky race of farmer folk.

At first, when in need of ready cash, he had followed Ferguson's example of working at day's labor; but he was not long in gravitating to a form of work that was more stimulating and more satisfying, and that allowed him even more time for Dede and the ranch and the perpetual riding through the hills. Having been challenged by the blacksmith, in a spirit of banter, to attempt the breaking of a certain incorrigible colt, he succeeded so signally as to earn quite a reputation as a horse-breaker. And soon he was able to earn whatever money he desired at this, to him, agreeable work. His life was eminently wholesome and natural. Early to bed, he slept like an infant and was up with the dawn. Always with something to do, and with a thousand little things that enticed but did not clamor, he was himself never overdone. Nevertheless, there were times when both he and Dede were not above confessing tiredness at bedtime after seventy or eighty miles in the saddle. Sometimes, when he had accumulated a little money, and when the season favored, they would mount their horses, with saddlebags behind, and ride away over the wall of the valley and down into the other valleys.

One day, stopping to mail a letter at the Glen Ellen postoffice, they were Daylight had long since told Dede of the incident. "Slosson?" he meditated. "Slosson? That must be the hammer-thrower. He put my hand down twice, the

"Say," He Called Out, "I'd Like to Tackle You Again."

young scamp." He turned suddenly to Dede. "Say, it's only twelve miles to Santa Rosa, and the horses are fresh."

She divined what was in his mind, of which his twinkling eyes and sheepish, boyish grin gave sufficient advertisement, and she smiled and nodded acquiescence.

"We'll cut across by Bennett Valley," he said. "It's nearer that way."

There was little difficulty, once in Santa Rosa, of finding Slosson. He and his party had registered at the Oberlin Hotel, and Daylight encountered the young hammer-thrower himself in the office.

"Look here, son," Daylight announced, as soon as he had introduced Dede. "I've come to go you another flutter at that head game. Here's a likely place."

Slosson smiled and accepted. The two men faced each other, the elbows of their right arms on the counter, the hands clasped. Slosson's hand quickly forced backward and down.

"You're the first man that ever succeeded in doing it," he said. "Let's try it again."

"Sure," Daylight answered. "And don't forget, son, that you're the first man that put mine down. That's why I lit out after you today."

Again they clasped hands, and again Slosson's hand went down. He was a broad-shouldered, heavy-muscled young giant, at least half a head taller than Daylight, and he frankly expressed his chagrin and asked for a third trial. This time he steered himself to the effort, and for a moment the issue was in doubt. With flushed face and set teeth he met the other's strength till his crackling muscles failed him. The air exploded sharply from his tensed lungs, as he relaxed in surrender, and the hand dropped limply down.

"You're too munny for me," he confessed. "I only hope you'll keep out of the hammer-throwing game."

Daylight laughed and shook his head.

"We might compromise, and each stay in his own class. You stick to hammer-throwing, and I'll go on turning down hands."

But Slosson refused to accept defeat.

"Say," he called out, as Daylight and Dede, astride their horses, were preparing to depart. "Say—do you mind if I look you up next year? I'd like to tackle you again."

"Sure, son. You're welcome to a flutter any time. Though I give you fair warning that you'll have to go some. You'll have to train up, for I'm plowing and chopping wood and breaking colts these days."

Now and again, on the way home, Dede could hear her big boy husband chuckling gleefully. As they halted their horses on the top of the divide out of Bennett Valley, in order to watch the sunset, he ranged alongside and slipped his arm around her waist.

"Little woman," he said, "you're sure responsible for it all. And I leave it to you, if all the money in creation is worth as much as one arm like that when it's got a sweet little woman like this to go around."

Daylight's steadfast contention was that his wife should not become cook, waitress, and chambermaid because she did not happen to possess a household of servants. On the other hand, chafing-dish suppers in the big living room for their camping guests were a common happening, at which times Daylight allotted them their chores and saw that they were performed. For one who stopped only for the night it was different. Likewise it was different with her brother, back from Germany, and again able to sit in a horse. On his vacations he became the third in the family, and to him was given the building of the fire, the sweeping, and the washing of the dishes.

SUMMER CARE OF SHEEP.

Internal Parasites the Shepherd's Worst Scourge.

In all regions where Indian corn grows well, where there is enough heat and enough rainfall for corn, there sheep are liable to suffer from internal parasites. Indeed, they are almost certain to suffer, writes Joseph E. Wing in the Breeder's Gazette. In Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Nebraska and all states south in ever increasing proportion there is the danger of parasitic invasion, and the sooner we accept the truth and learn to avoid the infection the better for us.

Just what are the enemies that destroy sheep? There are three classes of internal parasites—that do the mischief. There is the small but deadly stomach worm. It is no larger than a thick hair, not an inch long, yet it costs sheep owners of our country millions every year. It is the stomach worm that causes "paper skin" (the old name for a white skin, accompanied, with emaciation, diarrhea, constipation, premature old age and death in lambs. Next there is the worm that causes nodular disease, not so quick in its action, yet and enough; also the germ of the tapeworm. All these we must consider. If we are to succeed in the sheep business in the corn belt we must learn to guard against them.

How comes infection? The eggs of these parasites are discharged with the dung on the grass. The ewes do this. Though they may appear healthy, they probably carry enough worms to infest a pasture, as one worm will deposit many eggs. The little worms hatch when the nights are dewy and the days warm along in late May and during July, August and early September. Before and after these dates there is no fear, for the nights are too cool for the germs to develop. It is during the time that corn grows fast, that worms develop fast and lambs are in peril. The little embryo worm undergoes some changes in or on the earth; then in perfect form, but small, climbs up a little way on the grass and awaits the coming of a lamb that will take him into his stomach with the grass. That is why short, sweet, close clipped grass is ever the more dangerous. The lambs bite it closer to the earth, taking in the greater number of worms. There is often a lot near the barn perhaps, covered with blue grass like a lawn, a place the lambs love. There sheep graze much; there the droppings coat the earth; there the worms swarm. Such spots are safe and convenient pasturage in late fall, during winter and in early spring. They are deadly after May and until late September.

Where are safe pastures? Fields sown to clover, in which may be mixed alfalfa and grasses, seldom infect lambs. Why not? Because they do not eat so close to the earth, for one thing, and because there is in such fields no infection remaining over from the previous year. Fields sown with oats, with clovers, grasses and alfalfa make healthy lambs. There is here the danger that the farmer may forget his little bits, his danger spots where infection lurks. He may let the flock come daily or often to crop again the short, sweet, infected grass. Doing this and finding his lambs sick on clover pasture he may exclaim, "There is nothing in clover pasture for keeping sheep healthy."

A very good idea on a farm where sheep are kept would be to have printed some large yellow cardboard signs, reading, "This land is dangerous for sheep after May 20," or "This land is dangerous for sheep from June to September." These he could put on the gates to remind him and to remind his sons and the hired men that the sheep, especially the lambs, were to be kept off, at least were to be permitted on only during times of very dry weather; best if only during the heat of the day.

The International congress of archaeology, which was to have been held in Rome this fall, has been postponed until next spring, according to advice from the American embassy in Rome. This is the fourth congress which has been postponed because of the prevalence of cholera in Italy.

It is estimated that $2,500,000 is spent annually upon public roads in Missouri, having an aggregate length of 120,000 miles.

All the profit of sheep husbandry is bound up in one thing—the keeping of the flock in health. Healthy sheep in the corn belt are fat. Their lambs are fat. Their wool is good and abundant. They make money for their owners. The flock afflicted with parasites is unthrifty. It wastes the feed it consumes because it cannot digest and assimilate it. Its lambs are weakly light if they are alive, and the cost of shepherding is increased, maybe tenfold, when the flock is out of health. The Oxford ewe shown above is the property of R. A. B. Widener of Elkton Park, Pa.

PEOPLE WILL HAVE ABSOLUTE CONTROL

taxpayers would get from $500 to $1,000 back from the state for every mile constructed, this amount being paid by the other counties of the state.

To put it in a nutshell, the farmer now has to pay $1 for $1 worth of road work. Under the county road plan, he would get $1 worth of road work and would only pay about 50 cents, because the other 50 cents would come out of the cities and villages and out of the other 82 counties of the state.

Still another source of saving would be the fact that every time the county road commission improved a mile of road in your township you would be relieved of just that much tax, for township road work. Thus the bigger the county road tax the smaller the township road taxes would be.

Another saving—and it really is the very biggest of all—would result from doing the road work right. With all the new construction going on, we quickly would have a group of skilled practical road builders—experts who know how to build and repair roads. Their work would be watched and imitated. Skilled men could be obtained any time for supervising township road jobs. Taxpayers seeing real scientific road building on all sides would not put up with the botch-work that now disgraces so many localities, nor would they stand for the inexcusable waste of money that is going on all the while now because of lack of knowledge. They would not tolerate the sight of soft mud scraped into a hole in the highway, nor would they pay out their good money for plowing up a road the wrong time of year, or spoiling a decent stretch by dumping sod into the middle.

There is more than one thing to think of in this road proposition, and the road tax is the smallest part of it. Of course if we don't want better roads, or don't need better roads, then we don't want to have anything to do with the county road law. But if we are really after highway improvement, let us not be scared out by a tax of ten cents an acre.

THE FARM FOR POULTRY.

Conditions Needed For Success In This Branch of Industry.

To succeed with poultry one must choose the right kind of surroundings. The land and location are of most importance. There are farms and farms, but only now and then one suitable for poultry keeping. The would be poultryman should be very careful in his selection of a farm, for upon this selection may depend his success or failure in the poultry business. He should choose:

First.—A farm with land sloping to the south or southeast, so that in winter the hen houses may receive the full benefit of the sun's rays.

Second.—A farm bordered or protected on the north and west by a forest or windbreak, preferably of evergreen trees, so that the cold winds may be thus shut off from the poultry plant.

Third.—A farm with productive land in order that it may yield full returns for fertilizer applied and labor expended.

Fourth.—A farm with soil adapted to fruit culture, so that fruit and poultry, mutually allied and remunerative, may be carried on hand in hand. An apple orchard furnishes no ideal run for poultry, for here shade, protection and abundance of animal food can be found.

Fifth.—A farm containing woodland or sloughs where during the heat of the summer the flock may find shelter from the sun as well as a variety of animal food.

Sixth.—A farm with a stream of clear, cool water flowing through it, where the growing stock can have access to it at all times to quench their thirst and in the lowlands find laudable forms of animal and plant life so appetizing to the fowl kind.

Seventh.—A farm where corn and oats will grow, for among such crops are always to be found crickets and grasshoppers galore, the bone and muscle making food for the growing chicks.

Eighth.—A farm that is well drained, with uplands and lowlands, with fertile fields and verdant pastures, rich meadows and thrifty woodlands—in short, a farm that is teeming with plant and animal life.

Such a farm, having as many of these essentials as possible, is the one to be chosen in order that the best results may be obtained.—Farm Journal.

COMMERCIAL POULTRY.

One Method of Feeding Fowls on Large Scale Described.

In a recent bulletin issued by the Bureau of animal industry of the United States department of agriculture the methods and results of feeding poultry on a large commercial scale were described. The investigation of this subject by Alfred E. Lee of the department is believed to be the first attempt to acquire comprehensive and reliable figures on the cost of producing a pound of gain in poultry.

Portable feeding batteries, as shown in the cut are described as follows: This battery is divided into eight coops.

PORTABLE POULTRY FEEDING BATTERY. (Photograph by United States department of agriculture.)

four tiers of two coops each, and holds eighty springers or sixty-four hens. It is 2 feet 7½ inches wide and 5 feet 9 inches high. The slats in the front are one and seven-eighths inches apart and each set of slats, which is eight and one-quarter inches wide, is held in by buttons, so that it can be easily removed and a set of slats which are closer together or farther apart may be quickly inserted. As the size of the chickens' heads vary considerably during the season this changeable front is of value. The dropping pans are one and three-quarter inches below the floors, which are made of heavy square mesh wire, and have roost boards 2 inches wide by three quarters of an inch thick by 2 feet 6 inches long. The bottom of the first floor is six inches from the ground, and it is fifteen inches from the wire floor to the top of each coop, making each tier, including the dropping pans, sixteen and three-quarters of an inch deep.

The battery rolls on four wheels, two double pivot wheels in front and two wheels connected by a bar in the rear. The sliding doors on the sides are fitted with hooks which fasten into eyes on the battery. The whole battery is made of furrie, 1½ by 7½ inches, covered with two inch mesh wire and laths. The feeding troughs are three and one-half inches across the top, inside measurement, and three inches from the top edge to the bottom, outside measurement. These troughs are held in place with bent wires, which are flexible, so that they give if the troughs hit any obstacle, thus preventing breakage. A wire partition divides the battery into two equal parts. A similar battery is used for feeding turkeys except that it contains three tiers instead of four, and the slats in front are two and five-eighths inches apart.

COMMISSION FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Just What It Is Explained by Prof. J. S. Reeves

SIMPLICITY ITS GREAT ADVANTAGE

As is Also Its Responsiveness to Public Sentiment

Advises No More Than Three Commissioners, All to Have Equal Power and Responsibility.

The lecture at the M. E. church Saturday evening by Prof. J. S. Reeves of the department of Political Science of the University of Michigan, drew a crowded house, despite the counter attraction of the Farmers' Institute, and the fact that Saturday is a very bad night for business men to get away.

This lecture is one of a series which the Men's Bible class has secured through the medium of the University Extension, and which are given without any admission fee, the idea being to carry to the people the benefits of the university, in the way especially of lectures by its most prominent professors, on various topics of public interest.

Prof. Reeves took for his subject, "The Commission Form of Government for Cities," and he explained it in a very pleasing and simple manner, just what the commission form of government was, how it originated and what its advantages were. While his talk was of course along general lines, much of the argument in favor of this form of government was directly applicable to our own situation. The great advantage of the commission, as he saw it, was its simplicity, and its responsiveness to public sentiment. He advised no more than three commissioners, all to have equal power and responsibility, and all to hold office for the same period of time. These commissioners to appoint all other officials of the city, and to be subject to recall under certain conditions. The initiative and referendum were favored as vital features of this form of government.

An opportunity was given for anyone desiring of asking questions to do so, but no one availed themselves of the opportunity, though after the meeting was over, a number of professors met the professor and discussed various features of the plan with him. Mayor Hampton, who presided at the speaker, announced that by the recent decision of the supreme court, the section of the law permitting the city council to amend the charter, had been declared unconstitutional, and the alternative plan of electing a charter commission would now have to be adopted if any change was to be made in the present form of our city government, and that petitions asking the council to call such an election would undoubtedly be circulated soon, so that all who believe in the commission form, would have an opportunity to help secure it.

The Courier believes that the adoption of the commission form of government would be a most excellent thing for our city, and we also agree with Mayor Hampton, in believing that it will not be necessary or expedient to provide for large salaries for the commissioners, for we believe it will be as easy to find three patriotic, public spirited citizens who will act as commissioners at a nominal salary, as it now is to find mayors and aldermen to work for $50 per year, and members of the Board of Works, Board of Health, and Cemetery board, to work for nothing and board themselves. Give us the commission form of government, with small salaries, and a centralization of authority and responsibility in few hands, and we will find it a great improvement, and a money saving plan.

HAD MANY FRIENDS HERE

Charlie A. E. Fisk Was Stricken Suddenly by Apoplexy Saturday.

Complaining of a severe headache at half past nine Saturday night, Charles A. E. Fisk, chief clerk in the Fallas drug store at Petoskey, retired to the gallery of that place and, while preparing to lie in a hammock, fell and expired in a few minutes. He was found lying across the hammock by one of the clerks, and died in a few minutes later in his arms. Physicians were hurriedly called, but arrived too late to give aid.

A short time before the stroke Mr. Fisk was conversing with friends, and took part in the conversation in his usual manner.

In every respect Mr. Fisk was a self-made man, having begun at the bottom and worked himself up to a position of responsibility and trust. He had many friends in this city.

REACH HUNDRED MARK

Men's Bible Class Have This Number of Members

Sunday's Attendance One of the Largest Since Its Organization.

One of the most largely attended meetings since its organization took place last Sunday at the Men's Bible class, and the increasing interest shown in the work of the class leads one to believe that in a short time every man interested in the welfare of our beautiful city, will be enrolled as a member.

Some time ago a committee was appointed to draft resolutions pertaining to the temperance question, to be passed upon by the class as a whole, and at last Sunday's meeting the committee reported as follows:

To the Men's Bible Class of the City of Charlevoix: Your committee to whom was referred the matter of drafting a suitable expression of the attitude of the class on the temperance question and toward the liquor traffic, would respectfully report in regard thereto as follows:

1.—The saloon we regard as an unmitigated evil, without a single redeeming feature or excuse for its existence and one of the greatest, if not the greatest menace to mankind and our civilization. Its whole tendency is towards anarchy, the debasement of manhood, and the promotion of crime and vice.

2.—We favor the enactment of a federal statute prohibiting the shipment of intoxicating liquors of all kinds into the states where state wide prohibition prevails.

We also favor a federal law which will forbid the commissioner of internal revenue to issue tax receipts for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any state or part of a state where by the laws of such state the sale, traffic and manufacture of such liquor is prohibited, except to those persons and under those conditions permitted by the state law.

3.—We favor a state constabulary which shall have as one of its functions the enforcement of the liquor law of the state.

4.—We favor the utter abolition of the manufacture, sale and traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage, as fast and so soon as the public sentiment of the people where these laws are passed is sufficient to insure their enforcement.

5.—It is our judgment that the remedy for the existing evils of the liquor traffic is not so much new legislation and more laws, as it is the rigid enforcement of the laws we already have.

$100 AN ACRE IN POTATOES

Harbor Springs Man Gets 2,000 Bushels Out 20 Acres.

John T. Starr raised on 20 acres of his farm, near Harbor Springs, Emmet county, western Michigan, 2,000 bushels of potatoes. He sold 1,200 at 75 cents, $975, and he has the greater part of the remaining 1,000 bushels in storage at Jacksonville, Illinois, to be sold in the spring for seed at 90 cents or better. This means a return that is better than $100 an acre.

MUSICAL FAVORITES

Will be Here for Next Number of Citizens' Lecture Course

An Evening of Rare Entertainment is Assured All Who Attend.

The next number of the Citizens' Lecture Course, will be given by another company of artists. They are just what the name of the company implies, "Musical Favorites." They have been the favorite number on all other courses on which they have appeared. The Record-Herald of Hanover, Pa., says of their appearance at New Freedom: "The Musical Favorites is just the kind of a company to open a lecture course as they have done at New Freedom. They were more favorably received than any other company appearing in any other course at New Freedom."

Their entertainment is both musical and literary. Arthur Love, the leader of the company is referred to as a distinguished caterer of happiness and again as an unrivaled dispenser of the blues. He is a writer, poet, composer soloist, reader and humorist, and better still, his songs, stories, poems, sketches and incidents are original. He could give the entire evening's entertainment alone and for years did so. He is a ventriloquist and a soloist on a dozen different musical instruments, including the piano, violin, banjo, and mandolin.

Mr. Love is assisted by Lena L. Love a soprano soloist, cello, mandolin, and banjo player and reader, and by George L. McHenry and Mina McHenry.

Mr. McHenry is a musician of no mean ability. He is an artist on the xylophone and saxophone and is also a vocalist.

Mrs. McHenry's piano work is often referred to as marvelous. She is a conservatory graduate with honors.

An evening of rare entertainment is assured all who attend.

The entertainment will begin at 8:00 o'clock Thursday evening, February 1. Reserved seats on sale at Chapel's drug store, Tuesday evening, January 30.

DEATH CAME SUDDENLY

William Sutton Stricken as He Performs His Work

Was One of Charlevoix's Most Well Known and Prosperous Farmers.

William Sutton, one of Charlevoix's most well known and prosperous farmers, died suddenly about noon Thursday, at his farm southwest of town, of heart trouble. He had been ailing for sometime, but on the morning of the day of his death was feeling better than usual. He was at the barn doing his chores when the first attack came upon him. He went to the house and in a short time was feeling better. Shortly afterwards a second attack came, which resulted in his death in about an hour. At the time the first attack came, physicians were summoned, but arrived too late to give him medical assistance.

William Sutton was born in Monroe county, Michigan, in 1861, and at the time of his death was 51 years of age. When five years of age he came with his parents to Charlevoix, where he has since made his home.

During the earlier part of his life he was a sailor, but located at the present home about 20 years ago, and by hard and industrious labor made the farm which is today one of the best in the county.

In 1886 he was married to Emma Stikeman, and she together with seven children, two of whom are married, are left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and indulgent father.

The funeral services took place from the house Sunday at one o'clock, and was largely attended by his many friends. Three brothers and two nephews of East Jordan, were among the out of town relatives. Burial took place at Brookside cemetery.

The wife and family have the deepest sympathy of their friends and the community at large.

YOU MUST ENROLL

Some More Facts About New Enrollment Act of 1911.

Usual Provisions Made for Those Absent, Sick or Under Age of 21.

Every voter in Michigan will have to enroll this year or suffer the loss of his vote in the pending election for 1912.

The date of enrollment is Saturday, January 27, and it is general throughout the state.

Any previous enrollment will not count this year.

Following is a brief statement of the different ways in which enrollment can be secured:

1.—By personal application on enrollment days.

2.—By a written request accompanied by affidavit, an elector can enroll any day, but cannot vote at any primary held within two months. This affidavit and application must be delivered to the City Clerk or other officer in charge of the enrollment book.

3.—An elector who was sick or unavoidably absent on enrollment day or who became 21 years of age or an elector after enrollment day can have his name enrolled on primary election day and vote at that election by taking the necessary oath.

4.—If an elector who has been duly enrolled as above changes his residence from one precinct in the state to another he can be enrolled in the new precinct by obtaining a proper certificate from a member of the enrollment board of the precinct wherein he formerly resided stating that he is duly enrolled in the precinct from which he has moved and entitled to enrollment in the new precinct, or by taking oath.

No person can vote at any primary in Michigan unless his name has been enrolled under Act 279.

NEW WATER SUPPLY

City of Petoskey Will Put Down Six New Wells.

Four of the six new wells for the city of Petoskey have been lowered and the contractors, Sweet & Sly, began work Monday afternoon on the fifth.

The work has been even more successful than was anticipated. The wells have been driven to depths varying from 85 to 102 feet, and all produced a good flow of water. In order that dirt or other material might not fall into the wells while the work on the others is going on, plugs were wedged into the mouths of the pipes.

One of the wells is four inches and the others measure six inches across. The work will probably be completed by February 1, the average amount of time spent on driving each well being one week.

BAD FIRE AT HARBOR SPRINGS

Plant of Republican and Home of its Publisher Total Loss.

Harbor Springs was the scene of a disastrous fire the fore part of last week, when the Garland building was totally destroyed, together with its contents, and the Erwin block damaged to the extent of several thousand dollars. The Masonic lodge, which occupied the upper floor of the Erwin building, lost all its furniture and equipment, as also did the Eastern Stars, M. L. Garland, owner of the Garland block, and also the Harbor Springs Republican, besides occupying the second floor as a residence, is the heaviest loser, as nothing was saved of the printing plant or household goods. His loss will approximate $7,000, with insurance to the amount of about $4,000. Erwin carried about $1,000 insurance, and the Masons' loss is about $600 with $300 insurance.

UP FOR BOOTLEGGING

Two Men at Boyne City Caught Red-Headed in the Act.

Jesse Sweet, a lumber jack, and Jack Wyant, who runs a second-hand store, both of Boyne City, were arrested yesterday at that place for illegally selling "booze," and Sweet was brought over to this city this morning by Sheriff Robbins.

Wyant is the proprietor of a small second hand store, using this method to cover up the illegal sale of the "booze," and was caught red-handed by sheriff Robbins. He was given his liberty by giving $500 security to appear Monday for a hearing. Sweet is a lumber jack, and was also caught in the act of selling liquor. He was given a hearing before Justice Hammond of that city, and bound over until the next term of court.

ATTENDANCE WAS GOOD

Farmers' Institute Held Saturday a Successful Meeting

Program Was Well Carried Out and Much Benefit Will be Result of Discussions.

The one day Farmers' Institute held at the court house Saturday had the largest attendance of any of the one day lectures previously held this year. Good crowds were present at every session and much interest was shown in the discussions. E. O. Ladd of Old Mission was the state speaker, although not an orator, he handled each of his topics well, and made many practical and helpful suggestions. His evening address on "What it Means to be a Farmer," gave the audience an entirely new view of this subject.

R. W. Paddock's talk on "The Raising of the Bean Crop" was followed by a discussion, and should be of great assistance to those who intend to plant this crop the coming year.

E. B. Ward's discussion on the good roads question was one of the best talks ever given in the county, and facts and figures were brought out that should make every farmer vote for this law and become a good roads booster.

In the evening the county normal class illustrated their work and furnished music, which was greatly enjoyed by all present, as was also the singing of the Wilkinson quartet and the music given by Helen and Dorothy Armstrong. Taken altogether it was the most successful one day institute ever held in the county.

On pages four and five of this issue will be found the premium list of the Charlevoix Poultry Association. Read all the special premium offers, also the advertisements of our local merchants, and then prepare to visit the show every day possible at least come as often as you can. Go out into chicken coop and pick out your best specimens and enter them. Last year many thought the fowls they had were only "just common," and were greatly surprised when they found they had birds that scored all the way from $1 to $5. Also keep in mind that the success of the association depends entirely upon the number of entries and attendance. Its officers draw no salaries, but devote their time to the work, because they are interested, not only in the raising of better poultry, but want Charlevoix placed on the map as a live town. NO PLACE FOR

MICHIGAN MEN

Opinion of Glenn M. DuBois of Tennessee Mountain Towns

"HAWK" SERVED AT EVERY MEAL

This Animal Forms the Principal Bill of Fare in State

Inhabitants Come to Town Mule Back and Animals are Hitched to Trees in Streets—No Hitching Posts.

The following interesting letter from Glenn M. DuBois, who is spending the winter in the south, will be of interest to many readers of the Courier. Mr. DuBois, who during December was in Tennessee, but the first of the year left that place for Florida; where he is now located, and will furnish the readers of the Courier with some short articles on truck gardening, as carried on in that state.

A fellow from the north going into the Tennessee mountains thinks at first he is in a foreign country. Everything is so different, both the customs and the language of the people.

It was my fortune to spend a week in a Tennessee mountain town, and while I nearly starved, it was so amusing to me that I stayed until I had to get out or famish.

My host, at the hotel where I stopped, was a typical mountaineer, tall, lanky, with a drooping mustache, and one of the kindest hearts that ever beat in man. Born and brought up in the mountains, his entire life had been spent there until about a month before I became his guest. The last time as a guard at the state mines over convicts, but as he expressed it, "I just kaint stand it any more, as I done got sick. I'd like to sell this place and get twenty acres and make me a crop of kahn."

For breakfast we had hominy, hawk, kahn bread and black coffee. For dinner hawk, hominy, kahn bread, sweet potatoes, biscuits and black coffee. For supper biscuits, kahn bread, hawk and black coffee. Do you wonder a fellow from Michigan nearly starved.

Another thing that would impress you would be the sight of the farmers coming to town, most of them mule back. Some, however, are driving mule wagons, the seats of which are a board located over the back axle where they are handy to brake. I failed to see any hitching posts and the mules are hitched to trees all over town wherever it is convenient.

These are some of the peculiar customs. The language you get accustomed to, never forgetting to use the word "done" everywhere. It seems to belong in every sentence, and by close watching I failed to find what word it took the place of, or why it was used. The voice is a soft drawl, and is very pleasing. The people are celebrated as the most hospitable people on earth, who will give up their bed to a stranger and sleep on a pallet of straw. They make moonshine whiskey because they believe it is right for them to use their corn as they see fit, and at the same time the nation has no more loyal citizens. At any time when the United States wanted men she has not called upon eastern Tennessee in vain.

Such are the people, loyal, full of hospitality, a kindly people but deliver me from their eating.

All over Tennessee and the entire south the hog is the gentleman in the small cities and towns. He is the city scavenger and no place is too sacred for him to enter. You see him in the best yards, he runs all over the streets and in the railroad yards, and you even see him cowering the front doors. In life he has the best of everything and in death he forms the principal bill of fare in the state.

My chief remembrance of Tennessee is that it is the hawk, who is before them at all times from birth until death, both on the outside and inside of the inhabitants of that state.

George and John Parsons shipped their radish seed to Detroit last week. The seed being frozen were condemned—too bad.

Gertie Visser went to Grand Rapids to visit friends and relatives last week. She expects to be absent three or four weeks.

Last week Henry Vannues sold his farm to Mr. Henry Heeres, consideration $1,300. This farm is more commonly known as the Henry Bilo place.

Plenny Gennett expects to start his sawmill soon if the weather will permit. Those having fogs better hustle them in, as this is the last year for sawmill here.

We almost apurn the man who argues for the reinstatement of the saloon. You can't point to any degree, of ever seeing or hearing one single good trait that ever came from the open saloon.

We overheard a lady on the train make this remark (Atwood lady too) that she would be glad to see the date February 29, 1912. As the old adage has it, better stop and think sometimes.

The beautiful tubers are in great demand. Eighty-five cents per bushel delivered at Ellsworth, Michigan, our Michigan, raised this year 35,000,000 bushels as near as can be estimated.

During all of these severe storms what was more convenient than a phone. It's worth the $12.00 just to say hello! To the neighbors, say nothing about saving other expenses, time and etc.

Charlevoix has about 100,000 summer resorters and yet the Central Lake Torch claims that the electric railroad won't be built to the beautiful city, but will surely hit Central Lake, then strike off toward Lake Huron, 200 miles or more over sand plains. Never, it will come to Eastport as stated, then via Atwood, Norwood, Charlevoix and Petoskey. Remember the survey was taken several years ago also the right-of-way.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should be a Warning to Every Man and Woman

The newspapers and medical journals recently had much to say relative to a famous millionaire's offer of a million dollars for a new stomach.

This great multi-millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed his dyspepsia to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable.

His misfortune serves as a warning to others.

Everyone who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will give everything he owns for a new stomach.

Dyspepsia is commonly caused by an abnormal state of the gastric juices, or by lack of tone in the walls of the stomach. The result is that the stomach loses its power to digest food.

We are now able to supply certain missing elements—to help to restore to the gastric juices their digestive power, and to aid in making the stomach strong and well.

We know that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are a most dependable remedy for disordered stomach, indigestion, and dyspepsia.

We want you to try them and will return your money if you are not more than satisfied with the result.

Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. McCall, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

School Reports

C. H. S. NOTES.

Mr. Carpenter, in physiology class: "What do we usually put into the water when we wash ourselves?"

Brilliant student: "Our hands." Lola Sherman entertained her cousin, Miss Bailey, from Bay Shore last week.

Student, observing the weather map: "This cold wave seems to have come from Canada."

Mr. Carpenter: "Yes, that is the only thing we get from Canada free of duty."

At a meeting of the parents' association, Wednesday evening, January 17, the needs of the high school were discussed. One of its immediate needs is a gymnasium. We are looking forward to its use.

Was Paradise lost, or snowed in? Mabel Duntop has at last plowed her way through the snow drifts back to school.

He sure to bring all your knowledge to school next week.

Did Clarence Hunshe get the ice-cream soda that Carpenter promised him? Stick around, geography students.

The class in chemistry took samples of air from different rooms in the building and tested for carbon dioxide. The air from the Normal room was found to contain the least CO₂. This is due to the fact that Miss Himes, who is grain enemy of the poison, keeps close watch of the thermometer.

According to the sounds we hear from the music room during the hour in which the seventh and eighth grades are there, it is probable that we may look forward to a concert in the near future.

Will Poole has gone for a trip with the city basket ball team in Cheboygan and a number of other cities in the north.

Don't look for any school notes next week. We are bidding farewell to the world until after the exams.

NORTH BAY

Mr. Herman Batlike is at lockwood hospital taking treatment again.

Owing to bad roads there was no meeting of Horton Bay grange last Friday night.

Several from North Bay attended the Farmers' Institute at Bay Shore Friday and report a fine time.

George North, who for some time has been taking treatment at Petoskey hospital, is now so far improved that he has been able to return to his home. Dr. George Reyecraft has done wonders for him and George is very enthusiastic in his praise of both the doctor and the hospital.

NORWOOD

Harry and Charles Pearl of Chicago are visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity.

On account of asthma, John Hugbee has rented his farm for three years to Harry Wedderburn. Mr. Hugbee will move to Charlevoix in the spring.

Considering the very poor roads the Farmers' Institute was well attended. Those present from out of town were E. O. Ladd, Elmer Ingalls, Nat Burns, William Withers, William Mears, John A. Newville, E. S. Stacks, Fred and Anthony Clark.

Foley's Honey and Far Compound "Cures in Every Case."

Mr. James McCaffery, Mgr. of the Schiltz Hotel, Omaha, Neb., recommends Foley's Honey and Tar Compound because it cures in every case. "I have used it myself and I have recommended it in many others who have since told me of its great curative power in diseases of the throat and lungs." Far all coughs and colds it is speedily effective. Sold by Frank N. McCall.

LEGAL NOTICES

Order for Publication

State of Michigan, The Probate Court for said county of Charlevoix, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said order, held at the Probate Office in the City of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 22nd day of January, A. D. 1912, be published in the following manner: That the 23rd day of February, A. D. 1912, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said Probate Office, be and is hereby appointed for examining and allowing said account.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, in three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

A true copy. John S. Harris, Judge of Probate.

Ordinance No. 107.

An Ordinance to regulate the Milk supply and its sources for the City of Charlevoix, Michigan.

The City of Charlevoix Ordains: That no person, partnership or corporation shall engage in the sale, delivery or distribution of milk in the City of Charlevoix, nor shall any person bring or send into the City of Charlevoix, milk for such sale, delivery or distribution, without having first received a license to do so from the Mayor of the City of Charlevoix.

Application for said license shall be made in writing upon a printed form prescribed and furnished by the Board of Health and shall be filed with the Mayor of the City of Charlevoix. Health upon receipt of said application in the form, to make or cause to be made, an examination of the premises which it is intended to use in the maintenance of said dairy or dairy farm, also of the methods of keeping, storing, handling and distribution of the milk so distributed, delivered or sold, and also of the milk cows belonging to said dairy or dairy farm.

Provided, that no applicant for said permit shall be restrained from conducting business until said application has been acted upon, and, further provided, that the license so granted may be suspended or revoked at any time upon hearing, after notice, by the Mayor, whenever any of the provisions of this ordinance or any amendments thereto shall have been violated, or where over in the opinion of the Mayor, after due investigation by the Board of Health of the City of Charlevoix, the milk would, delivered or distributed, be of such quality as to render its distribution dangerous to the public health.

That it shall be the duty of every person, partnership or corporation engaged in the sale of milk in said city to notify, in writing, said Board of Health immediately upon changing the source of supply of said milk of such change, and such notice shall also state the name or names of persons supplying said milk and the location from which the same is procured.

That no person, partnership or corporation shall sell or deliver or have in his or their possession for sale in the City of Charlevoix any milk which has been watered or adulterated, or which contains any preservative or unhealthy ingredient, constituent or substance, which has been transported or stored in an unclean manner, in which has been kept at a temperature above 45 degrees Fahrenheit, or which is produced from cows which are kept or stabled under unsanitary conditions, or which may be diseased, nor shall any milk be sold or delivered in said city, which is produced from any farm or dairy where any contagious or infectious, or communicable disease may exist.

Common Council

Council Chamber, Jan. 23, 1912.
 The Common Council for the City of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Hampton presiding.
 Aldermen present: Swinton, Glassford, Rachow and Geiken.
 Absent, Nordrini and Webster.
 Minutes of the last meeting read and approved.
 Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the clerk be authorized to subscribe for the American City Magazine. Motion carried.
 Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the recommendation of the chairman of the Finance Committee relative to the employment of the Michigan

DON'T EXPERIMENT

You Will Make No Mistake if You Follow This Citizen's Advice.

Never neglect your kidneys. If you have pain in the back, urinary disorders, dizziness and nervousness, it's time to act and not time to experiment. These are common symptoms of kidney trouble, and you should seek a remedy which is recommended for the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use. No need to experiment. It has cured many stubborn cases in Charlevoix. Follow the advice of a Charlevoix citizen.

Mrs. W. V. Inel, 305 May St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I was troubled for a long time by a sharp backache and pains in my back which kept me in misery. I became tired very easily and had no strength. I hurt me to stoop or lift and I did not rest well. I obtained Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they have toned up my system wonderfully. I am now free from backache and pains, and have more strength and ambition. Other members of my family have used Doan's Kidney Pills for lame and aching back with good results."

For sale by all dealers. Price 20 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.
 Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Trust Company to audit the city books be adopted, and that chairman of the Finance Committee be authorized to secure the services of the above company at $10.00 per day and expenses. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the resolution adopted at a regular meeting of the council on October 17, 1911, and appearing on page 481 of the records of the council proceedings and reading as follows:

Moved by Ald. Webster and seconded by Ald. Rachow that the mayor and clerk be and are hereby instructed to execute a deed to Henry Leary for lot on Belvedere avenue and receive a deed to lot on Bridge street in exchange for same."

be and the same is hereby rescinded.
 Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.
 Ayes, Swinton, Glassford, Rachow and Geiken.
 Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Glassford and seconded by Ald. Rachow that the time for enrollment at the Primary Enrollment on January 25, 1912 be extended to 7:30 p. m. (standard time). Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Glassford and seconded by Ald. Geiken that committee of three consisting of Ald. Geiken, Webster and Swinton be appointed to investigate the matter of ownership and the transfer of certain property which was deeded some years ago by the city to the Board of Commerce for right of way purposes and to report at the next regular meeting. Motion carried.

There being no further business the Council adjourned.

E. J. HILLER,
 City Clerk.

THE HORSEMAN.

In order to have a horse stand while you are getting into the wagon never touch him with the whip until you are ready to go.

Wheat bran and oats are what make the bones strong in a colt. Hay should never be combed from the horses' backs with a currycomb. It makes them nervous.

Colts and mares which have been on pasture all summer should be fed a little grala daily for two or three weeks before they are changed to dry feed for the winter.

If possible every horse stall should be six feet wide and nine feet long, for then the animal can turn around and lie down comfortably. The door, too, should be nearly level.

Never try to get a horse to eat more salt by mixing it with his grala. Put it before him clear and nature will tell him how much to eat.

Miss Mae Phillips was the guest of Mrs. Thomas Harrison Saturday. Alba and Lydia Nowland visited Emma and Agnes Cellner Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Cole spent Sunday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gregory.

The many friends of Miss Bessie Straw are pleased to hear that she is improving in health.

Mrs. M. A. Phillips will spend the remainder of the winter with W. Earl Dodd and family.

Lee Pierce returned home last Saturday, after being in Western Canada and Detroit for several months.

The friends and neighbors of Itham Brock and wife gave them a surprise and reception Thursday evening.

Mrs. Henry Black and little son, visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Will Eastcott at Ellsworth a few days last week.

The Black school is closed for two weeks, the teacher, Miss Scroggie, being called home by her mother's illness.

Charlevoix County Farmers' Institute was held at Marion Center, Grange Hall Tuesday. A fine program was rendered.

Charles Durham, Lovington, Ill., has succeeded in finding a positive cure for bed wetting. "My little boy wet the bed every night clear through the floor. I tried several kinds of kidney medicine and I was in the drug store looking for something different to help him when I heard of Foley's Kidney Pills. After he had taken them two days we could see a change and when he had taken two-thirds of a bottle he was cured. That is about six weeks ago and he has not wet in bed since." Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

BAY SHORE.

Miss Josie Stolt will leave this week for Grand Rapids.

Mrs. Wm. Drum visited at Mrs. Wm. Bruchsen's Thursday. Sunday school was held Sunday after being closed two Sundays because of the bad weather.

Mrs. Kate Fowler of Nashville, is visiting at the home of her brother, J. Kähler and wife and expects to remain with them several weeks.

Misses Georgia, Mayne and Gertrude Scroggie, Mrs. Masters of Walloon, Mrs. Cora Jager of Detroit and Tom Scroggie are all at home to see with their mother, who is critically ill.

The Charlevoix County Farmers' Institute held at Bay Shore, Friday, was very successful and the attendance good. The forenoon was taken up by music and introductory remarks by President Means of Boyne Falls. A dinner was served at the hall at noon which was enjoyed by a large number of people. In the afternoon E. O. Ladd gave a talk on "Growing and Handling the Corn Crop," also "The Orchard and Dairy." "Poultry on the Farm" by O. C. Atwood. The evening program consisted of music, and E. O. Ladd talked on "Good Citizenship."

NO CAUSE TO DOUBT

Statement of Facts Backed by a Strong Guarantee.

We guarantee immediate and positive relief to all sufferers from constipation. In every case where our remedy fails to do this we will return the money paid us for it. That's a frank statement of facts, and we want you to substantiate them at our risk.

Rekall Orderlies are taken just like candy, are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night, do not cause diarrhoea, nausea, griping, excessive looseness, or other undesirable effects. They have a very mild but positive action upon the organs with which they come in contact, apparently acting as a regulative tonic upon the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel, thus overcoming weakness, and aiding to restore the bowels to more vigorous and healthy activity.

Rekall Orderlies are unsurpassable and ideal for the use of children, old folks and delicate persons. We cannot too highly recommend them to all sufferers from any form of constipation and its attendant evils. That's why we back our faith in them with our promise of money back if they do not give entire satisfaction. Three sizes: 12 tablets 10 cents; 24 tablets 25 cents; and 50 tablets 50 cents. Remember, you can obtain Rekall Orderlies in Charlevoix only at our store. The Rekall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

HUMUS IN THE SOIL.

Called Most Stable Form of Organic Matter Known.
Regarding the value of humus as such Professor Milton Whitney, chief of the United States bureau of soils makes the following statements in United States farmers' bulletin 257: "We have studied the office of humus in the growth of plants. We have found that humus extracted from our cultivated soils is innocuous to the plant. It is apparently neither beneficial nor deleterious. Humus is a very stable form of organic matter. It remains in the soil for years. It may be exposed to extremes of heat and cold, but still the black color of a black soil will persist. It is much more stable than wood. It is into humus that wood or wood fiber is converted if it is incorporated in a finely divided condition in the soil and goes into its most stable form. I really believe that humus, next to coal, is the most stable form of organic matter that we know of, and if you think this over you will agree with me that when organic matter is converted into humus it is as thoroughly preserved as any organic matter we have in nature." Of course, says Practised Farmer, this refers to the value of humus as a source of plant food and not to its physical value. By excessive tillage and the use of caustic lime the further decay of this old humus can be effected or hastened, and thus some plant food can be secured from true humus; but, as a rule, the use of farm manure or legume crops as green manure will be more profitable, especially in systems of permanent soil improvement.

Engine Refuses to Work and Boat Goes on Rocks--Total Loss.

The following clipping handed us gives in detail the loss of the gasoline fishboat Weazel at Gloucester, Mass., last week. The Weazel was one of the five gasoline boats that left Charlevoix two years ago last fall, and this is the second disastrous accident that has occurred among them since leaving here.

"The little gasoline boat Weazel, one of the fleet of gill oysters, came to grief on 'Dog Bar Breakwater' yesterday afternoon as the craft was returning from a day's fishing outside of Tincher's and is a total loss. Capt. William Harting and his three men escaped by jumping on the icy end of the breakwater and were brought in here by the steamer Enterprise.

"Captain Harting had arrived inside of the breakwater, when the engine suddenly stopped and refused to move. The craft drifted rapidly towards the breakwater, and her anchor was put out, but in spite of everything that the crew could do, the craft swung around and struck the jagged rocks on the breakwater, where she pounded and soon filled with water.

"It was low tide at the time, and Capt. William Harting, his two sons and Valdis Davis, the crew, climbed ashore on the icy rocks of the breakwater. Just about that time, the steamer Enterprise, another one of the fleet, was coming in, and a boat was put out to the rescue of Capt. Harting and his men. They were taken off the breakwater and an attempt made to pull the stranded steamer off, but without avail. With the rising tide the craft was submerged from view, and during the brisk breeze that started up and continued during the evening pounded badly and will be a total loss.

"The boat was minuscule. She carried four boxes of nets and had about 4,000 pounds of fish on board from the days fishing.

"Capt. Harting had been experiencing difficulty with the springs of the valves of the engine, and had sent away for new parts which were due last evening. While the craft is a total loss, it is thought that the engine may be saved."

ONE MILLION DOLLARS THROWN AWAY.

We hear much congressional conversation concerning conservation, but that magic word doesn't just apply to forests, coal and water power.

So many Americans continually sit at the spigot to save for that rainy day, while in small things all the profit pops out the bung hole. That photograph shows the point.

"Goodness gracious," cries a careful housewife, "what a lot of beautiful white feathers wasted!" Yes, dear lady, all are not so careful as you.

Every year Americans throw 1,000,000 worth of feathers on the dump and every year buy 10,000,000 pounds from foreign feather firms where people are so careful of their resources, great and small, that they have a surplus to sell to us spendthrifts.

Yankees ship on 13,000,000 tons of feathers, and these must be renewed every twenty years.

This doesn't include downy boll protectors, feather bed lighting life preservers, nor rooster tail tickles on hats that help mildly to cut a swell in the fashionable world.

White and black rooster hackle and saddle feathers become snowy dove wings and ostrich quivers soft. Birdy body feathers are made into pens and fancy feather trimming; quantities of hackle and saddle feathers from games, Brown Taghorns and Larridge Cochins are made into flies to catch the speckled trout and military miscellany to ensure fair females. Dust brushes from goose and turkey tails, toothpicks from gander quills—yes, great is the demand for feathers of all kinds and colors, and how foolish, then, to throw them away! A neighbor got $1.50 worth of feathers from each Emden goose last

PRIMARY ENROLLMENT.

Notice is hereby given that in accordance with Act No. 24, Pub. Acts of 1901, as amended by Act 25, Pub. Acts of 1901, the Board of Enrollment of the City of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, will be in session Saturday, January 27, A. D. 1912, in the several wards of said city, at the places designated below, viz.:

First Ward—Hose House, Michigan Avenue.

Second Ward—Council Chamber, Carnegie Library.

Third Ward—Kilston Hotel Office.

For the purpose of enrolling the names of all persons, members of whatever political party, who make personal application for such enrollment.

How Electors Can Secure Enrollment.

Following is a brief statement of the different ways in which enrollment can be secured:

1. By personal application on enrollment day.

2. By a written request accompanied by affidavit, an elector can enroll any day, but cannot vote at any primary held within two months. This affidavit and application must be delivered in the city clerk or other officer in charge of the enrollment book.

3. An elector who was sick or unavoidably absent on enrollment day or who became 21 years of age or an elector after enrollment day can have his name enrolled on primary election day and vote at that election by taking the necessary oath.

4. If an elector who has been duly enrolled as above changes his residence from one precinct in the state to another he can be enrolled in the new precinct by obtaining a proper certificate from a member of the Enrollment Board of the precinct wherein he formerly resided stating that he is duly enrolled in the precinct from which he has moved and is entitled to enrollment in the new precinct, or by taking oath.

No person can vote at any primary in Michigan unless his name has been enrolled under Act 25. All enrollment prior to August 2, 1911, is valid. An entirely new enrollment is required. An elector who neglects or refuses to give the name of his political party cannot have his name enrolled. Said Boards of Enrollment will be in session in each of said wards from 7 o'clock a. m. until 7:30 o'clock p. m. of said day of enrollment.

Dated this 24th day of January A. D. 1912. E. J. HILLER, Clerk of said City.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR CHILDREN

Topic of Paper Read by Mrs. M. J. Parmelee Before W. C. T. U.

MAKE THE HOME A TRUE SHELTER

From Storm Where Only Good Angels Guard the Portals

The Different Kinds of Amusements That Allure and Attract Our Young People Should be Censured.

The old adage "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is no truer than that all play and no work makes Jack a shiftless man. Of all the questions that come up for us mothers, fathers and friends, to consider, in these days of advanced ideas, customs and opportunities, this is one of the most important and perplexing—"What shall we do with our children?"

While half a century ago it seemed plain and easy enough to bring up our children in the way they should go, the circumstances and environments of today make the question a very difficult one to settle.

Our children are often way ahead of us in their ideas and opinions long before they are out of the high school, and the manners and customs of many nations are a mesh that entangle the feet, confuse the brain and unsettle the consciences of our young people. The question seems to be not how can we train, provide for, and make ideal men and women of our children, but how can we entertain, interest and amuse them, so that their homes shall be the places loved best and sought first in spite of the many attractions outside; a place that is truly a shelter from the storm, where only good angels guard the portals.

We can never get beyond the teachings and principles of our christian religion, as laid down in our "Holy Chart." But as that chart was given for all people in all the ages, the great question is how shall we interpret and adapt these priceless and inflexible rules for our use in our circumstances. The underlying principles and truths of the bible, if we understand them, make all questions regarding the highest welfare of mankind plain and imperative.

No doubt how to make our young people love their homes and keep them within its influence, must be made a subject of means to an end, often a matter of real personal sacrifice on the part of the mothers and sometimes of the fathers.

As to the different kinds of amusements that allure and attract our young people, let us consider some of them. While our gospel teaches and our observation proves that often the real sin and danger of an act is not in the act itself, but in the result—the consequences—the effect upon the one who acts and the influences upon others—we can see that many things harmless in themselves and sometimes useful and helpful can become not only harmful but destructive if carried too far or practiced under certain circumstances and environments. The stage for instance, was at first a religious institution and only after ages of decadence and pollution has it lost its great power for good and become a snare, an influence for evil upon the world; for seeing and hearing things, elevating or degrading, is a power over mankind that is too great to be estimated.

Why should this powerful agent for good—for the play of Oberammergau—is a world-wide proof of this truth—be lost to humanity? How can it be made clean and elevating for the happiness and education of our children and the comfort of the older ones? No doubt many of the plays, especially those of our standard authors, are elevating and highly instructive, and many of the artists who perform them are the best of men and women, but they are not the plays that reach and attract the masses, always seeking something new to amuse.

When we think of the myriads of low-down theaters and places of amusements in every city, town and village, whose only aim is to get money, regardless of right or wrong—places that attract our children constantly, and not only unfit them for the love of higher pleasures, but fill their minds with things most opposed to the making of ideal men and women—do we realize how the danger from this source threatens our homes, our children, and then through them our nation. We do not include all cheap shows in this catalogue. The moving picture craze has become a powerful influence for good or evil. If used right, for young and old. For by this means thousands are brought into contact with people, events and scenery that are often more effective and lasting than the reality would be. The moving picture show could and should be reclaimed and reformed so as to be not only a pure and effective amusement, but an educator and inspirator and a means of great good to the people.

In some places it has been included in the educational plan of the schools, and why not. We need all the wise and powerful ways and means to elevate our children, not to deprive them, and if the moving picture idea were supervised and made clean and useful, it would be a long step in the right direction.

SATURDAY'S ENROLLMENT

All Political Parties Will Appear on Primary Ballot

Democrats are Few But Socialists Turn Out and Make a Good Showing.

There was a fairly heavy enrollment Saturday, all members of the various parties turning out better than expected to have their names enrolled for the coming primaries. One striking feature of the enrollment was the manner in which the minority parties turned out to the polls, thereby showing that they are ready to offer organized opposition to the republican party, which is overwhelmingly in the majority according to returns.

The total enrollment on Saturday in the three wards of the city was 365, divided as follows:

	Rep.	Dem.	S. P.
First Ward.....	72	7	5
Second Ward....	134	6	25
Third Ward.....	78	14	21

These figures while not official are close enough to be relied upon in figuring out the strength of the parties as they enrolled.

WON SECOND PLACE

John C. Wright's Article on "Remain in Michigan" a Good One.

John C. Wright's article on "Remain in Michigan," won the prize of $50.00 in the Detroit Times editorial competition, decided in Detroit at the roundup meeting of the state editors last week. Over three score of leading editors and contributors took part and a splendid volume of copy poured in upon the three judges—Gov. Osborn, Milton A. McRae and W. P. Nisbett—but the sensation of the whole affair was the contribution by Mr. Wright. It came as a pleasant surprise, taking the meeting by storm and winning the admiration of all. Mr. Wright is a resident of Harbor Springs and formerly edited the Lyre, a comic magazine published at Petoskey.

The development bureau of the state will distribute thousands of folders containing this editorial.

THEY LAID FOR HIM

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson's Home Taken by Storm by Class Friends

Presented With Fine Gold Seal Ring an Appreciation for Work He Has Done.

We have several times made mention in the columns of the Courier of the Men's Bible Class which meets every Sunday at 12:00 m. in the Carnegie library building. It has flourished from its beginning and now has passed the one hundredth mark in its membership. Its success has been due very largely to the untiring and well directed efforts of the leader, Dr. Wilkinson. The class appreciated this fact and in order to attest their appreciation they decided to give the doctor a visible token thereof.

Accordingly, arrangements were made for a surprise on him and last Thursday evening something over thirty or more of the class proceeded to the doctor's house and were there to welcome him on his return from Central Lake on the evening train. To say that he was surprised when he opened the door and found the house filled with good lusty men, hardly embraces the situation. However, with his unusual recuperative powers, he quickly recovered from the shock and entered into the spirit of the occasion with zest.

The evening passed very pleasantly with songs and entertainment of various kinds, including a Scotch song with a Dutch encore by Andy Ross.

Mrs. Wilkinson, who had been let into the secret, had supplied abundant and choice refreshments and after these had been partaken of and played their part in the success of the evening, the president of the class, F. J. Meach, called on several of the members to tell what they had to say with reference to the class and Dr. Wilkinson's leadership. They all responded cheerfully and heartily and for a man of Dr. Wilkinson's modesty to be obliged to sit and helplessly listen to the words of commendation that were given, was surely a punishment which approaches cruelty to animals. The last one, the president called upon was A. L. Coulter, who, after a very solemn introduction and other words in commendation of the work the doctor had done for the class, presented him with a handsome, solid gold seal ring on the behalf of the class.

This was the finishing touch and while the doctor tried to respond, it required a good deal of tonic and bracers of various kinds to enable him to make a few faltering remarks in reply. The best of feeling prevailed throughout the evening and those who had come, went away with a deeper appreciation of the meaning of the class and the opportunities for work that are before it, and we shall confidently expect to see results proportionate to the inspiration that the occasion furnished.

WILL BE A NUMMER

Charlevoix Poultry Exhibition to be the Best Ever Held.

Every effort possible to make the coming exhibition of the Charlevoix Poultry Association a success is being done by its officers. Premium lists have been sent to all poultry fanciers in the surrounding territory, with the results that from letters received, the entries in the coming show will far exceed those of last year.

The association has just completed the making of thirty new exhibition coops, and all other work is well in hand.

Don't forget the dates, February 7, 8 and 9.

NEW STORY THIS WEEK

"Freckles," One of the Best Stories on the Market.

In this issue of the Courier appears the opening chapters of "Freckles," by Gene Stratton-Potter, author of the "The Song of the Cardinal," and other popular stories.

It has always been the aim of the Courier to give its readers the very best of aerial stories, and "Freckles" will be the best we have ever had. Don't miss the opening chapters.

AT CHATTANOOGA

How They Celebrate Christmas in the South

Interesting Letter from Glenn M. DuBois on Southern Hospitality.

It was my good fortune to spend the holidays in the southern city of Chattanooga and I never before saw a whole city so filled with the holiday spirit—making everybody happy. For weeks before Christmas the streets were lined with vendors of holly, mistletoe and mammoth hornet nests which they brought down from the mountains, and humble indeed was the home in that city which was not decorated with Christmas green in honor of the day.

In the midst of the holiday festivities, Chattanooga did not forget that her state had suffering ones in its midst—the Briceville mine disaster occurring during the holiday season, and liberal indeed were the contributions to the relief fund. One day the moving picture shows of the city gave over their receipts to the fund and everybody who was able to secure entrance attended to help avert the fund.

The day and night before was celebrated, as we do, with displays of fireworks and the booming of firecrackers. Our colored brethren did not fail to take advantage of the day, and all who had been of any service knocked on your door early in the morning with "Merry Christmas, Massa," followed with what was far more important, "Christmas Gift."

The stranger in the city was not forgotten, and as you came into the office of your hotel a large punch bowl of eggnog occupied the place of honor and you were asked to drink a glass of "Christmas Cheer" with your host, and it was mighty good and brewed by a master hand. When the mail was distributed each stranger in the land found they were remembered and each received a Christmas token.

Such was my Christmas spent among the best hearted, most kindly people on earth—the people of the South.

RECEPTION AT CHURCH

Given for the New Baptist Pastor Last Wednesday Evening.

The Baptist church gave a reception to their new pastor and family, Rev. B. Atchison, last Wednesday evening at the church parlors, and about 100 members and friends were present to enjoy the program and social time.

Rev. Putnam, pastor of the Congregational church, and Rev. Taylor, pastor of the M. E. church, brought words of greeting and welcome from their respective churches.

Rev. B. Atchison responded with a few words of appreciation of the Christian love and fellowship manifested by all during the evening.

Special music was furnished by Glen Kirby and Charles Hamilton, accompanied by Miss Vina Poole, also by Mrs. Burdick, after which refreshments were served.

ANOTHER BOOTLEGGER

Antoine Ance Picked in Jail for Illicit Sale of Liquor.

Antoine Ance was arrested in Boyne City last Friday for bootlegging, and was brought over Saturday by Sheriff Robins and placed in the county jail, where he will remain until his case is heard during the coming term of court.

On Monday he also brought down Charles Gardner, arrested at Boyne Falls on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. Gardner will have 60 days in the county jail to sober up.

Under Sheriff Steffen of East Jordan also gathered in George West who jumped his bond bill, and Friday placed him in the county bastille to serve a 30 days sentence.

PLEASANTLY SURPRISED

Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Chapel Given Hearty Farewell by Friends.

Eighty-five of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Chapel surprised them last Wednesday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Bartlett on Park avenue. A programme had been arranged for, which was most pleasing to all. Mrs. H. P. Parmelee gave a interesting reading entitled, "The Good Old Days," and it was especially good, taking all back to their earlier days in life.

Rev. Putnam gave a reading, Mrs. A. L. Coulter sang a solo, as did also Dr. F. H. Wilkinson. Very dainty refreshments were served after which as a token for their deep friendship and sincere wishes for success in their new western home, Mayor Hampton presented Mr. and Mrs. Chapel with a very handsome sterling silver set of salad forks.

Before saying good-night everybody joined in singing "And Lang Syne."

LINCOLN BANQUET

To be Held by Ladies of the W. R. C. February 8

Fine Supper to be Served and Many Good Numbers on the Program.

The ladies of the W. R. C. will give a Lincoln banquet and supper on Thursday evening, February 8. The festivities of the evening will begin with a beef steak supper, which will consist of the following: Beef steak, mashed potatoes, salads, pickles, brown and white bread, tea and coffee.

After the supper the following program will be rendered:

Song, "America."
Prayer, Rev. H. A. Putnam.
Remarks, R. W. Kane.
Chorus, "Tenting Tonight."
Duet, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Dutton.
Remarks on Life of Lincoln, W. A. Smith.

Prison song, by all.
Quartette, Normal class.
Recitation, Mrs. Porter.

Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln will be at the banquet, dressed in the garb of their day.

After the program the ladies will hold an auction sale and dispose of some pretty and useful articles which they have been making during the winter months.

The members of this order are fewer each year, and every one should do their part to make this banquet a success.

ROUND UP INSTITUTE

To be Held at East Jordan Thursday and Friday, February 1 and 2.

The Round-up State Farmers' Institute for Charlevoix county will be held in the K. P. hall East Jordan, on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Hon. William Mears, president of the society of this county, with John A. Newville, will have charge of the meeting. The one-day meetings held throughout the county were a success, and a great effort is being made to make the round-up one of the best ever held in the county.

Hon. Charles E. Bassett of Fenwick is the conductor of the institute and H. L. Olney will act as local manager. A line program has been arranged.

CHARLEVOIX HISTORICAL SOCIETY

PAY TAXES ON LAND CONTRACTS

Holders Must Do So Under New Ruling of Attorney General

TREATED THE SAME AS MORTGAGES

April 1, 1912 the Last Day Taxes Can be Paid

County Treasurer Lewis Making an Effort to Notify All—Has Refused to Collect.

People holding land contracts will be interested in the following communication received last week by County Treasurer Lewis, regarding the new mortgage tax law: "On or about December 13th we advised you as to the ruling of the attorney general in reference to Section 10, Act 91, Public Acts of 1911, to the effect that land contracts recorded prior to January 1, 1912, were not subject to the provisions of the new mortgage tax law, and that no taxes should be collected upon such instruments, and also that such land contracts were not subject to assessment under the provisions of the general tax law. "Since that time the attorney general has given this section further consideration, and he now holds that land contracts recorded prior to January 1, 1912, are subject to the provisions of the new mortgage tax law, and that taxes upon such instruments can be paid to the county treasurer in the same manner as taxes upon mortgages. If such taxes are not paid under the provisions of the new mortgage tax law, then the same are to be assessed under the provisions of the general tax law.

"We suggest that if you recall any instruments upon which you have refused to accept taxes because of our letter to you, that you will advise the holders of such land contracts that such taxes can be paid.

"Under this ruling of the Attorney General, land contracts are to be treated the same as mortgages, and in case where a land contract or mortgage was recorded previous to January 1, 1912, it the owner desires to pay the taxes, then he must exhibit to the county treasurer the affidavit required by Section.

"On contracts or mortgages recorded on or after January 1, no affidavit is necessary, but the owner must first pay the taxes to the county treasurer on the face value of such instruments and the county treasurer then certifies as to the payment of the taxes on the instrument itself.

"On December 11, County Treasurer Lewis received a letter from the attorney general, stating that land contracts would not come under the provisions of the new mortgage tax law and refused to accept taxes thereon. On three occasions he returned the amount to the parties who paid them. Under this late ruling, all land contracts come under the provision of the act, and people holding such contracts will have until April 1, 1912, to pay the taxes thereon.

ASSUMES CONTROL

C. D. Hammond Buys Entire Interest in Builders' Supply Company.

Last week a deal went through whereby C. D. Hammond bought the interest in the Builders' Supply Co. held by E. B. Ward, and will assume entire control of the business.

The old firm was organized in March, 1909, and since that time have been conducting business under the name of the Builders' Supply Co., Mr. Hammond and Mr. Ward both having equal interests. Mr. Hammond under the terms of the deal has assumed all indebtedness of the company and will also collect all outstanding accounts. We bespeak for him a liberal patronage.

Marriage Licenses.

List of marriage licenses issued for the week ending Jan. 27, 1912: Walter F. Honck, 27, Boyne City; Blanche Carroll, 22, Boyne City; Duffie Harvey, 23, Boyne City; Mildred P. Scott, 18, Boyne City; Dan P. Gallagher, 37, St. James; Christa Smith, 23, St. James.

ASHAMED OF HER FACE

"I was ashamed of my face," writes Miss Pickard of North Carolina. "It was all full of pimples and scars, but after using D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema I can say that now there is no sign of that Eczema and that was three years ago."

This is but one of thousands of cases in which D. D. D. has simply washed away the skin trouble. D. D. D. cleanses the skin of the germs of Eczema, Erysipelas and other serious skin diseases; stops the itch instantly, and when used with D. D. O. soap the cure is permanent. Nothing like D. D. D. for the complexion.

Trial bottle 25 cents, enough to prove the merit of this wonderful remedy.

We can also give you a full size bottle for $1.00 on our absolute guarantee that if this very first bottle fails to give you relief it will cost you nothing.

HILTON SCHOOL.

Because of the cold weather and severe storm our percentage of attendance fell below ninety this month. It is 89.

The little folks made raffia picture frames and the third grade pupils are making raffia baskets.

The seventh and eighth grades are studying "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

After hearing a few complaints on our heating and ventilating system, our director, Ed. Cook, and moderator, N. Wells, visited the school room on one of the coldest days of this month and found the temperature of the room very even. Though the temperature was not quite as high as it should have been, it was such an improvement over the old way of heating that they decided to keep it.

Jack Frost set to work one day and hit the ears and noses of some of our pupils. He thought it best not to slight Miss Zeitler, so he bit the end of her nose too.

Visitors this month were Belle, Bernice and Pearl Wells from Charlevoix, and Mrs. W. Hoyt, Mrs. E. Scott, N. Wells and our treasurer, Ed. Cook.

William Mayne called in one morning before school, but did not stay for school.

Elle Cook was organist this month.

Though the weather was severe and the roads badly drifted, Miss Zeitler succeeded in getting home each Friday night and back each Sunday afternoon of this month.

How to Rip Furs.

There is a knack of ripping up old furs with which all women are not familiar. The belt should be turned wrong side up and the skin slowly and carefully cut with a sharp penknife. The blade penetrating the skin only and not touching the long hairs.

Cutting fur with scissors destroys the beauty of the pelt that might be saved by the penknife process. In sewing the strips together first be sure that the direction of the hairs is the same in both pieces when holding the bits of skin firmly between thumb and forefinger. With the fur side down, the edges together with a rather fine needle and strong, fine thread, sewing near the edge.

How to Wash an Umbrella.

If your umbrella falls into the mud and you cannot brush the dirt off the best way is to wash it with soap lather. First grease the inside wires to prevent them from rusting, then proceed to wash the cover, scrubbing the dirty parts with a soft brush. Next rinse it with cold water inside and out and hang in the sun to dry. The umbrella must be kept open all the time. It will look quite new when done.

HELPFUL HINTS ON HAIR HEALTH

Scalp and Hair Troubles Generally Caused by Carelessness.

Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a microbe which also produces baldness. Never use a comb or brush belonging to some one else. No matter how cleanly the owner may be, these articles may be infected with microbes, which will infect your scalp. It is far easier to catch hair microbes than it is to get rid of them, and a single stroke of an infected comb or brush may well lead to baldness. Never try on anybody else's hat. Many a hat-band is a resting place for microbes.

If you happen to be troubled with dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair or baldness, we have a remedy which we believe will completely relieve these troubles. We are so sure of this that we offer it to you with the understanding that it will cost you nothing for the trial if it does not produce the results we claim. This remedy is called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We honestly believe it to be the most scientific remedy for scalp and hair troubles, and we know of nothing else that equals it for effectiveness, because of the results it has produced in thousands of cases.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is devised to banish dandruff, restore natural color when its loss has been brought about by disease, and make the hair naturally silky, soft and glossy. It does this because it stimulates the hair follicles, destroys the germ matter, and brings about a free, healthy circulation of blood, which nourishes the hair roots, causing them to tighten and grow new hair. We want everybody who has any trouble with hair or scalp to know that we think that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is the best hair tonic and restorative in existence, and no one should scoff at or doubt this statement until they have put our claims to a fair test, with the understanding that they pay us nothing for the remedy if it does not give full and complete satisfaction in every particular. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store - The Reckall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Law Points For Farmers.

In all the states of the Union boys reach legal maturity and responsibility at the age of twenty-one years, and in most of the states, particularly in the middle west, the girls reach legal maturity when they are eighteen years old.

Under the United States patent laws the owner of a patent is entitled to the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the patented articles, and the making of such articles by another person, even though for his own use, constitutes an infringement of the patent.

Judge Lewis of the United States district court at Denver has decided that a defunct insurance company can not legally collect assessments. He holds that an insurance company which comes into Colorado and writes policies without living up to the laws of the state cannot collect in the federal court.

The Missouri court of appeals recently rendered a decision of value to shippers of live stock. W. L. Green shipped a carload of mules from North English, Ia., to Centralia, Mo., and one mule kicked a slot off of the car and badly injured a hind leg. Green brought suit against the Milwaukee and Wabash railroads and the circuit court of Boone county decided that he was entitled to damages. On appeal to the higher court, this judgment was affirmed against both roads, the court holding that as both roads shared in the profits of the shipment they were jointly responsible for any injury sustained.

Good For Cover Crops.

A cover crop is important and should be planted in the orchard. The legumes are preferable if they are adapted to the soil, those of plowing and soil needs. Crimson clover, red clover and vetch may be found adaptable. Wheat, rye, barley and oats can often be sown to good advantage.

And we are going to make every effort to get it. Remember that every dollar spent here means a dollar in return, besides the value of the tickets we give with every cash purchase. It takes only a short time to get enough of these tickets to obtain a nice premium—even as small a sum as $5.00 will get you a nice cup and saucer or rose bowl. Come in and see these premiums, and when you do, you will say "I cannot see how you can afford to give such valuable ones." Just come in anyway and let us talk it over with you.

PROLOGUE.

This romance of Freckles and the Angel of the Limberlost is one of the most novel, entertaining, wholesome and fascinating stories that have come from the pen of an American author in many years. The characters in this sylvan tale are:

Freckles, a plucky waif who guards the Limberlost, timber leases and dreams of angels.

The Swamp Angel, in whom Freckles' sweetest dream materializes.

McLean, a member of a lumber company, who befriends Freckles.

Mrs. Duncan, who gives mother love and a home to Freckles.

Duncan, head teamster of McLean's timber gang.

The Bird Woman, who is collecting camera studies of birds for a book.

Lord and Lady O'More, who came from Ireland in quest of a last relative.

The Man of Affairs, brusque of manner, but big of heart.

Wessner, a timber thief who wants rascality made easy.

Black Jack, a villain to whom thought of repentance comes too late.

CHAPTER I.

THE LIMBERLOST GUARD.

FRECKLES came down the corridor that crosses the lower end of the Limberlost. At a glance he might have been mistaken for a tramp, but he was intensely eager to belong somewhere and to be attached to almost any sort of enterprise that would furnish him food and clothing.

Long before he came in sight of the camp of the Grand Rapids Lumber company he could hear the cheery voices of the men and the whistling of the horses, and could scent the tempting odors of cooking food. A feeling of homeless friendliness swept over him. He turned into the newly made road and followed it to the camp.

The men were jovially calling him and forth as they unharnessed tired horses that fell into attitudes of rest and crunched, in deep content, the gnarled logs of their heavy-laden wagons. Freckles, the hawkeye Scotch head teamster, softly whistled, "Oh, who will be my dearie, Oh!" and a cricket under the leaves at his feet accompanied him. Wrenching tongues of flame wrapped about the black logs, and when the cook lifted the lids gusts of savory odors escaped.

Freckles approached him.

"I want to speak to the boss," he said.

The cook glanced him over and answered carelessly. "He can't see you."

The color flooded Freckles' face, but he said simply, "If you will let me have the goodness to point him out we will give him a chance to do his own talking."

With a shrug of astonishment, the cook led the way to a broad, square shouldered man. "Mr. McLean, here's another man wanting to be taken on the gang, I suppose," he said.

"All right," came the cheery answer. "I never needed a good man, more than I do just now."

"No use of your bothering with this fellow," volunteered the cook. "He has but one hand."

The flush on Freckles' face burned deeper. His lips thinned to a mere line. He lifted his shoulders, took a step forward, and thrust out his right arm, from which the sleeve dangled empty at the wrist.

"That will do, Sears," came the voice of the boss sharply. "I will interview my man when I have finished this report."

Freckles stood one instant as he had braced himself to meet the eyes of the manager, then his arm dropped and a wave of whiteness swept over him. The boss had not even turned his head to see the deformity pointed out to him. He had used the possessive "my man" when he had said "my man" the hunter's heart of Freckles went reaching out after him. The boy drew a quivering breath. Then he whipped off his old hat and beat the dust from it carefully. With his left hand he caught the right sleeve, wiped his sweaty face, and tried to straighten his hair with his fingers. He broke a spray of ironwood beside him and used the purple blossoms to beat the dust from his shoulders and limbs.

McLean was a Scotchman. The men of his camp had never known him to be in a hurry or to lose his temper. Discipline was inflexible, but the boss always was kind. His shared camp life with his gang. The only vestige of his great wealth consisted of a big, shimmering diamond stone of ice and fire that glittered and burned on one of his fingers and the dainty, beautiful, thoroughbred mare he rode.

No man of McLean's gang could honestly say that he had ever been overdriven or underpaid. They all knew that up in the great timber city several millions stood to his credit.

He was the only son of that McLean who had sent out the finest ships ever built in Scotland. That his son should carry on this business after his death had been the father's ambition. He sent the boy through Edinburgh university and Oxford and allowed him several years' travel.

Then he was ordered through southern Canada and Michigan to purchase a consignment of tall, straight timber for masts and down into Indiana for oak beams. The young man entered these mighty forests, parts of which still lay untouched since the dawn of the morning of time. The intense silence, like that of a great empty cathedral, fascinated him. He gradually learned that to the shy wood creatures that darted across his path or peeped inquiringly from leafy nooks and crannies, he was a brother. He found himself approaching, with a feeling of reverence, those majestic trees that had stood through ages of sun, wind and snow. Soon it became a difficult thing to tell them. When he had filled his order and returned home he was amazed to find that in the swamps and forests he had lost his heart, and it was calling, forever calling him.

When he inherited his father's property he promptly disposed of it and with his mother, founded a home in a splendid residence in the outskirts of Grand Rapids. With three partners he organized a lumber company. His work was to purchase, fell and ship the timber to the mills. Marshall managed the milling process and passed the lumber on to the factory. From the lumber Barthol made beautiful and useful furniture, which Uptegrove sent all over the world from a big wholesale house.

McLean faced a young man, still under twenty, tall, spare, heavily framed, thickly freckled and red haired, with a homely Irish face, but in the steady gray eyes, straightly meeting his searching ones of blue, there were an answering candor and a look of longing not to be ignored.

"You are looking for work?" questioned McLean.

"Yes," answered Freckles.

"I am very sorry," said the boss, "but there is only one man I want to present—a good, big fellow with a stout heart and a strong body. I hoped that you would do, but I am afraid you are too young and hardly strong enough."

"And what was it you thought I might be doing?" asked Freckles.

The boss could scarcely repress a start. Somewhere back of accident and poverty had been an ancestor who used cultivated English, even with an accent. The boy spoke in a mellow Irish voice, sweet and pure. It was scarcely definite enough to be called brogue, yet there was a trick in the turning of the sentence, the wrong sound of a letter here and there, that was almost irresistible to McLean.

He was of foreign birth, and, despite years of alienation, in times of strong feeling he fell into inherited sins of accent and construction.

"It's an ill-fated job," answered McLean. "I am the field manager of a lumber company. We have just leased 2,000 acres of the Limberlost. Many of these trees are of great value. We can't leave our camp, six miles south for almost a year yet, so we have blazed a trail and strung barbed wire securely about the extent of this lease. Before we return to our work I must put this Limberlost lease in the hands of a reliable, brave, strong man who will guard it every hour of the day and sleep with one eye open at night. I should require the entire length of the trail to be walked at least twice every day, to make sure that our lines were up and no one had been trespassing."

"But why wouldn't that be the finest job in the world for me?" pleaded Freckles. "I am never sick. I could walk the trail twice, three times every day, and I'd be watching sharp all the while."

"It's because you are little more than a boy, and this will be a trying job for a work hardened man," answered McLean. "You would be afraid of stretching your lines we killed six or seven almost as long as your body and as thick as your arm. You would always be alone, and the Limberlost is alive with sounds and voices. I don't pretend to say what all of them come from, but from a few striking forms I've seen and hair raising yells I've heard I'd rather not confront their owners myself, and I am neither weak nor fearful."

"Worst of all, any man who will enter the swamp to mark and steal timber is a desperate fellow. One of my employees at the south camp, John Carter, compelled me to discharge him for a number of serious reasons. He entered the swamp alone and marked a number of valuable trees that he was endeavoring to sell to our rival company when we secured the lease. He has sworn to have these trees if he has to die or to kill others to get them."

"But if he came to steal trees wouldn't he bring teams and men enough, that all any man could do would be to watch and be after you?" queried the boy.

"Yes," replied McLean.

"Then why wouldn't I be watching just as closely and coming as fast as an older, stronger man?"

"Why, by George, you could!" exclaimed McLean. "I don't know that the size of a man would be half so important as his grit and faithfulness. What is your name?"

"Freckles, sir," he said.

"Good enough for every day," laughed McLean, "but I can scarcely put Freckles on the company's books."

"I haven't any name," replied the boy.

"I don't understand," said McLean.

"I was thinking from the voice and the face of you that you wouldn't," said Freckles slowly.

"Does it seem to you that any one would take a newborn baby and now over it until it was bruised black, cut off its head and leave it out in a bit ter night on the steps of a charity home to the care of strangers? That's what somebody did to me."

"The home people took me in, and I was there the full legal age and several years over. They could always find homes for the rest of the children, but nobody would ever be wanting on my account of me arm."

"Were they kind to you?" asked McLean.

"I don't know," answered Freckles. The reply sounded so hopeless even to his own ears that he hastened to qualify it by adding: "You see, it's like this, sir. Kindnesses that people are paid to lay off in job lots and that belong equally to several hundred others ain't going to be soaking into any one fellow much."

"Go on," said McLean.

"There's nothing worth the taking of your time to tell," replied Freckles. "The home was in Chicago, and I was there all my life up to three months ago. When I was too old for the training they gave to the little children they sent me out to the nearest work school as long as the law would let them, but I was never like any of the other children, and they all knew it. I'd go and come like a prisoner and be working about the home early and late for me board and clothes. I always wanted to learn mighty bad, but I was glad when that was over."

"Then a new superintendent sent me down in the state to a man he said he knew that needed a boy. He wasn't for remembering to tell that man that I was a hand, short, and he knocked me down. Between noon and that evening he and his son, as it my age had me in pretty much the same shape in which I was found in the beginning, so I lay awake that night and ran away. I'd like to have squared me account with that boy before I left, but I didn't dare for fear of waking the old man, and I knew I couldn't handle the two of them, but I'm hoping to meet him alone some day before I die."

McLean liked the boy all the better for this confession.

"I didn't even have to steal clothes to get rid of starting in me home ones," Freckles went on. "For they had already taken all me clean, neat things for the boy and put me into his ragged, and that went almost as sore as the beatings, for where I was we were always kept tidy and sweet smelling anyway. I hustled clear into this state before I learned that man couldn't have kept me if he'd wanted to. I commenced hauling work, but it was with everything else just as it is with you, sir. Big strong, whole men are the only ones for being wanted."

"I have been studying over this matter," answered McLean. "I am not so sure but that a man no older than you and like you in every way could do this work very well if he were not a coward."

"If you will give me a job where I can earn me food, clothes and a place to sleep," said Freckles. "If I can have a boss to work for like other men, and a place I feel I've a right to I will do what you tell me or the trying."

He said so quietly and convincingly that McLean found himself answering: "I will enter you on my payroll. We'll have supper, and then I will provide you with clean clothing, wading boots, wire mending apparatus and a revolver. The first thing in the morning I will take you over the trail myself. All I ask of you is to come to me at once at the south camp and tell me like a man if you find this job too hard for you. It is work that few men would perform faithfully. What name shall I put down?"

"Freckles," eyes never left McLean's face, and the boss saw the swift spasm of pain that swept his lonely, sensitive face.

"I haven't any name," he said simply, "no more than one sometimes clapped on to me when they put me on the home books, with not the thought or care they'd named a house cat. What they called me is no more my name than it is yours. I don't know what mine is, and I never will. But I am going to be your man and

A Wonderful Food Producer.
We wonder many times how much the farmers realize and appreciate the fact that a good cow is the most wonderful producer of food on earth. A Holstein cow at the Agricultural college of Nebraska produced in one year 18,540 pounds of milk, which contained 13 1/2 per cent of solids, or a total of 2,500 pounds of nutriment for the support of life, equal in every way to the finest beef. Think of a steer producing ten times the food equivalent of a first class steer. As the boys say, "What do you think of that?"

The Newsboy

He Received a Training That Enabled Him to Dispense a Fortune.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Neither of my parents showed me any parental affection. On several occasions when I threw my arms around my father's neck he would throw me impatiently and repelled me. My mother was more amenable to my demonstrations, but her treatment of me was very different from that she gave my brother Tom. And I noticed that when there was not enough of anything for both Tom and me, Tom got it.

There were other reasons to cause me to suspect—young as I was—that there was some mystery about my relations with the rest of the family. I overheard on one occasion my father say to my mother: "The boy's nothing more to be got out of him. He'll have to go." Both he and my mother looked at me when he said this in a way which seemed to indicate that he referred to me. While I had had certain things that they had not—much better clothing and sometimes money—after this remark I had far less than they, even being stunted at the table. I noticed, too, that when we were together strangers would look at them and then at me, seeming to notice something peculiar about me. I did not suspect then what I have known since—that while they were unrelieved I gave evidence by my appearance of coming from respectable stock.

Soon after I heard my father say "there's nothing more to be got out of him" he took me to a city—what city I did not know—and, telling me to wait for him before a handsome dwelling, left me. It was in November, and

"HE IS THE IMAGE OF HIS MOTHER." The wind was very chilly. I was poorly clad and shivered with the cold. I stood where I had been left from noon till dark, waiting for his return, but he did not come. Then it occurred to me that I was deserted.

I remembered that before we had set out that morning my mother had put something in my pocket rolled in a bit of paper. I took it out and found a five dollar bill. This confirmed me in the opinion that it had been my father's intention to lose me.

What should I do? I did not know how to make a living, and my $5 would be very soon expended. Notwithstanding that the intention of my parents had been to get rid of me, I still regarded them as my father and mother and determined to use the money to get back to them, for I knew the place in which they lived. Not deeming it necessary to spend any thing for conveyance, I concluded to walk, for I dreaded lest when my capital was expended I should starve. I inquired of a man who passed me if he could tell me the way to the town where I lived, and he said it was altogether too far to go that night. I was too heartbroken to care to eat anything. I only wished to lie down and cry myself to sleep. The yard of the house before which I had been left looked livelier. I opened the gate and went in. Back of the yard was a stable, and, finding a door open, I entered and went up a pair of stairs to a haymow. Throwing myself on the hay, I was soon asleep.

I was awakened in the morning by the sun peeping through a chink in the roof. That bit of sunlight gave me courage. It told me that, having been thrown face to face with the world, I must pluck up spirit and meet it bravely. I would not go back to those who had thrown me out. I arose from my bed and, going to the stable, listened. Not hearing any one moving below, except the horses, I went down and, passing through the yard, regained the street. Stopping at a restaurant on wheels, I bought a cheap breakfast. The proprietor looked surprised when I handed him my five dollar bill and scrutinized it carefully, but he gave me my change, and I went out to find some way of making a living.

Most little boys thrown upon the world to take care of themselves fall into the business of selling papers. Seeing a number of these gamins on the street, I asked one of them the process by which he worked, and he occurred to me to invest my capital in that way. Going to a newspaper office,

I bought papers, sold them and in the evening found myself a little better off pecuniarily than I had been in the morning.

I will not dwell on this period that was far more miserable than my life at home. I spent two years at it without finding myself in the end any better off than when I began. The boys with whom I associated were repellent to me. There was a difference between them and me, if not in education, at least in constitution. Poor children, they were not only forced to live without refinement, but had been born of unrefined parents—I learned afterward that I was made of too flimsy material to thrive in such an atmosphere. I had no heart for either my associates or my work. I had no fixed home. I lacked proper food and clothing. In winter especially I suffered from the cold.

One day while I was selling papers I caught sight of my father passing in a street car. I ran after the car, but had not the strength to catch it. After I had failed I remembered that it would have been no use to catch one who had intentionally deserted me.

Being now fourteen years old, I began to read the papers I sold. I lived in a newsboy's house, and when I went there at night, instead of associating with the other boys, I read. One night what was my astonishment to see my own name in a personal. It had been inserted by my father. If I should see the notice I was to address a certain number at the newspaper office. A faint hope that my father had not intended after all to desert me glided me.

The next morning I went to the office of the paper that had contained the advertisement, and a clerk put my address in the box intended for replies to the advertisement. That evening my father came to see me. He seemed very much pleased at finding me. When I asked him why he had not come back to me after leaving, he made no reply, but bid me to come with him. Calling a carriage, he took me to the residential portion of the city, stopping at a handsome dwelling. It stood in a yard, and through that yard I had gone back to the stable where I had slept the first night after having been deserted. I told my father this, and he replied:

"I left you near this place on purpose."

We went up the steps of the house and my father rang the bell. We were admitted and were ushered into a handsomely furnished room such as I had never seen before. An old gentleman came in and looked inquiringly at my father.

"I have found him," said the latter. The old gentleman looked at me.

"Yes, this is he," said my father. "I can prove his identity." "You need not do that," said the old gentleman. "He is the image of his mother."

As he spoke he took me by the hand and I fancied I detected a tremor in his voice. Then, turning to my father he said: "Leave him here. Come and see me tomorrow." My father turned and without a word to me left us. Then the old gentleman put his arms around me and drew me down beside him on a sofa.

"My boy," he said, "I must tell you the meaning of this. That man is not your father. He was formerly one of my servants. When your real mother married your real father, I was very angry with her and would have nothing to do with her. Your father soon died and your mother was starving. I forced her, as a condition to taking her home, to give up you, her child, and I paid this man and his wife to take you and bring you up as their own. He became over-possive in his demands and I broke with him. He brought you to this house and left you before the door, but said nothing to me or to you as to your being so near your real home. A few months ago I fell ill and believed I was about to die. This made a great change in me. I sent for you, but you were not to be found. I gave your reputed father money with which to prosecute a search for you, and you are returned to me through an advertisement."

He pressed the electric button and a woman came in, to whom he gave instructions to furnish me with a bath and put me to bed. I went with her, upstairs and was put in a beautiful room and through an open door entered a marble bath room. The next morning a man came in with clothing from which I was told to choose that which fitted me. When I was dressed I looked at myself in a mirror and was astonished at the change.

I went downstairs and breakfasted with my grandfather. Later he led me upstairs and into a room where sat a middle-aged lady.

"Mother," he said, "the good God has granted me the boon of returning to you your son."

The lady threw her arms around my neck, but gave way to hysterics so that she was unable to speak. My grandfather watched her till she became quieted, then left us alone to gether.

If asked what was the happiest hour of my life I would say at once the one I first spent with my mother. It was not one hour but many, for during that whole day she would not let me leave her, even for a few minutes. And from that moment a remarkable change came over my life. From a street gamin I became the petted heir to a large fortune. My grandfather seemed to live only to make reparation for his harshness both to my mother and to me. She has just died and I am laying plans to reside each year a number of days from the wretched life to which their circumstances have doomed them.

FURNACE HELPS.

How to Heat Cold Rooms in Wintery Weather.

In these winter days the home with the furnace heat, the hot water radiator or the steam radiator may find the heating apparatus, of whatever kind, balking occasionally and leaving the house cold.

Traditionally every house that is heated by the hot air furnace has "one cold room." This cold room most frequently is that particular upstairs room against which the cold winds are blowing most directly. Likely this room is the northwest room of upstairs, as the northwest wind is the coldest. What should one do to bring up the hot air from the furnace?

The simplest thing is for the furnace attendant to discover the cold pipe leading to the room and cut off for a few minutes the heat to every other pipe leading from the furnace. At once this forces the combined heat from the furnace into the one open delivery pipe whose cutoff remains wide open. This lady of heat forces out the heavy cold air that has been blocking that particular pipe as effectively as if the pipe were full of frozen water. After a few minutes, in which the pipe warms and warms permeates the room, the "cold" room is rendered comfortable thereafter.

Presuming that one has an electric fan, however, the fan is one of the easiest instruments for correcting the stubborn hot air register, the hot water radiator or the steam radiator in the cold room.

To urge the electric fan on the hot air register place the fan with its back close to the register and turn on at full speed. This acts as a suction pump, pulling the cold air from the furnace pipe and drawing the heat into the room.

In the case of a bulky steam radiator especially open a window and turn the fan blast of cold air against the radiator. Whatever slight heat is in the radiator will be contracted by cooling, and the tendency toward a warmer room will be increased. As the steam or water moves up into the radiator the continuation of the cooling and contraction forces the further impetus of the heat until the desired warmth is attained.

One further statement may interest the reader. Hot water and steam heat are the driest of all forms of heat delivered into the modern home. The hot water and hot moist steam in the radiator are sealed there. One can not bring an artificial heat of 70 degrees F. by means of the hot radiator without making the winter atmosphere too dry. Evaporating water on these fixtures alone will make the atmosphere of the house moist enough to be satisfactory to the lungs. And in moistening the atmosphere it becomes a more constant and effective delivery of the heat from fuel. Dry air is the least capable of retaining heat even if the air's dryness otherwise were satisfactory to the lungs and breathing apparatus generally.

How to Treat Burning Feet.

Not a small part of the petty discomforts of life arises from our feet, which, being encased in tight fitting, unventilated boots or shoes, respond with painful growths and chilblains or, it may be, by a disagreeably hot or cold condition.

Hot, burning feet may be relieved by putting on at bedtime a pair of white cotton socks the soles of which have been wetted with cold water and over which are drawn dry worsted ones. If the burning continues wet the under socks again. Repeat this process every night, and in a short time a great improvement will be experienced.

Cold feet are a trouble to many at all seasons of the year and are usually caused by a defective or restricted circulation. Loose shoes and exercise will often remedy this, but in the case of a naturally sluggish circulation an efficacious treatment is to bathe the feet each night in hot water and afterward to plunge them into cold, then rub them briskly with a rough towel or flesh gloves.

Deceased was a live business man and by this time probably has half of his estate divided. The above clipped from a Portland, Oregon daily, and, to say the least, gives the deceased credit for being a hustler, wherever he is located.

Petoskey built some pavement last year and after the taxes were all collected, and those that had been assessed for the improvement had all paid up, they then had a 10 per cent rebate coming from the city, as the pavement did not cost what it was figured it would. Such incidents are so uncommon in municipal affairs, that a case of this kind attracts a great deal of attention and makes other towns and cities wish they could secure their modernness of such unusual proceedings. THE FLOCKMASTER.

A good argument in favor of sheep is that they never suffer from cholera.

To thrive best sheep ought not to be disturbed in their natural habits.

And engenders foot rot, but dirty, wet pens are still worse in this respect than mud.

If sheep are in a good, thrifty condition two months of full feeding will fatten for market.

Put up signs warning dog owners to keep their beasts off your land and then do not hesitate to use the shotgun whenever one appears.

The ram that is kept to bend the flock should be pure bred and of good individuality. It is well to breed along definite lines and to a special type.

It is not the loss of a single sheep killed by a dog that hurts the flock master, but the terrible damage done to the rest of the flock through fright.

ROADMAKING IN THE HILLS.

Suggestions For Making a Quick Drying Highway.

HOW TO GET RID OF WATER.

Carry It Directly Across by Sloping Road From the Bank Side—Pointers on Grading—Results Obtained by Plowing.

I have always been very interested and observant in the matter of country roads and have read many valuable articles on the subject. But I still think there are some points that I have not seen touched upon relative to road making, especially in the hill country along the Mississippi and Missouri slopes.

The great object of road work should be to get the water away as quickly as possible. We have a good soil for roadmaking, but the hills are of soft formation, and a stream of water erodes them like so much soft sugar.

Many of our experienced roadmakers will throw up a hill grade and carry the water down each side for long distances. Then comes a heavy rain fall. Forty thousand rivers flow from the hillside above pour into the ditches, and such a volume of water accumulates as to cut deep gorges. This make the road almost impassable and require several days' labor a number of times each year to repair. To avoid this trouble the road may be sloped from the bank side enough to carry the water directly across the road.

When a grade is desired on a side hill roadway plow in three furrows on the lower side, the outside furrow to be about twenty feet from the bank. When grading draw this loose dirt toward the center of the roadway with a slope of about one inch to the foot, carrying this slope across the entire grade. The ditch this made should be opened at short intervals to let out the water.

After the grading is done leaders should be put in to direct any water that might follow the wheel track. To make these leaders scrape with the sifter a trench a little diagonally across the grade about two scrapers' width and not deep. Deposit this dirt with more from the outside alongside the trench, making the ridge no higher than absolutely necessary to accomplish its purpose and not less than six feet wide, thus causing as little obstruction as possible. This plan will always provide a quick drying hill road. With the occasional use of a King drag this can be kept like a boulevard.

When the highway is cut through a hill it is desired to keep the road grade. To this end work the road against one bank, leaving a ditch on one side only. Turn all the water from above and along the hill into this ditch. Plow it in repeatedly each season. After this trench has washed to much for safety smooth this side and change the ditch to the opposite side of the road and repeat. You will be surprised at the change in steepness of feet in ten or twelve years. W. S. Wiley.

REGULATE STREET TRAFFIC.

Redlands (Cal.) Engineer Uses Guide Lines on Corners.

A plan to avoid the congestion of traffic which can be used to advantage in most cities has been devised by City Engineer Hinkley of Redlands, Cal. It consists of a strip of bright aluminum paint, with guiding arrows pointing to the right courses, which are more suggestive than signs could possibly be.

The guiding line runs along the center of the street, keeping its proper position on curves. In approaching a curve, where drivers of rapidly moving vehicles have a tendency to "run corners" instead of keeping on the proper side of the road, the device is of special value.

Drivers would readily learn to observe and follow the guide lines, especially in streets of heavy traffic.

EXPERIMENT WITH A SAND AND OIL ROAD.

One Highway at Falmouth, Mass.,
Standing Traffic Wall.

Macadam roads have now found their way into many localities where there is little or no stone. This scarcity of stone and the resulting high cost of macadam would naturally suggest the question, Is there local material available that is suitable for the construction of a highway that will withstand modern traffic? This question seems to be answered, at least in localities where sand is plentiful by the construction of the sand oil road. During the summer of 1910 a road was constructed in Falmouth, Mass., and at present its wearing qualities are attracting much attention. The road is the main thoroughfare connecting Falmouth with lower Cape Cod and carries a heavy traffic during the summer months. It is located in a sandy stretch, where the scarcity of stone and the distance from a railroad would have made a macadam road very costly. While the entire length of this sand oil road cannot be termed a success, still a certain portion shows that sand mixed with a suitable binder will afford a surfacing that will withstand modern traffic and do away with the dust nuisance.

The surfacing is a mixture of sand and asphaltic oil, and while the method of construction was the same throughout, various kinds of oil were used with different results. Where the lighter oils were used it took a longer time for the road to become hard, and in some places the surface was never hard during the heat of the day. But where the thicker and more viscous binder was used the surface became hard and firm and could be opened to traffic in about six hours.

The road was graded as for ordinary macadam, and the sandy subgrade was hard and with about three inches of clayey loam after which it was shelled and rolled and was then ready for the sand oil mixture.

The work was performed by a contractor. It was found necessary in order to obtain the best results to heat both the sand and the oil. The contractor's plant was composed of six ovens used for heating sand, four 100-gallon kettles for heating the oil, a large boiler and the ordinary hand tools.

Many ways for mixing the sand and oil were tried, but it was finally decided that the following was the quickest and gave the best results. A bottomless measuring box that would hold fifteen cubic feet was placed on the platform, and while one man continually shoveled in sand from the front of the oven another dipped oil from an oil can. Two men, one at each end of the box, constantly raked the sand and oil. After about fifteen cubic feet of sand and ten gallons of oil were mixed the box was lifted and the whole mass was turned with shovel until each particle of sand was coated with oil and the mixture was black.

The road is now one year old, and the maintenance cost of the successful portion has not exceeded that of a new macadam road. A sample taken from this part of the road shows that a hard crust has formed on the outer surface. The rest of the sample shows that the binder is still adhesive and has not become brittle.

The success of this part of the road shows that if sand is mixed with a proper binder it will make a surfacing that is cheap, durable and dustless and will probably become the most popular road surface in sandy districts, where a scarcity of stone and the distance from freight depots would prevent successful macadamizing.

SAND AND CLAY ROADS BEST.

Florida Authorities Impressed With Low Cost and Excellent Condition.

There is a rapidly growing sentiment among the good roads enthusiasts of Jacksonville, Fla., to have highways constructed of sand and clay material. Many who are able to speak authoritatively on the subject believe that no better roads, cost and traffic conditions considered, can be found than those built of this material.

The state geologist of North Carolina is said to have stated that the best highways of that state were the sand and clay roads.

Members of the special board of state committee recently made a trip through the counties of Orange, Lake and Marion in Florida and were greatly impressed with the sand and clay roads, besides being amazed at the practicability, cheapness and ease with which they can be repaired.

"COST OF BAD ROADS."
If you will figure what poor roads cost you every year you will soon realize the necessity of improvement and you will be surprised to see how easily the improvement can be made.

The Reason.
"I can't understand why women want to vote."
"I can. It's because they can't."

GOOD ROADS ATTRACT THE POPULATION.

Counties which are neglecting the improvement of their highways need not be surprised when the census figures show that they are losing population, while more progressive counties are gaining. Good roads attract population, while bad roads drive it away.

THE HOUDAN.

Hen historians have had a continuous rooster fight over the Houdans. Frenchmen claim to hold the patent on this poultry perfection and are said to have made it by crossing Black Polish and the French Crevecoeur and louching this cross with Light Brahma to give size. They declare they sent this breed to England in 1850, its first mention in English history being made in the 1853 edition of the English Poultry Book.

Johnny Bull resents this and swears he made his own Houdan of a cross of Barking, the English "brood of broods" and the French Crevecoeur.

But this isn't our cockfight, and we'll roost on the top perch and watch the scrap, though our private opinion is that the French, English and American Houdans aren't forty-

The Houdan came to this country in 1859 and was first exhibited by the famous John B. Gough in 1867.

It is a compactly built, full breasted, long bodied, short slanked, five toed, white meat bird; is hardy, easily confined, a nonsitter, small ester, quick grower, lays early and long, and its big white egg is a dandy.

Unlike binnans, Mr. and Mrs. Houdan wear a beard that should be full and a crest that should be globular, large, well balanced on the head and falling backward on the neck.

hatched with incubator eggs at Kenosha. Ninety-eight per cent of the chicks came out with twisted legs and broke on wings. Thunderation, what an eggs' negation?

Grocers are often responsible for bad eggs because they keep them until a lot accumulate for shipping. We have known them to stand in musty store cellars for three weeks before shipment. Then when the commission cuts for poor quality the storekeeper turns round and knocks at the farmer who sold him the eggs.

A rotten egg is like a rotten apple, will communicate, decay, and lots of fresh eggs are often spoiled by just one rot. Bacteria in eggs multiply rapidly above 60 degrees and in hot weather eggs quickly deteriorate.

A passenger engine on the New York and New Haven caught a Rock hen on the cowcatcher. When Plymouth Rock South Rock hen flew off, and an examination revealed her egg at the base of the cowcatcher. That isn't the first time Biddy paid her fare, and she'll pay yours if you treat her square.

The Columbian Wyanadotte cranks have a right to shout, for this new beautiful variety is certainly making great strides in popularity. At Chicago show this year they led in entries, at Madison Square, Cleveland and Indianapolis they were among the leaders in quantity and quality, and the Columbian Wyanadotte club is pushing hard and growing fast.

Bodies Turned to Stone.

Human bodies buried in limestone countries are often turned to solid stone by the lime water which penetrates the graves. In other soils there are elements which sometimes so enshrine the buried dead as to preserve form and features unchanged. Many such cases are on record. Robert Burns' body was disinterred in 1815 to be removed to a new tomb. To the surprise of all his friends the features were found to be as perfect as at burial. When the body of John Hampden, the famous English patriot and leader, was disinterred by Lord Nugent 200 years after burial the form and features were as unchanged as if the corpse had been recently laid in the grave.

do your work, and I'll be glad to answer to any name you choose to call me. Won't you please be giving me a name, Mr. McLean?"

The boss wheeled abruptly and began stacking his books. In a voice harsh with business he spoke.

"I will tell you what we will do, my lad," he said. "My father was my ideal man, and I loved him better than any other I have ever known. He went out five years ago. If I give to you the name of my nearest kin and the man I loved best—will that do?"

Freckles' rigid attitude relaxed. His head dropped, and tears splashed down on the soiled calico shirt.

"All right," said McLean. "I will write it on the roll—James Ross McLean."

"Thank you mightily," said Freckles. "That makes me feel almost as if I belonged already."

Freckles' heart and soul were singing for joy.

CHAPTER II.

FRECKLES PROVES HIS METAL.

NEXT morning the boss showed Freckles around the timber line, and changed him from a boy to a man. Freckles, who had brought from Scotland and who lived in a small clearing he was working out between the swamp and the corduroy. When the gang pulled out for the south camp, Freckles was left to guard a fortune in the lumberlot. That he was not a guard himself those first weeks he never knew.

Every hour was torture to the boy. The restricted life of a great city of plumage was the other extreme of the world from the lumberlot. He was afraid for his life every minute. He cut a stout hickory cudgel, with a knot on the end as big as his fist, and it never left his hand. What he thought in those first days he himself could not clearly recall afterward.

His heart stood still every time he saw the beautiful marsh grass begin to wave against the play of the wind, as McLean had told him it would. He bolted a half mile with his first boom of the litters, and his hat lifted with every yelp of the sheldrake. Once he saw a lean, shadowy form following him and blazed away with his revolver. Then he was frightened worse than ever for fear it might have been Duncan's collier.

The first afternoon that he found his wires down, and he was compelled to plunge knee deep into the black swamp muck to restring them, he could scarcely control his shivering hand to do the work. With every step he felt that he would miss secure footing and be swallowed up in that clinging sea of blackness. In dumb agony he plunged along, clinging to the posts and trees. He had consumed much time. Night closed in. The lumberlot stirred gently, then shook herself, growled and awoke about him.

There seemed to be a great owl hooting from every hollow tree and a little one screeching from every knothole. Nightbirds swept past him with their shivering cry, and bats struck his face. A prowling wildcat missed its catch and screamed with rage. A lost fox bayed incessantly for its mate. The hair on the back of Freckles' neck rose like bristles, and his knees wavered under him. He could not see if the dreaded snakes were on the trail nor in the pandemonium hear the rattle for which McLean had cautioned him to listen.

Something big, black and heavy came crashing through the swamp, and with a yell Freckles broke and ran—how far he did not know. But at last he gained some sort of mastery over himself and retraced his steps. When he again came toward the corduroy the cudgel fell to rest the wire at every step.

Sounds that curdled his blood seemed to close in about him and shapes of terror to draw nearer and nearer. Just when he felt that he should fall dead before he ever reached the clearing came Duncan's rolling call, "Freckles, Freckles!" A great shuddering sob burst in the boy's dry throat. But he only told Duncan that finding the wire down had made him late.

The next morning he started out on time. Day after day with his heart pounding like a triphammer he ducked, dodged, ran when he could and fought like a wildcat when he was brought to bay. If he ever had an idea of giving up he never knew it. All these things in so far as he guessed them Duncan, who had been set to watch the first weeks of Freckles' work, carried to the boss at the south camp, but the innermost, exquisite torture of the thing the big Scotchman never guessed, and McLean with his finer perceptions caught only a little nearer.

After a few weeks, when Freckles found that he was still living, that he had a home and the very first money he had ever possessed was safe in his pockets, he began to grow proud. He was gradually developing the fearlessness that men ever acquire of dangers to which they are hourly accustomed. His heart seemed to be in his mouth when his first rattler spat the trail with him, but he mustered courage and hit drive at it with his club. After his head had been crushed he cut off its rattles to show Duncan. With the mastery of his first snake his greatest fear of them was gone.

Then he began to realize that with the abundance of food in the swamp flesh hunters would not come out on the trail and attack him, and he had his revolver for defense if they did. He soon learned to laugh at the floppy birds that made horrible noises. One day watching from behind a tree he saw a crane solemnly performing a few measures of a belated waltz, singing and dancing with his mate. Realizing that it was intended in tenderness, no matter how it appeared, the lonely, starved heart of the boy went out to them in sympathy.

When day after day the only thing that relieved his utter loneliness was the companionship of the birds and beasts of the swamp Freckles turned to them for friendship. He began by instinctively protecting the weak and helpless. He was astonished at the quickness with which they became accustomed to him once they learned that he was not a hunter and that the club he carried was used more frequently for their benefit than his own. He could scarcely believe what he saw.

When black frosts began striking the lumberlot he watched the departing troops of his friends with dismay. He made special efforts toward friendliness with the hope that he could induce some of them to stay. It was true that he conceived the idea of carrying food to the birds, for he saw that they were leaving for lack of it, but he could not stop them. Day after day flocks gathered and departed. By the time the first snow withered his trail about the lumberlot there were left only the little blue and white juncos, the sapsuckers, yellowhammers, a few patriars among the fluting cardinals, the bluejays, the crows and the quail.

Then Freckles began his winter work. He cleared a space of swale and twice a day he spread a birds' banquet. By the middle of January, the strong winds of winter had beaten most of the seed from the grass and bushes. The snowy fell, covering the swamp, and food was very scarce and hard to find. The birds severely waited until Freckles' back was turned to attack his provisions. In a few weeks they flew toward the clearing to meet him. By the bitter weather of January they came halfway to the cabin every morning and fluttered about him like doves all the way to the feeding ground. By February they would perch on his hand and shoulders, and the sunny jays would try to pry into his pockets.

Then Freckles added to wheat and cranberry every scrap of refuse food he could find about the cabin. One morning, coming to his feeding ground unusually early, he found a gorgeous cardinal and a rabbit sociably nibbling a cabbage leaf side by side, and then instantly gave to him the idea of cracking nuts from the store he had gathered for Duncan's children. The squirrels, in the effort to add them to his family. Soon he had them running—red, gray and black—and he became filled with a vast impatience that he did not know their names nor habits.

So the winter passed. Every week McLean rode over to the lumberlot, never on the same day nor at the same hour. The boy's earnings constituted his first money, and when the boss explained to him that he could leave them safe at a bank and carry away a scrap of paper that represented the amount he made a deposit on every pay day, keeping out barely what was necessary for his board and clothing. What he wanted to do with his money he did not know, but it gave to him a sense of freedom and power to feel that it was there—it was his and he could have it when he chose.

That winter held the first hours of real happiness in Freckles' life. He was free. He was doing a man's work faithfully through every rigor of rain, snow and blizzard. He was gathering a wonderful strength of body, paying his way and saving money.

Mrs. Duncan had a hot drink ready for him when he came in from a freezing day on the trail, knitted a heavy mitten for his left hand, devised a way to sew up and pad the right shoe which protected the maimed arm in bitter weather, patched his clothing and saved kitchen scraps for his birds. Not because she either knew or cared a rap about them, but because she herself was near enough the swamp to be touched by its utter loneliness. When Duncan laughed at her for this she retorted: "My God, mannie, if Freckles hadna the birds and the beasts he would be always alone. It was never meant for a human being to be so solitary."

The next morning Duncan gave an ear of corn he was shelling to Freckles and told him to carry it to his wild chickens in the lumberlot. Freckles laughed delightedly.

"Me chickens?" he said. "Why didn't I ever think of that before? Of course they are! They are just little brightly colored rocks and heas. But what would you say to me 'wild chickens' being a good deal tamer than yours here in your yard?"

"Good, lad!" cried Duncan.

"Make yours light on your head and ent out of your hands and pockets," challenged Freckles.

"Go tell your fairy tales to the wee people! They're just brash on he-lieve' things," said Duncan.

"I dare you to come see!" retorted Freckles.

"Take ye!" said Duncan. "If ye make just one bird light on your head or eat free your hand ye are free to help yourself to my cornish and wheat bin the rest of the winter."

After that Freckles always spoke of the birds as his chickens. The next Sabbath Duncan, with his wife and children, followed Freckles to the swamp.

Freckles' chickens were awaiting him at the edge of the clearing. They cut the frosty air about his head into curves and circles of crimson, blue and black. They chused each other from Freckles and swept so closely themselves that they brushed him with their outspread wings.

At their feeding ground Freckles set down his old pail of scraps and swept the snow from a small level space with a broom improvised from twigs. As soon as his back was turned the birds clustered over the food, snatching scraps to carry to the nearest bushes. Several of the boldest, a big crow and a couple of jays, settled on the rim and feasted at leisure, while a cardinal that hesitated to venture fumed and acceded from a twig overhead.

Then Freckles scattered his store. At once the ground resembled the spread mantle of Montezuma, except that this mass of gayly colored feathers was on the backs of living birds. While they feasted Duncan gripped his wife's arm and stared in astonishment, for from the bushes and dry grass with gentle cheeping and queer, throaty chatter, as if to encourage each other, came flocks of quail. Before any one saw it arrive a big gray rabbit sat in the midst of the feast, contentedly gnawing a cabbage leaf.

"Weel, I be drawn out!" came Mrs. Duncan's tense whisper.

"Shush!" cautioned Duncan.

Lastly Freckles took off his cap. He began filling it with handfuls of wheat from his pockets. In a swarm the grain eaters rose about him like a flock of tame pigeons. They perched on his arms and the cap, and in the stress of hunger forgetting all caution, a brilliant cock cardinal and an equally gaudy jay fought for a perching place on his head.

"Weel, I'm heat!" muttered Duncan, forgetting the silence imposed on his wife. "I'll hae to give in. Seel's believein'."

A week later Duncan and Freckles rose from breakfast to face the bitterest morning of the winter. When Freckles, warmly capped and gloved, stepped to the corner of the kitchen for his scrap pail he found a pan of steaming bodied wheat on the top of it. He wheeled to Mrs. Duncan with a shining face.

"Were you fixing this warm food for me chickens or yours?" he asked.

"It's for yours, Freckles," she said. Freckles faced Mrs. Duncan with a trace of every pang of starved mother hunger he had ever suffered written large on his homely, spotted, narrow features.

"Oh, how I wish you were my mother!" he cried.

"Lord love the lad!" exclaimed Mrs. Duncan. "Why, Freckles, are ye no bright enough to learn without being taught by a woman that I am your mother? If a great man like yourself donna ken that, learn it now and ne'er forget it. Once a woman is the wife of any man she becomes wife to all men for having had the wisely experience she ken! Once a man child has beaten his way to life under the heart of a woman she is mother to all men, for the hearts of mothers are everywhere the same. Bless ye, lad, I am your mother!"

She tucked the coarse scarf she had knitted for him closer over his chest and pulled his cap lower about his ears. But Freckles, whipping it off and holding it under his arm, caught her rough, reddened hand and pressed it to his lips in a long kiss. Then he hurried away to hide the happy, embarrassing tears that were coming straight from his swelling heart.

Mrs. Duncan threw herself into Duncan's arms.

"Oh, the pair lad!" she wailed. "Oh, the pair mither hungry lad! He breaks my heart!"

Duncan's arms closed convulsively about his wife. With a big brown hand he lovingly stroked her rough, soiled hair.

"Sarah, you're a gude woman!" he said. "You're a michty gude woman! Ye hae a way o' speakin' out at times that's like the inspired prophets of the Lord."

All through the winter Freckles' entire energy was given to keeping up his lines and his "chickens" from freezing or starving. When the first breath of spring touched the lumberlot and the snow receded before it: when the catkins began to bloom; when there came a hint of green to the trees, bushes and swale; when the rushes lifted their heads and the pulse of the newly resurrected season beat strong in the heart of nature, something new stirred in the breast of the boy.

Nature always leaves her tribute. Now she laid a powerful hand on the soul of Freckles, to which the boy's whole being responded, though he had not the least idea what was troubling him. Duncan accepted his wife's theory that it was a touch of spring fever, but Freckles knew better. He had never been so well.

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound

"Cures in Every Case."

Mr. James McCaffery, Mgr. of the Schlitz Hotel, Omaha, Neb., recommends Foley's Honey and Tar Compound because it cures in every case. "I have used it myself and I have recommended it to many others who have since told me of its great curative power in diseases of the throat and lungs." For all coughs and colds it is speedily effective. Sold by Frank N. McCall.

Be sure that there are no creep holes under the fences or gate. If there are the pigs will find them and cause a lot of trouble. Pigs that are apt to have "differences of opinion" should be separated. Fighting takes off flesh. Hogs do not dig in the earth altogether for the fun of it. They get a lot to eat that way—grass roots, worms, bites of stuff of different kinds that help to make bone and muscle.

Grange Column

Bay Shore Grange, No. 1521.

The meeting of Bay Shore Grange was called to order with Worthy Master Fred Worth in the chair. Rollo Long was appointed to act as steward during the absence of Otto Blau.

Four application cards were presented.

Two candidates, Mrs. C. Bahcock and Mrs. Nellie Tillotson were obligated in the first and second degrees.

Mrs. Martha Stolt and Wolf Glaser were given the third and fourth degrees. The third and fourth degree work was given by the officers appointed at the last meeting and the work was carried on in a creditable manner. The delegates to the state grange gave their report, also the annual word. Secretary read names of members which numbered 70.

Forty-two members were present, two visitors from Horton Bay Grange and one from Maple Grove. No program on account of the degree work, but lecturer promises a program for next meeting. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

Next meeting will be held February 9th.

I can cheerfully recommend them to all sufferers for all kidney and bladder trouble." Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 was called to order at its regular session on Tuesday, January 23, by Worthy Master E. H. Clark. The committees for the ensuing year was appointed and two applications were received for membership.

Lecturer's hour consisted of readings, songs, stories and recitations. A speech by Brother Joseph Whitfield and a recitation by Brother Leo Vangorder of Rock Elm Grange.

The next meeting of Ironton Grange will be a day meeting on Tuesday, February 6, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. All members bring dinner baskets and all enjoy a social gathering and dinner at the hall. A good lecturer's hour will be prepared for the afternoon. Everything should come prepared to respond if called on by the lecturer.

Visitors from other granges will be welcome. Grange closed in form with forty-three members and two visitors present. The grange

Help the kidneys with their work.

The back will ache no more.

Lots of proof that Doan's Kidney Pills do this.

It is the best proof, for it comes from Charlevoix.

J. G. Lancaster, 203 May St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have proven a valuable remedy to me. I can recommend them strongly. I was annoyed for seven years by my kidneys and suffered greatly from lame back. My back ached at night and when I arose in the morning I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and I had to get up many times during the night. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done me a world of good. I can rest better at night and only have to get up once. My back is strong and the aches and pains are gone. I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

The filling of the silo and thus providing a supply of palatable and succulent feed for the stock for the entire year is not only a sign of progress, but is an indication that the farmer so doing is producing milk or beef more easily and economically than his neighbors who have no silo. It is also a sign that the most in being made of the corn crop. Waste is largely eliminated.

STABLE FEEDING FOR BEEF CATTLE.

When I used to feed cattle for the winter market I tried every way of outdoor feeding; but, finding them all wasteful, laborious and dirty and, in addition, unprofitable, I gradually adopted stable feeding, says an experienced Indiana feeder in the American Agriculturist. I first began feeding the milk cows in the stable, allowing them to run loose for a part of the day. I came to the conclusion that it would be just as profitable to feed the steers indoors as the milk cows.

The first trials were made in sheds. The cattle ate from troughs and could run in and out. This method was not satisfactory unless with polled or dehorned cattle. If the steers possessed horns there was generally a great deal of trouble going on. I then tried the loose box stall method and finally adopted the swinging stanchion method, with floor as for dairy cows. I now recommend this method to all who wish to get the greatest amount of weight on in the least time with the least amount of grain.

The Shorthorn breed of beef cattle is distinguished by its symmetrical proportions and by its great bulk on a comparatively small frame, the ossa being very light and the limbs small and fine. On touching the beef points the skin is found to be soft and mellow, as if lying on a soft cushion. In animals thin in condition a kind of inner skin is felt, which is the "quality" of "handling" indicative of those great fattening propensities for which the breed is famous. The Shorthorn bull Good Count, here, with picture, is a truly bred Scotch show bull.

There are some who will object to the necessary expense for such a method of feeding. I will give one case to show how such a method pays. Not far from my place is a dairy farm with a herd of thirty cows. By feeding these cows in a stable with stanchions the annual expenses were lessened $2,000 over the out-of-door method. The saving came in time, feed and labor. I believe the same saving will result with fattening steers.

For economical feeding of beef cattle in stalls and stanchions, especially during the times of short crops and consequent inflation of prices, I would advise putting most of the clover hay through a power cutter. Some stout hay can be fed during the middle of the day or at night. For high feeding on ground mixed grain and mill feed I recommend in connection with such feed that the cut hay be dumped and the feed and hay be mixed into a chop. Mix in the proportions of one gallon of cornmeal, one gallon of bran and wheat middlings to a bushel of the cut hay. Give all at night and morning that the cattle will clean up. At noon give a moderate feed of mixed ground grain, together with some mixed hay.

Out hay or straw can be cut the same as clover and mixed with ground grain. If clover is high in price the cut hay or straw makes a profitable substitute. The underlying idea of all that has been said is to feed the cattle abundantly with feed and fat forming feeds and yet economize on food material.

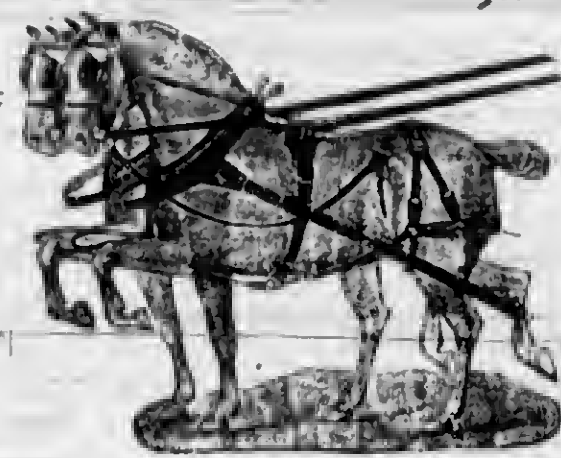

I believe that a cattle feeder should put to practice some of the methods that he sees around him. It will be to his advantage to study the methods of feeding dairy cattle, for the same methods that produce a good milk cow will enable the feeder to grow large, fat, high grade beef animals. I have never had any experience in feeding allages, but I would infer that it would prove just as successful in the case of fattening cattle as it has with dairy feeding.

WINTER CARE OF SHEEP.

Suggestions For Feeding and Care of Breeding Ewes.

Breeding ewes may be kept in first class condition through the winter by the use of roughage and concentrated such as may be grown on the average farm, says the Orange Judd Farmer. The mistake is often made of thinking that the ewes can be wintered on some roughage, as hay or straw, and still keep in proper condition. They should not be fat, but should carry more flesh than is usually supposed.

Clover hay is an excellent roughage, as is also alfalfa. Corn fodder, oat straw, barley straw or roots, such as mangels, may be used. Corn allages have proved satisfactory and economical when fed with hay or fodder. It furnishes a succulent feed that acts as a stimulant to the appetite and as a regulator of the bowels. Ewes that are fed a daily allowance of starchy will more certainly keep in a thrifty condition. Roughage alone will not be sufficient, as some concentrate or concentrates should be fed. With a liberal supply of roughage not more than half a pound of concentrates such as oats, should be required. Less than this amount will often be sufficient. Bran or cowpeas may be fed

The fine Lincoln ram herewith shown proved a prize winner at the fair. It is owned by Grond & Sons of Wisconsin. Lincoln sheep are generally recognized as the largest and heaviest of the domesticated breeds. The mature rams weigh 275 to 300 pounds and ewes 225 to 250. They flourish best where pastures are level rather than hilly, where grass is abundant and where the climate is not subject to great extremes. They mature early, considering their great size, dress well and are especially valuable in crossing where increased size and weight of fleece are desired.

with good results. Corn may be fed, but since it is quite fattening the amount should be very small. Care should be taken that too much of the protein rich feeds, such as clover, alfalfa or bran, is not fed. They tend to produce lambs that are too large at birth or that have more bone development than is desired.

In addition to receiving a proper ration dry quarters are necessary if the ewes are to go through the winter as they should. Two warm quarters may be possible. Ordinarily one thickness of well matched inch boards is all that is needed on a sheep barn. The cracks should be battened, however, as drafts are very undesirable. Proper ventilation and sunlight should be kept in mind. The sheep should have the run of a dry yard that is sheltered from winds and storms, as exercise is required if they are to keep in good condition. As to space required, from ten to fifteen square feet will be ample for each ewe. From one and one-half to two feet of running space should be allowed at the feed rack.

Handling Young Horses. Instead of being angry with the young horses because they manifest fear of some things, remember how wonderful it is that horses accommodate themselves to most of man's artificial environs without any question. A few soothing words and pats, leading the youngster past fearsome objects, will soon make him hold his head up and additionally valuable. Never strike him when he is distracted with fear.

Sheep eat a little more per unit weight than cattle. A bunch of sheep weighing about 1,000 pounds will consume as much feed as a steer weighing 1,200 pounds.

HAPPY IS THE MICHIGAN MAN

Says John C. Wright in Prize Paper "Remain in Michigan"

NEED NOT THE ALLURING CALL

It Is Voice of Jacob, but the Hand of Esau

Facts Alone are Sufficient to Prove Michigan's Supremacy Over all Eldoradoes of the West.

When people are sweltering under the tropical sun of the southern states, they talk of Michigan.

When the 17-year locust makes his debut, devastating crops and presaging ruin, the stricken farmer deplores his fate and sighs for a home in Michigan.

When the seven vultures arise, as it were, from the storm-swept wastes of the western plains, lifting the humble shacks and depositing them in neighboring states, the homeless turn with a living faith and look up a sight in Michigan.

When old Neptune comes out of the sea, shaking his hoary locks and blowing a tidal wave across the main, the survivors flee from the ocean's wrath and enquire the way to Michigan.

When disaster drenches up the land and the furrows crack like parching lips, the hungry hordes do not despair, for famine fear the name of Michigan.

When earthquakes and volcanoes shake the earth to its foundation, engulfing cities and destroying towns, those who escape hemoan their fate and praise the tranquil state of Michigan.

When people suffer in some plague-ridden land, where malignant microbes dance triumphantly about, the patients toss upon their feverish beds and long for health like we have here in Michigan.

Whenever landslides, blizzards, yellow perils, avalanches, water-spouts, inundations, seismic disturbances, epidemics or the elements combine to wreck the lives and homes of the inhabitants, and if any escape to enquire, "Where am I at?" they always find they are NOT in Michigan.

Because nothing of that kind ever happens in these peninsulas. Happy is the man who can call Michigan his home; thrice happy is he who will bring others here to enjoy the blessings of this wonderful state.

This is not a boom far the railroads nor a real estate agency; our sole ambition is the greatest good to the greatest number. It is not necessary to paint lurid advertisements nor distribute fake handbills; the facts alone are sufficient to prove Michigan's supremacy in nearly every line over all the Eldoradoes of the land.

It is customary to appeal to the farmer, and this we do with the utmost regard for the many diversified interests of the commonwealth; for where we have prosperous farmers there also will be found flourishing cities, thriving industries, and great centers of commerce.

We shall not seek to build ourselves up by tearing others down, but when the people of Colorado ask you to come to their state because they claim to have raised 195,000,000 pounds of sugar beets last year, tell them that Michigan raised 232,000,000 pounds.

When the citizens of the Dakotas ask you to move to those states because their average hay crop for the year 1910 was $3.00 per acre, tell them that in Michigan it was $17.68.

When the people of Idaho ask you to emigrate to that commonwealth because of its potato raising land, tell them that last year Michigan's potato crop was more than 35,000,000 bushels—a figure exceeded only by the state of New York.

When the people of California ask you to "move on" to that Eldorado in order to raise corn, tell them in 1910 Michigan's yield was 68,040,000 bushels, greater than that of Minnesota, North Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Colorado or Nevada.

When the people of Washington ask you to cast your lot in that far country because of the apple industry, tell them that last year Michigan raised one of the largest apple crops known in the history of the world and took the first prize at the Chicago Land Show against all comers; that the lake breezes of Michigan together with the fitness of the soil, produce fruit superior in quality to that grown in any other part of the inhabitable globe.

When the people of Oregon call your attention to their virgin forests tell them that Michigan has the greatest amount of hardwood timber of any state or of any nation in the world.

When the people of the north-west speak of the density of population of the east, tell them that Michigan has put 48 people to the square mile; sufficient room for thirty million more inhabitants, and a land area capable of supporting nearly one-half of the entire country.

When the people of the west boast of their superior farming advantages tell them that Michigan is much nearer to the markets of the world, with unsurpassed shipping facilities by both rail and water.

LOST HIS PRISONER

Sheriff Edgerton of Emmet County Again in Trouble

Loses Bootlegger in Detroit but Fails to Report the Case.

Petoskey city is wrought up over investigations that are being made regarding the delay in placing Levi Aldoffer in the Detroit house of correction to serve 90 days, which was the sentence imposed six weeks ago in the circuit court by Judge Shepherd, on his second conviction of the local option law.

Sheriff Will Edgerton of Emmet county went to Detroit last week, returning a few days later with a receipt from prison showing that Aldoffer had become an inmate of that institution. It was rumored about that the sheriff had yielded to Aldoffer's begging and had allowed him freedom on a southern Michigan farm instead of placing him in prison.

A statement made by Sheriff Edgerton was to the effect that Aldoffer had eluded him in the Pere Marquette station at Detroit when the man was taken there by the sheriff six weeks ago. After waiting in Detroit three days in a vain effort to catch Aldoffer, Edgerton returned to Petoskey, but failed to make a report of the escape, waiting in hopes that he would hear from the man.

A few days later he received word from a former Petoskey resident now living in Detroit that Aldoffer was seen daily passing his residence in that city, so the sheriff went down and reports that this time he captured his man and did not let him out of his sight until he was safely turned over to the prison authorities. This case is creating considerable comment over the county, and according to the Petoskey News is being investigated by parties in that city.

IS LOCAL OPTION A FAILURE?

EDITED BY THE W. C. T. U.

The following written by Charles J. Strang, formerly editor of this paper, now located at Lansing, Michigan, is well worth reading, and presents the subject "Is Local Option a Failure," in a manner which, if followed, would do away with the open saloon.

"A considerable number of men claim to have signed the petitions for resubmission of the question of prohibiting the liquor traffic in this county, on the ground of the so-called failure of local option to entirely stop the traffic. It seems to me that a little analysis of the question will show the fallacy of such an argument."

"If a man had a herd of swine shut in a field to keep them out of his growing crops, and some of them persisted in breaking through or rooting under the fence and getting to his crops, would he open the gates and let them all out and say, 'the fence is a failure,' or would he try to stop the holes and weak places, and keep all the swine confined and save his crops?"

"In the conduct of their affairs generally, the liquor sellers remind one of a lot of greedy swine. They seem to be trying to destroy our crop of boys and girls. Shall we open all the saloons and give them free chance at our boys and girls just because 'local option' has holes and weak places? Or shall we try to stop the holes and weak places, and strengthen the laws so as to prevent the greedy ones from breaking through and destroying our boys and girls?"

"In the first instance, if the fence were a failure, you would either mend the weak places or make a new fence—you certainly would not throw open all the gates and let the swine destroy all your crops. Your boys and girls are your most valuable crop, and deserve more consideration than any other crop. If the local option laws are weak and full of holes, strive to strengthen them by electing men to the legislature who will make the laws right.

"If the mail order liquor traffic is wrong (and it is), write to your congressman, about it and demand that the laws be amended and made right. Legalizing the traffic and opening the saloons will not stop all the mail order liquor. It will be like turning the swine into your crops to help themselves, because the fence is a failure and has holes and weak places."

"If there was a venomous serpent in your children's playground, frequently biting and killing them with its poisonous fangs, would you leave it there, and just tell your children to keep away from it, or would you kill the serpent and that danger?"

"The liquor traffic is a venomous serpent, hitting boys and girls, and sending thousands of them by slow poison into drunkards' graves. Shall we legalize the work of this serpent, and give it license to destroy our boys and girls or shall we destroy the serpent and save these children from certain death by this slow poison?"

"I hold that the traffic in intoxicating liquors is a murderous traffic; that it destroys thousands of lives annually, and impoverishes other thousands, causing great suffering among innocent women and children; that a voter who favors the licensing and legalizing of the traffic, knowing the awful results of such action, or who votes the ticket of a party which favors licensing the traffic, is accessory and primarily responsible for all the evil results of the licensed open saloon."

MANY FINE BIRDS NOW ON PARADE

The Charlevoix Poultry Association Opens Exhibition Today

BETTER BIRDS EXHIBITED THIS YEAR

Show Room Taxed to Its Full Capacity

All Leading Varieties Shown—Fifty Dollars in Cash Premiums—Open Every Evening.

The greatest social event in the realm of henland in northern Michigan began to-day when the Charlevoix Poultry association opened its second annual poultry show. The attendance did not reach its maximum on account of a little delay in the arrival of fowls that came from a distance, but nevertheless there was an excellent showing on hand early this morning.

The show room is an excellent one, being light and airy, which makes the perfume used by the belles and fobs of chickendom much less conspicuous to the visitor than if the quarters were close and poorly ventilated. The show room is located in the west half of the Van Pelt block, next to the Conner office, which was tendered the association by Mr. Van Pelt, which fact is appreciated very much by the members of the association. The show pens are arranged in the center and along the sides of the room, which gives ample room for visitors to inspect the merits of the birds that are shown.

Much careful grooming has been done by the young cockerels for this great show time of the year while all the pullets present show the effects of careful primping before the mirror in order to show off to the best advantage possible. Many of the birds of the masculine gender show careful voice cultivation, and all the different tenor, baritone and bass are heard for several blocks from the show room. There is a great diversity of varieties of the different kinds of fowl shown, and on the whole there are finer representatives present than was last year. All the leading varieties of chickens are shown, while there is a liberal sprinkling of turkeys and ducks to add to the appearance of things.

People who like to look at a good display of poultry of all kinds should make it a point to look at the fine specimens that are here for public inspection. The show room will be open each evening, during the three days' exhibition, and a special invitation is extended all farmers to attend the show.

This year the association will give fifty dollars in cash premiums, besides ribbons to winners of the different classes.

MRS. DEAN SCROGGIE

Well Known Lady Died at Her Home in Hayes Township

Had Many Relatives and Many Friends Throughout the County.

Mrs. Dean Scroggie, for thirty years a resident of Hayes township, died at five o'clock Friday afternoon at her home at the age of 56 years. She had been ill for some time and was confined to her bed, but it was believed that she was improving until Friday afternoon, when she experienced a stroke, probably apoplexy, which terminated in death.

Margaret Copping, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hawkins, was born May 10, 1885, in Ontario, Canada, and later moved to Fall River, Mass., where she was united in marriage in August, 1899, with Dean Scroggie. From Fall River they moved to northern Michigan and settled on the homestead which they occupied at the time of her death.

In addition to the husband, Mrs. Scroggie is survived by five daughters, Mrs. George Teager of Detroit, Misses Gertrude, Mayne and Georgia Scroggie, who teach in various schools near their home, and two sons, Thomas and Dean Jr., are left to mourn the deceased woman, besides a sister in Petoskey.

The funeral was held from the home Monday morning, Rev. Geo. A. Weaver of Petoskey in charge.

HER SUFFERING ENDED

Little Helen Gail VanAlsburg Dies After Long Sickness.

Helen Gail VanAlsburg died Saturday morning at about twenty minutes to seven, after an illness lasting since last July.

She had a complication of diseases and was a constant sufferer. Since her birth in 1904 she has never been really strong, although she attended school and always kept up with her classes.

Little Helen was loved by all who knew her and through her sickness was a patient sufferer. The trouble lay chiefly in her throat, which at most times made it impossible for her to talk.

The burial services were held from the home Monday afternoon and were conducted by Rev. Putnam. The many beautiful flowers showed that Helen had a host of friends, both among old and young.

Miss Jessie DeWitt, sister of Mrs. VanAlsburg, was the only out of town attendant. The family have the sympathy of all in their bereavement.

GOVERNOR OSBORN A NATIONAL FIGURE

Has Good Claim for First or Second Place on National Ticket

PRES. TAFT THOUGHT IMPOSSIBLE

To Renominate Him Would Mean Political Suicide

Reciprocity Measure Lost Him Support of Farmers Throughout Nation—Roosevelt Will Win.

Down here in Florida where people from every part of the union is gathered, there is lots of political discussion going on, and anyone is enabled to get quite a line-up on the sentiment of the nation. On the republican side the universal sentiment is that President Taft is impossible, and that to renominate him would be political suicide. Whatever may be the opinion in regard to the reciprocity measure, it lost the president the support of the farmers of the great middle west and the state of New York. At the meeting of the national grange at which the farmers of twenty-seven states were represented, the antagonism to Taft was almost universal, and I find by talking with men from all over the country that it is a true expression of the feeling of the country.

If Taft is not named, who will be is the question. LaFollette's and Cummings' candidacies are not treated seriously. The cry is "we must have Roosevelt or meet defeat," and everybody believes that will be the outcome of the convention. If Roosevelt is not a candidate, Hughes seems to have the pole and many believe he could win out. Many believe a dark horse will be the winner, and Michigan's governor is becoming a national figure. Stranger things have happened than seeing the name of Osborn either on the first or second place on the national republican ticket.

The democrats have several favorites. Wilson is in the lead, but Harmon and Clark have lots of friends. It is urged against Harmon that he is too conservative, and the antagonism of Colonel Bryan is a strong factor against him. Clark is thought by many to be too impulsive, and apt to put his foot in it, while many are against him on account of his desperate efforts to win and what they call playing to the galleries.

Another man looms up big on the democratic horizon, is well spoken of by the partisans of all the other candidates as a wise conservative statesman, who has shown he has the qualities of a leader, and who comes from a section that has not furnished a candidate in over half a century, and it is my belief that in the event of a prolonged struggle in the democratic convention, Underwood will win.

If the pulse of the people was followed as I have found it, the tickets next summer would read: Roosevelt and Osborn, Republican; Underwood and Marshall, Democrat. So much for a guess.

Germs Spread in Skin

Eczema, psoriasis and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they multiply, growing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seems a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema. A 25c bottle will prove this to you.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble but have never seen such remarkable cures as these from D. D. D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

We are so confident that D. D. D. will reach your case that it will cost you nothing if the very first full size bottle fails to make good every claim. If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D. D. D. anyway. We know that D. D. D. will help you. F. G. Hines & Co., Druggists.

Beware of Ointments for Calarh that Contain Mercury

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescription from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

HEARD IN CHARLEVOIX

Bad Backs Made Strong Kidney Pills Corrected.

All over Charlevoix you hear it. Doan's Kidney Pills are keeping up the good work, curing weak kidneys, driving away backache, correcting urinary ills. Charlevoix people are telling about it—telling of bad backs made strong again. You can believe the testimony of your own townpeople. They tell it for the benefit of you who are suffering. If your back aches, if you feel lame, sore and miserable, if the kidneys act too frequently, or passages are painful, scanty and off color, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that has helped so many of your friends and neighbors. Follow this, Charlevoix citizen's advice and give Doan's a chance to do the same for you.

Mrs. W. L. Cowan, 211 Clinton St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I do not hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for I have derived very good results from their use. I was subject to severe backache and pain in my kidneys and also annoyed by kidney irregularities. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store and they brought me great relief."

For sale by all dealers. Price 75 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

IN THE ART GALLERY.

"Ah," exclaimed Mrs. Olden, who was again enjoying the splendor of her new neighbor's art gallery. "Corot, I see."

"Where?" asked her hostess, looking doubtfully at the canvas which seemed to claim the other's attention.

"There," answered Mrs. Olden, pointing with her barette.

PROFIT IN PONIES.

Shetlands Are Easily Raised and Find a Ready Market.

Our Oregon farm, known as Pleasant View Pony farm, keeps on an average 100 head of Shetland ponies the year around, and it has never cost over $500 a year to keep the entire herd, writes C. G. Phillips in Farm and Fireside.

One can get ponies pastured by the head for about the same as sheep—10 cents per week. So if one were to hire the pasture for the week for thirty weeks it would cost only $3. Then it is best to keep them up in the stable during the winter months and feed each one a pint of grain twice a day. With outcut 35 cents a bushel, the total expense would not run over $6 or $7 per head for the entire year. Thus it will be seen that Shetland ponies are a profitable line of live stock. They have the advantage of most other breeds of stock, for they will do well on either mountain rocks and hills or swampy lowlands, where it is not safe or profitable to turn other stock. As long as there is plenty of grass of any kind it matters not the condition of the ground to them. They will stand more hardships, when it comes to bad weather and bad pasture, than any other line of domestic stock, for their native country, the Shetland islands, is a bleak, barren country, and nature has taught the generations to stand hardships. Yet they respond to good treatment much more quickly than stock that has been reared to good care.

Depreciation in value plays a less important part as regards Shetland ponies than in any other branch of domestic stock.

A forty or forty-two inch Shetland pony will do all the family errands about town just as easily and as satisfactorily as a thousand pound horse. These little ponies have to be less pluck and endurance, and a number of them are fast trotters. One little mare recently trotted four miles in sixteen minutes and nine miles in forty-three minutes, drawing one person. This is no mean performance for much larger animals.

Some live stock. Horses depreciate in value about the time they get to be nine or ten years old. It is the same with other live stock. But a Shetland pony is just as valuable for a child's pony in the future between twelve and twenty years of age as at any earlier period. As for breeding purposes a mare is just as good between the ages of ten and twenty years as previous to her tenth year.

There seems to be no danger of the business of raising Shetland ponies being overdone, for there are less than 10,000 registered Shetlands in America today.

The price of Shetlands has nearly doubled in the last four years, and

A LIBERAL OFFER

We Guarantee to Relieve Dyspepsia. If We Fail the Medicine Costs Nothing.

To unquestionably prove to the people that indigestion and dyspepsia can be permanently relieved and that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will bring about this result, we will furnish the medicine absolutely free if it fails to give satisfaction to anyone using it.

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is due to the high degree of scientific skill used in devising their formula as well as to the care exercised in their manufacture, whereby the well-known properties of Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with Carminatives and other agents. Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin are constantly employed and recognized by the entire medical profession as invaluable in the treatment of indigestion and dyspepsia. The Pepsin used in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is carefully prepared so as to develop its greatest efficiency. Pepsin supplies to the digestive apparatus one of the most important elements of the digestive fluid. Without the digestion and assimilation of food are impossible.

The Carminatives possess properties which aid in relieving the distensions and pain caused by undigested food. This combination of these ingredients makes a remedy invaluable for the complete relief of indigestion and dyspepsia.

We are so certain of this that we urge you to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets on your own personal guarantee. Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. McCall, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

CONFIDENCE

We Back Up Our Statements With Our Personal Reputation and Money.

We are so positive that we can relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine free of all cost if we fail.

We think that it is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Cathartics may cause a reaction, irritate and weaken the bowels, and make constipation more chronic.

Constipation is often accompanied and may be caused by weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or colon. To expect a cure you must therefore tone up and strengthen those parts and restore them to healthier activity.

The discovery of the active principle of our remedy involved the labor of skillful research chemists. This remedy produces results such as are expected from the best of the best-known intestinal tonics, and it is particularly prompt in its results.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our guarantee. They are exceedingly pleasant to take and are ideal for children. They appear, actually act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels, having, it would seem, a neutral action on other organs or glands. They do not purge or cause inconvenience.

If they do not positively cure chronic or habitual constipation and thus relieve the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, your money will be refunded. Try Rexall Orderlies at our risk. Three, sizes of packages, 10c, 25c, and 50c. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. McCall, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Mich.

some of our largest and best posted breeders predict that they will double in price again in the next five years.

Breeders of Shetland ponies have a great advantage over those who raise other breeds of horses, for they can be sold so young and can be shipped from one part of the country to the other at so little expense. A Shetland of 500 pounds can be crated and shipped half-way across the continent for $8 or $10 if on one express company's line, and for short journeys about $5 is the prevailing rate. So it gives breeders access to a large market all over the United States. Quite a number are shipped to Canada.

IMPROVE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

Minnesota Legislature Passes Bill Providing For State Roads Plan.

Planned, built and kept in repair under supervision of expert engineers employed by the state highway commission, the roads designated as state roads in five years will, it is claimed, give Minnesota the best system of highways in the entire country.

The Dunn good roads bill, passed at the last session of the legislature, provides for a constitutional amendment levying a quarter mill tax for the building, repair and improvement of the roads and that the state share equally with the county the expense of all state roads. Any public thoroughfare can be designated as a state road but after being so designated it henceforth must be improved, changed and repaired under the supervision of the state engineers. The building up of a good roads system rests with the improvement of the dirt roads of the state and not in the construction of macadamized highways.

These roads may be improved by cutting down the hills, removing the soil, clearing out the ditches, building grading, surfacing and dragging after every rain so that they will serve every purpose for which the highways will be used and at a lesser expense than the special roads.

GOOD ROADS REMINDERS.

Good roads never grow—they are made.

Take a few minutes' time and drain that mudhole. It's as much your neighbors' place to do that as it is yours. Yes, but that doesn't drain the mudhole!

Spare the time to climb out of the wagon or buggy and toss a few of those stones from the track into the ditch. Every time you pass over them you fairly grind your teeth with vexation.

The remedy is yours to apply.—M. Coverdell.

MINNESOTA HAS A GOOD PLAN

Bill Provides That Owners, State and County Share Road Expense.

The Minnesota state highway commission has taken favorable action toward building several trunk highways connecting Duluth with Minneapolis, St. Vincent, Minnetonka and other points. The road from Duluth to St. Vincent will be financed by the state and the road to St. Paul will be financed by the state and the county.

Of what material these roads will be built, whether of macadam, brick or gravel, has not yet been decided, but the fact that residents of the counties in both the country and small towns are willing to bear their share of the

How to Treat Auto Tires in Winter.

Now that some automobilists are laying up their cars for the winter information as to the proper care of tires during this period is timely. The following advice is being spread broadcast by the Firestone:

First jack up car off all tires and allow enough air to escape to release the internal pressure on the fabric, but not enough to totally collapse the inner tube. The tires in this condition should be kept from heat and wrapped in perfect condition this will suffice; otherwise observe the following directions:

Take off the tires, clean outside carefully, removing all dirt, oil, grease and foreign material. Do not allow water to get inside the casing. If any of the casings are penetrated by the fabric have the tire inspected by a competent repair man and repaired or retreaded, as deemed advisable. Wrap each casing and tube in paper or cloth to keep away light and air and store tires in a cool, dark place. Clean all rust off the inside of rims and polish with graphite or stove polish to prevent further rust.

How to Make New England Muffins.

The following recipe for muffins comes from New England. Sift two teaspoons of cream of tartar and one of soda with three cups of flour and rub in a piece of butter the size of an egg. Beat three eggs well and mix them with half a cupful of sugar, then add a cupful of milk. Stir this mixture through the flour and butter and bake thirty minutes in a quick oven.

The Self Sucking Cow.

The nuisance of a self sucking cow can be prevented by taking a piece of tough wood about the size of a hoe handle and long enough to reach from the ring in her halter to a snarehole placed around her body just back of the fore legs. With the stick passed between her fore legs and fastened to the girth the cow cannot get her head back to her teats, but she can graze or drink water without any trouble.

How to Reduce Gas Bills.

Gas bills may be somewhat reduced by regulating the meter. Light as many gas jets as you usually use and turn them on full. Then adjust the meter, turning it off all you can without leaving a good full flame. This reduces the pressure which causes the gas to "blow." The same thing may be done advantageously to the meter on the gas range.

How to Select Goggles.

In selecting goggles irregular refraction of the lenses is easily discovered by moving them before the eye and watching if the things seen through the glass seem distorted.

CHAPTER III.

A FEATHER FALLS.

THE sounds that had at first struck could fear into Freckles' soul he now knew had left on wing and silent foot at the approach of winter. As flock after flock of the birds returned and he recognized the old echoes rousing him to his surprise that he had been lonely for them and was hailing their return with great joy. He was possessed of an overpowering desire to know what they were, to learn where they had been and whether they would make friends with him as the winter birds had done, and if they did would they be as fickle? For with the running sap, creeping worm and whizzing bug most of Freckles' "chickens" had deserted him, entered the swamp and feasted to such a state of plethora on its store that they cared little for his supply, so that in the days of mourning and nest building the boy was deserted.

The yearly resurrection of the Lumberlost is a mighty revival. Freckles stood back and watched with awe and envy the gradual re-creating and repopulating of the swamp. Keen-eyed and alert through danger and loneliness, he noted every stage of development from the first piping frog and unassuming bud to full leafage and the return of the last emigrant.

The knowledge of his complete loneliness and utter insignificance was hourly thrust upon him. He brooded and fretted until he was in a fever, and yet he never guessed the cause. He was filled with a vast impatience and a longing that would not much further be denied.

It was June by the zodiac, June by the Lumberlost, and by every delight of a newly resurrected season it should have been June in the hearts of all men. Yet Freckles scowled darkly as he came down the trail, and the running sap, tap which tested the sugaring wire and telegraphed word of his coming to his furred and feathered friends of the swamp this morning carried the story of his discontent a mile ahead of him.

Freckles' special pet, a dainty yellow-coated, black-sleeved cock goldfinch, had for several days just remained on the wire, the bravest of all, and Freckles, absorbed with the cunning and beauty of the tiny fellow, never guessed that he was being duped, for the goldfinch was skipping, dithering and swiveling for the express purpose of holding his attention that he would not look up and see a small cradle of thisledown and wool perilously near his head.

A peculiar movement under a small walnut tree caught his eye. He stopped to investigate. It was an unusually large Liana cocoon, and the moth was just bursting the upper end in its struggles to reach light and air. Freckles stood and stared.

"There's something in there trying to get out," he muttered. "Wonder if I could help it? Guess I best not be trying. If I hadn't happened along there wouldn't have been any one to help it, and maybe I'd only be hurting it. It's—it's—oh, skagony! It's just being born!"

Freckles gasped with surprise. The moth cleared the opening and with great whirrings and confoundings climbed up the tree. He stared, speechless with amazement as the moth crept around a limb and clung to the under side. There was a great purpy body, almost as large as his thumb and of the very kindest white that Freckles had ever seen. "There was a band of delicate lavender across its forehead, and its feet were of the same color. There were antlers like tiny straw-colored ferns on its head and on its shoulders little wet-looking daps no bigger than his thumb nail. Freckles saw that those queer little wet-looking things were expanding, drooping, taking on color, and small oval markings were beginning to show.

The minutes went by. Freckles' steady gaze never wavered. Without realizing it he was trembling with eagerness and anxiety. As he saw what was taking place "It's going to have wings!" he breathed in hushed wonder. The morning sun fell on the moth and dried its velvet down, and the soft air made it snuffy. The rapidly growing wings began to appear to be of the most delicate green, with lavender fore ribs, transparent, eye-shaped markings edged with lines of red, tan and black and long, crisp trailers.

Freckles was whispering to himself for fear of disturbing the moth. It began a systematic exercise of raising and lowering its exquisite wings in dry them and to establish circulation. Freckles realized that it would soon be able to spread them and sail away. His long coming soul sent up its first shivering cry.

"I don't know what it is. Oh, I wish I knew! How I wish I knew! It must be something grand. It can't be a butterfly. It's away too big. Oh, I wish there was some one to tell me what it is!"

He climbed on the locust post and, balancing himself by the wire, held a finger in the line of the moth's advance up the twig. It unhesitatingly climbed on, and he stepped back to the path, holding it up to the light and examining it closely. Then he held it to the shade and turned it, gazing over its markings and beautiful coloring. When he held the moth back to the light it climbed on, still waving those magnificent wings.

"My! but I'd like to be staying with you!" he said. "But if I was to stay here all day you couldn't get any prettier than you are right now and I wouldn't get smart enough to tell what you are. I suppose there's some one that knows. Of course there is. Mr. McLean said there were people that knew every leaf, bird and flower in the Lumberlost. Oh, lord, how I wish you'd be telling me just this one thing!"

The goldfinch had venturied but a few inches above the main creature's head, and, indeed, he simply must not be allowed to look up just then, so the brave little fellow rocked on the wire and piped up, just as he had done every day for a week. "See me; see me!"

"See you! Of course I see you," growled Freckles. "I see you day after day, and what good is it doing me? I might see you every morning for a year and then not be able to tell you any one about it. Seen a bird—little and yellow as any curlew, with black silk wings. That's as far as I'd get. What you doing here anyway? Have you a mate? What's your name? See you? I reckon I see you, but I might as well be blind for any good it's doing me."

Freckles impatiently struck the wire. With a screech of fear the goldfinch fled precipitately. His mate tore from the nest with a whirr. Freckles looked up and saw it.

"Oh—ho!" he cried. "So that's what you are doing here! You have a wife!"

Freckles climbed up to examine the nest, lay cradle and its contents. The hen darted at him in a frenzy. "Now, where do you come in?" he demanded when he saw that she was not like the goldfinch.

"You be clearing out of here! This is none of your fry. This is the nest of me little yellow friend of the wire, and you shan't be touching it. Don't blame you for wanting to see though. My, but it's a fine nest and beautiful of eggs. Will you be keeping away or will I fire this stick at you?"

Freckles dropped back to the trail. The hen darted to the nest and settled on it with a tender, rattling movement. He of the yellow egg flew to the edge to make sure that everything was right.

"Well, I'll be switched!" muttered Freckles. "If that ain't both their nest! And he's yellow and she's green, or she's yellow and he's green. Of course I don't know, and I haven't any way to find out, but it's plain as the nose on your face that they are both ready to be fighting for that nest, so of course they belong. Don't that beat you? Say, that's what's been stinking me for all of these two weeks on that grass nest in the thorn tree down the line. One day a bluebird is setting, and I think it is hers. The next day a brown bird is on, and I chase it off because the nest is blue's. Next day the brown bird is on again, and I let her be because I think it must be hers. Next day, he's golly, blue's on again, and off I sent her because it's brown's, and now I bet my hat it's both their nest, and I've only been bothering them and making a big fool of myself."

Freckles plodded on down the trail, scowling blackly and idly spanging the wire. At the finches' nest he left the line and peered into the thorn tree. There was no bird brooding. He pressed closer to take a peep at the snowy, spotless little eggs he had found so beautiful, and at the slight noise up there four tiny baby heads with wide open mouths and hunger cries. Freckles stepped back. The brown bird lit on the edge and closed one cavity with a wiggling green worm, and not two minutes later the blue filled another with something white. That settled it. The blue and brown were mates. Once again Freckles repeated his "How I wish I knew!"

About the bridge spanning Sleepy Snake creek the swale spread wide the timber largely dropped away, and willows, rushes, marsh grass, and splendid wild flowers grew abundantly. Lazy big black water snakes, for which the creek was named, summed on the lusher, wild ducks and geese chattered, cranes and herons fished, and muskrats plowed the bank in queer, rolling furrows. It was always a place full of interest to Freckles.

Freckles struck slowly into the path leading from the bridge to the line. It was the one spot at which he might relax his vigilance. The greatest timber thief the swamp had ever known would not have attempted to enter it by the mouth of the creek on account of the water and because there was no protection from surrounding trees. He was wishing the rank grass with his cudgel and thinking of the shade the denser swamp afforded when he suddenly dodged sideways. The cudgel whistled sharply through the air and Freckles sprang back.

Out of the clear sky above him, first level with his face, then skimming, dipping, dithering, whirling until it lit quill down in the path in front of him, came a glossy, iridescent big black feather. As it struck the ground Freckles snatched it up and with an almost continuous movement faced the sky. There was not a trace of any size in a large open space. From the clear sky it had fallen, and Freckles, gazing eagerly into the arch of June blue with a few lazy clouds floating far up in the last of ether, had neither mind nor knowledge to dream of a bird hanging as if frozen there. He turned the big quill questioningly, and again his awed eyes swept the sky.

"A feather dropped from heaven!"

be breathed reverently. "Are the holy angels molting? But, no; if they were it would be white. Maybe all the angels are not for being white. What if the angels of God are white and those of the devil are black? But a black one has no business up there. Maybe some poor black angel is so tired of being punished for slipping up to the gates, beating its wings trying to make the Master hear?"

Again and again Freckles searched the sky, but there was no answering gleam of golden gates, no form of sailing bird. Then he went slowly on his way, turning the feather over and wondering about it. It was a wing quill eighteen inches in length, with a big, heavy spine, gray at the base, shading to jet black at the tip, and it caught the piny of the sun's rays in shouting gleams of green and bronze. Again Freckles' bold man of the sea sat sullen and heavy on his shoulders and weighted him down until his sleep lagged and his heart ached.

"Where did it come from? What is it? Oh, how I wish I knew!" he kept repeating.

Before him spread a great green pool, filled with rotting logs and leaves, bordered with delicate ferns and grasses, among which lifted the creamy spires of the arrowweed, the time of water hyacinth and the delicate yellow of the jewel flower. As Freckles leaned, handling the feather and staring first at it and then into the depths of the pool, he once more gave voice to his old query, "I wonder what it is?"

Straight across from him, couched in the mosses of a soggy old log, a big green bullfrog, with palpitant throat and bulging eyes, lifted his head and bellowed in answer, "F'n' don't, f'n' don't!"

"Wha-wha's that?" stammered Freckles, almost too much taken aback to speak. "I—I know you are only a bullfrog; but, he jabbers, that sounded mighty like speech. Wouldn't you please be saying it over?"

The bullfrog cuddled contentedly in the moss. Then suddenly he lifted his voice and, like an imperative drum-beat, rolled it again, "F'n' don't, f'n' don't, f'n' don't!"

Freckles had the answer. Like the lightning's flash, something seemed to snap in his brain. There was a warbling flame before his eyes. Then his mind cleared. His head lifted in a new pose, his shoulders squared, and his spine straightened. The agony was over. His soul floated free. Freckles came into his birthright.

"Before God, I will!" He uttered the oath so impressively that the recording angel never winced as he posted it up in the prayer column.

Freckles set his hat over the top of one of the locust posts used between trees to hold up the wire and fastened the feather securely in the band. Then he started down the line, talking to himself as men that have worked long alone always fall into the habit of doing.

"What a fool I have been!" he muttered. "Of course that's what I have to do. There wouldn't likely anybody be doing it for me. Of course I can! What am I a man for? If I was a four footed thing of the swamp maybe I couldn't, but a man can do anything if he's the grit to work hard enough and sleek at it. Mr. McLean is always saying, and here's the way I am to do it. He said, too, that there were people that knew everything in the swamp. Of course they have written books. The thing for me to be doing is to quit moping and be buying me some books. Never bought a book in my life or anything else of much account, for that matter. Oh, ain't I glad I didn't waste my money! I'll surely be having enough to get a few. Let me see."

CHAPTER IV.

FRECKLES' WORLD OF PROMISE.

FRECKLES had walked the lumber line ten months. His pay was $30 a month, and his board cost $8. That left $22 a month, and the $2 was more than his clothing had cost him. At the very least he had $200 in the bank.

"I'll be having a book about all the birds, trees, flowers, butterflies—and yes, by gum, I'll be one about the frogs if I can't get one I have," he promised him.

Freckles fell into a rapid pace, for he had lost time that morning, and he rounded the last curve he was at most running.

Be Safe---Not Sorry

4 per cent is the limit of what can be paid by a bank and conduct its business on lines of the strictest conservatism. In short, it is the rate that is consistent with absolute safety.

There are many schemes and seemingly attractive investments that offer more, but with every added per cent comes and added risk, and why should you take any risk when you are investing the net results of your labor and economy.

A man who loses his savings, thus acquired, usually quits saving from discouragement. "Better be safe than sorry," is a good maxim to observe in choosing a place for investment.

D. 1912. Present, Hon. John M. Harris, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Wm. C. Grandy, deceased. Judge Grandy having filed in said court her final account as administratrix of said estate, and her petition praying for the allowance thereof. It is ordered, that the 24th day of February, A. D. 1912, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said Probate Office, be and is hereby appointed for examining and allowing said account. It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county. A true copy. John M. Harris, Judge of Probate.

Shooting a Fish.

A fact known by every one is the peculiar apparent bending of a stick when thrust into clear water. It is due to the refraction or bending of light. Now, if one saw a fish in fresh water and desired to shoot it the gun must be pointed under the fish, for it must be remembered that the fish appears as did the stick. If the fish was at the stick—too far up. If the fish was directly under the observer, however, the light would not be bent, and it could be shot straight at. — Chicago Record-Herald.

How to Repair a Tablecloth.

To repair a tablecloth lay it quite flat with the hole uppermost and cover it with a piece of plain Brussels net tacked it on and darn with fine darning. When brown it will scarcely be noticeable. Making Tea in Tibet

The people of Tibet make their tea in a complex fashion. They get it in "bricks," which are brought overland from China by caravan. When a Tibetan wants to make tea he takes a piece of tea brick, pulverizes it and boils it in a kettle for a few minutes with a sufficiency of water and a pinch of salt. Then he puts the mixture into a little churn, adds a bit of butter and a small quantity of fine ground barley. These things he churns vigorously for a few minutes and then pours the stuff into the teapot. A strainer of bamboo is used. Each person in Tibet carries his or her own tea bowl, which is of wood, tucked into the folds of the body garment or robe.

Making Themselves Known

"Persons who expect to receive money orders in a strange town take a little precaution to identify themselves," said a postal clerk. "One way that particularly commands itself is for the stranger to call on the paying teller in the money order department before his own order arrives and present a blank of correspondence showing pretty clearly who he is. He then explains that he is expecting a money order from a certain person. Can the clerk remember him when he presents it for payment? After that impressive introduction the clerk usually can remember, and when the order is presented he cashes it."—New York Sun.

Pleasant For Shaw

Ford Madox Hueffer, in his "Memories and Impressions," says that his first coming to London Bernard Shaw wrote a pamphlet called "Why I Am an Anarchist," which was published at the Torch press. "Some time later," relates Mr. Hueffer, "when Mr. Shaw, having advanced a stage further toward his intellectual salvation, was uttering, in the park a Socialist gathering on the dreary text, 'The Feudalism of Anarchism,' the young proprietors of the Torch walked round and round in the outskirts of the crowd offering copies of Mr. Shaw's earlier pamphlet for sale and exclaiming at the top of their voices, 'Why I Am an Anarchist! By the Lecturer!'"

Beef on High Priced Land

It is generally said that "it is unprofitable to feed cattle in Illinois on $150 to $175 land. If you had been with me last winter on the occasion of a visit to the University of Illinois you would have seen a number of flocks of cattle fed in small lots and a profit made on every bunch of cattle fed. If they can make a profit here under the conditions which they must have a profit made by the inefficient feeding on our farms."—Phil S. Hiner.

PREVENTION OF DISEASE IN HOGS.

For many years we were somewhat in the dark as to the cause of disease in swine. Science, however, has given us much light on this subject. It is now very generally understood that most forms of disease are due to a germ which can be very readily transferred from place to place. Since this is the basis of a large amount of the trouble we can readily see the importance of using every precaution possible to keep the animals in a clean condition. Most of these germs or bacteria thrive and make their greatest growth under filthy conditions. Scientists claim that most germs cannot withstand sunlight, thus the importance of having plenty of sunlight in the yards and pens which are used for swine breeding or feeding purposes. These pens should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected very often. By following such a practice the health of the herd can be very much improved. Another point which has had a beneficial influence on the health of the animals is the kind of feed fed. Some feedstuffs seem to be influential in keeping the digestive system in good order. Others have the opposite effect.

The Berkshire was introduced into America in 1823, and since that year he has been greatly improved until we now have an animal of fixed type and unusual propensity, says the Country Gentleman. Some uncertainty seems to exist in the minds of a few as to whether the Berkshire should be classed among the large or the small breeds. He should be classed as above medium in size. However, this matter of size is often misleading to the beginner. The most profitable hog for the farmer is one that will make the most economical gains at an early age—in other words, a quick growing hog. This quality the Berkshire possesses in a high degree. The Berkshire here shown is a good type of the breed.

Among the various feedstuffs which are not conducive to the best health of the animals may be mentioned corn. Still, corn is used in many instances as the sole grain ration for swine. A variety of feeds is claimed to be very beneficial in this respect. Oilmeal, roots, forage crops, shorts, skim milk and such other feeds are all supposed to have a favorable influence upon the digestive system, thus are beneficial in keeping the animals in good health.

Another important point from a health standpoint is exercise. Where swine are confined in small, damp, filthy yards it is next to impossible to prevent disease. The surroundings are just right, and if disease should come in the neighborhood it makes an excellent place for it to start.

Another important point which will be found to be very helpful in case disease should break out in the herd is that of having the hogs scattered over the farm. If so doing disease may break out in one place and the remainder of the hogs on the farm not be affected at all. On the other hand, if they are hunched up in small yards and disease should break out, in many instances the entire stock will be affected before it is noticed. In such an instance the only thing to do is to separate the hogs as soon as disease is observed, disinfest all thoroughly and transfer them to other yards.

Worms cause much trouble in swine. They may be prevented by judicious feeding and the use of some of the well known preventives on the market.—Professor W. J. Kennedy, Iowa Station.

Feeding Dairy Cows

Two or three things ought to be taken into consideration in feeding stock—first, the time of the year and the condition of the weather. When it is cold cows need and will eat more than when it is warm and falling weather. Again, the size of the cow should be taken into consideration. A big, heavy cow needs more than a small rather thin grained cow. Still again, if a cow is giving milk she should have more and richer food than one that is dry. Unless a farmer knows he has a man of good judgment to do it for him he should do his own feeding every day; once in a while, but right along. And as he does it he should keep his eyes open to see how well the stock clears up the manger. There ought not to be much if anything left if the hay or other fodder is of a good quality. When cows begin to leave some in the manger they are getting more than they can attend to, and loss will be the result.—Iowa Homestead.

It is generally said that "it is unprofitable to feed cattle in Illinois on $150 to $175 land. If you had been with me last winter on the occasion of a visit to the University of Illinois you would have seen a number of flocks of cattle fed in small lots and a profit made on every bunch of cattle fed. If they can make a profit here under the conditions which they must have a profit made by the inefficient feeding on our farms."—Phil S. Hiner.

For the first time in 13 years, Lake Michigan is believed to be frozen from shore to shore. During the last week the thermometer has gone down as low as 40 at Manistee, 33 at Ludington, 29 at Frankfort, and from 15 to 30 in other sections of the state. At Charlevoix the lowest the thermometer has registered is 13 below, near the P. M. depot, and from 10 to 12 in other sections of the city.

Last Friday afternoon an oil stove caused quite a commotion at the home of Miss Emma Bennett. It blazed up, catching a lace curtain on fire and then spreading until the walls were damaged and window glass was broken. The water pipes were frozen so they had some trouble in extinguishing the fire, but finally did so without giving a fire alarm.

Courtesy, courtesy, courtesy. There is nothing like it in business. The pleasant answer, the cheerful countenance and obliging disposition, the earnest thank you bring customers everywhere. It is one of the gratifying things to note that the country as a whole is growing more courteous. It is even affecting some street car conductors. It is spreading, catching, the wise little newsboys, in their rush and hurry in disposing of their papers, say "thank you" every time they gather in a cent. The grouches and crabbed individuals are on the run. The world has no use for them. The clerk, the obliging business man, are coming to the front, and we feel better on account of it. Get inoculated with it.

The direct relation of the saloon and of liquor traffic machinations with the crimes of the McNamara brothers was revealed at Indianapolis last week. Among the witnesses from Chicago who testified before the grand jury at Indianapolis was Allox Silverman, keeper of the saloon in Chicago where Orrie McNamara met other dynamite workers under direction of the McNamaras to further arrange their plans with reference to explosion jobs. Dynamite and nitro-glycerine are said to have been carried in suit cases to Silverman's saloon and were taken from that place to the different points where it was utilized in destroying life and property. The saloon and the saloonkeeper willingly lent themselves to these criminal operations and probably played an important part in encouraging and suggesting them. It will be readily seen that in their appeals to the laboring men everywhere to assist in putting the saloon out of existence John Mitchell and John B. Lennon, prominent American federation of labor leaders, are performing a timely and most important service to the great organization they are authorized to speak for.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT

Six Admitted to Citizenship—Liquor Cases Disposed of.

Circuit court opened up Monday morning with Judge Mayne presiding. Among those making application for citizenship, who were admitted were John Barnes, John C. Karcher, Lawrence Christensen, Thomas J. Harrison, Marko Skope and Anton Kazumi; continued, Stenil Stezak, Seimon Kazumi and Joseph Majchizak; rejected, Leo Jaroma.

In the case of the People vs. Moxie Spangenberg, for violation of the liquor law, defendant pleaded guilty and is out on suspended sentence.

The People vs. Frank Henry for statutory rape, is continued until next term.

The People vs. Albert Black for larceny, defendant pleaded guilty and will be placed under parole.

Win. Caldwell pleaded guilty of violating the local option law, and is out on suspended sentence.

The People vs. Jesse Sweet, Uria Wyatt and Antoine Auer, for violation of the liquor law ended by all pleading guilty, and will be sentenced at the termination of court.

In the Clare County Savings Bank vs. G. L. Fetherly, et al, the jury was sent back three times before the proper verdict was brought in, and resulted in Featherly and wife having to pay $23.99, and no cause of action against Coleman.

Elmu Freeman was granted a divorce from John Freeman. The court is now occupied with the Bricker case.

CHARLES A. BEDWIN

Died Suddenly Thursday at His Home on North Side.

Charles A. Bedwin was born at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1854, living there until about fourteen years of age. Up to seven years ago he lived on the old homestead near Ironton, coming to Charlevoix, where he has since lived with his brother Fred until the time of his death, which occurred last Thursday at their home on the north side.

About three years ago he had a paralytic stroke, from which he has never fully recovered. The day he died he was out doors, and felt better than he had in some time, but he had a choking spell which affected his heart, and within a few hours caused his death.

Mr. Bedwin had many friends who will miss him, especially the summer people.

He leaves two brothers of this city, Eugene and Fred, both of whom are well known.

The funeral services took place from the home of Eugene Bedwin, Saturday morning, and were conducted by Reverend F. M. Taylor. The body was placed in a vault until the weather will permit it to be removed to Advance, where his mother and father are buried.

FOCHTMAN HIT HARD

Four Months in House of Correction and $200 Fine.

Frank Fochtmann, a prominent business man, was last week sentenced by Judge Shepherd to a four months' term in the Detroit House of Correction, in addition to a $200 fine and $5 costs for violating the local option law.

Fochtmann was charged with two liquor offenses and pleaded guilty in the circuit court.

Jake Krusel, convicted on the same charge, was sentenced to 60 days in the Emmet county jail, and assessed $50 and $15 costs.

Emmet R. White, an Alanson druggist, convicted of violating the local option law in the September term of court, was assessed one hundred dollars fine and costs, his punishment being dealt out under the old law, which did not require imprisonment.

UDO, A NEW VEGETABLE.

Introduced Here From Japan and Called Better Than Asparagus.

Writing in the National Geographic Magazine on "New Plant Immigrants," David Fairchild says the following of udo, a Japanese vegetable similar to asparagus.

"On the streets of any Japanese city you will find for sale an attractive blanchet vegetable called udo. It is a near relative of the well known wild plant in New England the spikeard, but a much larger plant. There are many ways in which it is prepared by Japanese and the foreigners who live in Japan, but either as a salad or cooked in the same way in which asparagus is cooked it deserves to rank as one of the important vegetables of the world. It is easy to grow; it does not require replanting often, once in nine or ten years; it can be cropped in the autumn or in the spring, and it yields large crops of shoots, which are often two feet long and an inch or more in diameter at the base. These brilliant white shoots are edible to their very bases without the least objectionable fiber and not in this respect like asparagus, of which only the tips are fit to eat.

STALKS OF UDO.
(Photograph by Long Island agricultural experiment station.)

"You cannot introduce a new vegetable, it is impossible," said a hot-headed authority to Mr. Fairchild. Mr. Fairchild admits that the introduction of a new vegetable is a long undertaking, extending perhaps over the period of a generation, but it should not be left out of account, as the means at our disposal today are immeasurably more powerful than they were even two decades ago. The advent of the great hotels and the sympathetic interest of the great magazines are two elements which today make possible what yesterday would have been impossible.

A GOAL FOR THE FARMER.
Every farmer should work out and adopt a permanent system of agriculture under which he can increase and maintain the fertility of his land, enjoy a good living, rise in social value and wield a good influence in his community.

MAINTAINING GOOD ROADS.

Various Methods Depend Upon Local Conditions.

COST IS A BIG FACTOR.

The Ideal Highway of Today Must Be Smooth, Durable, Dustless and Cheap. Says James Owen, Essex County, New Jersey, Expert.

In discussing the good roads problem in such an extensive country as this one, with its varying climate, topography, materials to be used and habits of the people, it would be hard for any one individual to cover the ground, as of necessity each man's environment and experience are limited. Yet the aggregate of such experiences will be of value to all.

To properly consider the subject in its entirety it may be wise to indulge in a classification of the people, the pavements and the pay. The traveling people may be divided into urban, suburban and rural. It may be conveniently stated that the requirements of the pavements differ in character practically in accordance with this classification except that there may be a certain overlapping due to special conditions. This covers two heads. The ability to pay varies spasmodically with climate, topography and energy of the community.

Now enters into consideration the character of the vehicles of today, which are two, self propelled and horse drawn. Both of these may be divided into fast and slow moving, the heavy wagon and light buggy, the motor truck and the automobile, these including still other items—the iron tire of the wagon, the rubber tire of the buggy, the corrugated tire of the motor truck and the pneumatic tire of the automobile. All these factors vary in weight and speed, and their effect on the surface of the pavement is of vital importance.

Another point which has not yet arisen is the effect of different pavements on the tires of vehicles. So far the owners of such vehicles have been so busy trying to get something new to ride upon that they have been content to pay their bills for new tires and new wheels ungrudgingly, yet in the future it will be an important economic factor.

There is still another factor which today is the most important in road construction—viz, the suppression of dust.

Taking all the factors outlined heretofore, the problem is to furnish a road that is smooth, durable, dustless and cheap, and that problem is today facing the civilized world. With the use of such standard pavements as wood block, granite block, Medina sandstone, brick, asphalt and the tar compounds and with proper care in the selection and manufacture of material and a conscientious disposal of it in place, in most cases a smooth, dustless pavement will be secured. However, this point is one for purely local consideration and cannot be generalized upon.

We now come to the main problem in which the maintenance department sooner or later takes an interest. The asphalt and tar preparations give a smooth, dustless and serviceable road and are desirable for residential sections and in many cities are universal. Their maintenance is carried on in different municipalities in different ways, some owning their own repairing plant, others contracting the repairs and still others neglecting them altogether. It is safe to say, however, that after five years' use of these pavements the item of repairs begins to be a factor, although the writer has seen one asphalt pavement which has been in use for nearly ten years without repairs or apparent necessity for them.

I wish to allude to the financial problem in road construction, and it might be well to note the varying channels from which money comes. Taking my own state as an example, these are as follows:

City Street Paving.—A party says about 80 per cent on property, balance on the city at large. Maintenance a city charge.

Suburban Towns.—Streets macadamized sixteen feet wide. A general tax, extra width, local assessments.

Rural Towns.—Mostly developed by either state roads or county roads.

County Roads.—Main arterial high ways paid for on bond issue of the county, maintained by the county. County road repair system abandoned when state roads came into use.

State Roads.—State pays 33 per cent, county 50 per cent, town 10 per cent. Maintained by the county with contributions from the state of automobile money, say 20 per cent.

With such varied methods of payment for original construction it is to be noted that the maintenance cost is defrayed by either the county or municipality, with the addition of a small amount from automobile taxes. Now enters the important part of the whole question of road and street maintenance and that is the ability and willingness to pay.

As to ability, that is a condition hard to gauge. As to willingness that can be educated by education. To properly educate a community to high ideals and standards, those ideals and standards must first be crystallized on a permanent basis and then set before them.

Poultry Pickings.

Darkening the nests is one way to prevent the egg eating habit.

Earthen water fountains in the poultry yard are better than tin ones. The former will keep the water cooler in summer and warmer in winter.

It is an old saying "that too much care will kill a cat," and it is also true of chickens. While there is certainly daily work to be done, it is not necessary to coddle the chicks and try to be with them all the time.

A hen in the best laying condition has some surplus fat on her body. This means that her bodily wants have been supplied, and there is some to spare. A very fat hen seldom lays well. A poor hen cannot lay well.

An average of 150 eggs per hen during the first year of laying is fairly good laying. Pullets in good health and vigor should average this number of eggs. During the second year they will lay about 25 per cent fewer eggs and each succeeding year correspondingly fewer.

A poultry keeper gives a recipe for a dry mash which contains a large amount of nitrogenous food and says it is especially good for feeding pullets. He uses one bushel each of bran, middlings, alfalfa and one-half bushel each of ground oats and meal and some fine charcoal and meat scraps. These are mixed thoroughly.

An Unwelcome Period.
Ever man dreads the day when people who are no kin to him will begin calling him uncle.—Athens Globe.

CARE OF COWS AT FRESHENING TIME

The care given the cow just before and during the first few weeks after calving determines very largely the production for that period of lactation. Improper treatment will have a more direct and lasting effect than that at any other time, and it means dollars and cents that she be handled to give the maximum production.

The following, writes A. E. Chase, superintendent of the stock Idaho university experiment station, is a method that has given good results. The cow is dried up from four to six weeks before the calf is due and fed liberally, getting her to gain in flesh. Three or four days before her time she is placed in a box stall and fed dry feed. If any constipation is noticed a little lin seed oil is mixed with the grain. These cows decline to be milked with milk fever are fed very little the last couple of days. If the udder tends to cake it is milked out and well rubbed. After the calf is born and has taken its first feed the cow is milked dry and the udder thoroughly manipulated. The calf is allowed to remain with the cow the first day and then put in the calf pens out of sight of the cow. Very little trouble has been had with caked udder, but the treatment in bad cases has been to milk them three times a day and after each milking bathe for some time in hot water and then rub well with turpentine and lard. It is the rubbing that counts more than the liniment.

The Holstein bull here shown is King Homestead De Kol, grand champion at the recent national dairy show, Chicago. Admirers of this breed of cattle claim that the Holstein is the best specimen of cow yet produced, meeting every requirement of the human family and exceeding every other cow not only in butter producing qualities, but also in milk production.

Care is taken to see that the after birth is passed properly and no improper cases allowed to go more than twenty-four hours without treatment. The first day after calving the cow is fed very sparingly and then gradually increased. Within three or four days if doing properly she is put back with the rest of the herd. From then on the feed is increased slowly until full feed is reached. This is determined when the milk record fails to rise with any further increase of feed.

The Horse to Raise.

It costs no more to raise a good horse than to raise a poor one. The initial cost of breeding may be a little more, but the value of the good horse is so much greater that the cost should be borne. To own poor stock is a reflection on the owner. If he be able to secure good stock it is a serious reflection on his intelligence to own "scrubs," and really only a rich man can afford to own scrubs. They are too costly. If one has a number of mares it will be better to breed them all to one horse, since from the mingles may come good matches, which are valuable. Where one breeds to several horses the chances for securing well matched teams is small. In breeding "the best is none too good," and the "scrub" ought never to be considered at all.—Farm and Ranch.

Examination of the Herd.

When the herd is properly housed in its winter quarters it is very important that they be thoroughly examined to determine as to whether they are free from any ailment.

All cows or heifers having an unnatural discharge from the genital organs should be given special attention, such as towels internally and antiseptic washes for cleaning the affected parts. No cow or heifer should be permitted to be bred unless it is free from such ailments as chronic catarrh of the genital organs, as oftentimes these little apparently simple ailments develop into serious losses.—David Roberts, D. V. S.

CARE OF ROADSIDES IS AN IMPORTANT FACTOR.

Remove All Rubbish to Make Highway Attractive.

No matter how smooth and well constructed the traveled road may be, if the roadsides are not cared for the highway as a whole will not give a good impression. All rubbish should be removed, the excavations should be filled and embankments smoothed and planted with grass wherever it will grow. Unightly brush should be cut and grubbed out. Sometimes, however, the brush and small trees if suitably trimmed add to the attractiveness of the roadside.

All trees which are ornamental or which have value as shade trees should be preserved and protected unless they grow so close together as to make a dense shade. In hot dry climates particularly and indeed in most places trees are a considerable factor in

Then, warbling, flickering, darting here and there over the sweet marsh grass, came a great black shadow. He had seen some owls and hawks of the swamp, that he thought could be classed as large birds, but never anything like this, for six feet it spread its great shining wings. Its big, strong feet could be seen drawn up among its feathers. The sun glinted on its sharp, hooked beak. It lit on a low tree, and a second later Freckles saw another shadow sweep the grass.

They were evidently mates, for with a queer rolling hop the first corner shivered his bronze wings, sailed up to the new arrival and gave her a silly little peck on her wing. Then he coquettishly drew away and eyed her. He lifted his head and waddled from her a few steps, awkwardly ambled back and gave her a sort of kiss on her beak.

The lover side-stepped a few feet. He spread his wings and slowly and softly waved them precisely, as if he were fanning his character, which indeed was the result he accomplished. Then he hobbled up to his perch and once more. He faced her squarely this time and turned his head from side to side with queer little jerks and indiscriminate peckings at her wings and head. She yawned and shut away indifferently. Freckles reached up, pulled the quill from his beak and, looking from it to the birds, nodded in settled conviction.

With a ravishing swagger, half lifted wings and deep, natural looking the lover came on again. He suddenly lifted his body, but the other bird coolly rocked forward on the limb, glided gracefully beneath him and slowly sailed off into the Lumberlost.

Freckles hurried down the trail, and when he neared the path to the clearing and saw the boss sitting motionless on the mate that was the pride of his heart the boy broke into a run.

"Oh, Mr. McLean," he cried, "I hope I haven't kept you waiting very long! And the sun is getting so hot! I have been so slow this morning! I could have gone faster, only there were so many things to keep me, and I didn't know you would be here. I'll hurry after this. I've never had to be giving excuses before. The line wasn't down, and there wasn't a sign of trouble. It was other things that were making me late."

This flushed, panting, talkative lad was not the same creature that had sought him in despair and bitterness. With an eloquence of which he never dreamed Freckles told his story. He talked with such enthusiasm that McLean never took his eyes from his face nor shifted in the saddle until he described the strange bird lover, and then the boss suddenly bent over the pommel and laughed with him.

"They're back there in the middle of the swamp now," said Freckles. "Do you suppose there is any chance of them staying with me chickens? If they do they'll be about the queerest I have. But I tell you, sir, I am getting some plum good ones. There's a new kind over at the mouth of the creek, that uses its wings like feet and walks on all fours. It travels like a thrashing machine. There's another, tall as me waist, with a bill a foot long, a neck near two, not the thickness of me wrist and an elegant color. He's some blue and gray, touched up with black, white and brown. The voice of him is such that if he'd be going up and standing by a tree and sawing at it a few times he could be cutting it square off. I don't know but it would be a good idea to try him on the gang, sir."

McLean laughed. "Those must be blue herons, Freckles," he said. "And it doesn't seem possible, but your story of the big black birds sounds like genuine black vultures. They are common enough in the south. I've seen them thick about the lumber camps of Georgia, but I never heard of any this far north before. They must be strays. You have perfectly described our nearest equivalent to a brain of these birds called in Europe Phalaris chickens."

"He was loving her so," said Freckles in a hushed voice. Freckles lifted his brave, steady eyes to the boss. "If anybody loved me like that, Mr. McLean, I wouldn't be spending any time caring how they looked or moved. All I'd be thinking of was how they felt toward me. If they will stay I'll be earning as much for them as my chickens I have."

The face of McLean was a study. "And now, Freckles, what has been the trouble all spring? You have done your work as faithfully as any one could ask, but I can't help seeing that there is something wrong. Are you tired of your job?"

"I love it," answered Freckles. "It will almost break me heart when the gang begins tearing up the swamp and scaring away my chickens."

"Then what is the matter?" insisted McLean. "I think, sir, it's been looks. Being among these beautiful things every day, I got so anxious like to be knowing and sampling them that it got to eating into me and went and made me feel sick when I was well as I could be. Of course I learned to read, write and figure some at school, but there was nothing there nor, in any of the city that I ever got to see that would make a fellow even be dreaming of such interesting things as there are here. I've seen the parks, but they ain't even beginning to be in it with Lumberlost. It's all new and strange to me. I don't know a thing about any of it. The bullfrog told me to 'find out' plain as day, and books are the only way, ain't they?"

"Of course," said McLean, astonished at himself for his heartfelt relief. He had not guessed until that minute what it would have meant to him to have Freckles give up. "You know enough to study out what you want yourself if you have the books, don't you?"

"I am pretty sure I do," said Freckles. "I learned all I'd the chance at in the home, and me schooling was good as far as it went. Wouldn't for you go just fourteen, you know. I always did me sums perfect, and I loved me history books. I never could get me grammar to suit them. They said it was just born in me to go wrong talking, but I could knock them all out slugging. I was always leader in the home, and on one of the superintendents gave me car fare and let me go into the city and slug in a boys' choir. The master said I'd the swiftest voice of them all until it got rough-like, and then he made me quit for awhile, but he said it would be coming back by now, and I'm really thinking it is, sir, for I've tried about the like a lot of late."

"That and me chickens has been all the company I've been having, and it will be all I'll want if I can have books and learn the real names of things, where they come from and why they do such interesting things. It's been fretting me to be shut up here among all these wonders and not knowing a thing. I wanted to ask you what some books would cost me and if you'd be having the goodness to tell me the right ones. I think I have enough money."

Freckles handed up his account book, and the boss studied it gravely. "You needn't touch your bank account, Freckles," he said. "Ten dollars from this month's pay will get you everything you need to start on."

"YOU NEEDN'T TOUCH YOUR BANK ACCOUNT."

I will write a friend in Grand Rapids today to select you the very best and send them at once."

Freckles' eyes were shining. "Never owned a book in my life!" he said. "Even me schoolbooks were never mine. Lord, how I need to wish I could have just one of them for me very own! Won't it be fun to see me savin' and me little yellow fellow looking at me from the pages of a book and their real names and all about them printed alongside?"

"I'll have Duncan get you a ten bushel store box the next time he goes to town," said McLean. "You can put in your spare time filling it with the specimens you pick up until the books come, and then you can study out what you have. I suspect you could find a lot of stuff that I could sell for you. I'll order you a butterfly net and box and show you how to entice 'em specimens. But I don't want to hear of your killing any birds. They are protected by heavy fines."

McLean rode away and left Freckles staring after him. Then he saw the point, and grunted sheepishly. Standing on the trail, he twirled the feather and thought the morning over.

"Well, if life ain't getting to be worth living!" he said wonderingly. "Biggest stroke of luck I ever had! Bout time something was coming my way, but I wouldn't ever thought anybody could strike such prospects through just a falling feather."

On Duncan's return from his next trip to town there was a store box loaded on the back of his wagon. He drove to the west entrance of the swamp, set the box on a stump that Freckles had selected in a beautiful and sheltered place and made it secure on its foundation with a tree at its back.

"It seems most a pity to nail into that tree," said Duncan. "I hadna the time to examine into the grain of it, but it looks as if it might be a rare one. Anyhow, the walls' when hurt it deep, and haw! the case by it will make it enter if it can find me."

"Isn't it an oak?" asked Freckles. "Aye," said Duncan. "It looks like it might be one of them fine grained golden ones that make such grand furniture."

When the body of the case was secure Duncan made a dash out of the lid and fastened it on with hinges. He drove a single screw on a latch and gave Freckles a small padlock, so that he might safely fasten to his treasures. He made a shelf in the top for the books and last of all covered the case with oilcloth.

It was the first time in Freckles' life that any one had ever done that much for his pleasure, and it warmed his heart with pure joy.

"Mr. Duncan," he said, "I don't know why you are being so mighty good to me, but if you have any jobs up at the cabin that I could do for you or Mrs. Duncan hours off the line it would make me mighty happy."

"Freckles," said Duncan as he began gathering up his tools, "I canna see that it will hurt ye to be told that ye are doin' every day a thing that pleases the boss as much as anything ye could do. Ye're bein' uncommon faithful lad, and honest as old Father Time. McLean is trustin' ye as he would his own flesh and blood."

"Oh, Duncan!" cried the boy. "Are you sure?"

"Why, I know," answered Duncan. "I wadna venture to say else. In those first days he cautioned me as to tell ye that, but now he wadna care. D'ye ken, Freckles, that some of the single trees ye are guardin' are worth a thousand dollars?"

Freckles looked limp, and his eyes popped.

"Ye see," said Duncan. "That's why they man be watched so closely. The other night down at camp some son of a bawlin was suggestin' that ye might be sellin' the boss out to Jack and lettin' him tak the trees secretly and nobody wad ever ken till the gang gets here."

A wave of scarlet flooded Freckles' face, and he blazed hotly at the insult.

"And the boss," continued Duncan, ignoring Freckles' anger, "he lays back just as cool as coconuts and says, 'I'll give a thousand dollars to any man that will show me a fresh stump when we reach the Lumberlost, says he. Some of the men just snapped him up that they'd find some. So you see how the boss is trustin' ye, lad.'"

"I am gladder than I can ever express," said Freckles. "And now will I be walking double time to keep some of them from cutting a tree to get all that money?"

"Althor-o'-Moses!" howled Duncan. "Ye can trust the Scotch to bungle things a'heighther. McLean was only meanin' to show ye all confidence and honor. He's gone and set a high price for some dirty whelp to rub ye. I was just tryin' to show ye how he felt toward ye, and I've gone and give ye that worry to bear."

"I am mighty proud of what you have been telling me, Duncan," said Freckles. "I need the warning, sure, for with the books coming I might be tempted to neglect me work when double watching is needed."

Freckles picked up his club and started down the line, whistling cheerily. Duncan went straight to the lower camp and, calling McLean aside, repeated the conversation verbatim. "And, me matter what happens now or ever, dunna ye dare let anything make ye believe that Freckles hasna guarded faithful as any man could."

"I don't think anything could shake my faith in the lad," said McLean.

Freckles kept one eye religiously on the line. The other he divided between the path, his friends of the wire and south of the sky for his latest arrivals. Every day since their coming he had seen them, either hanging like small black clouds above the swamp or bobbing over logs and trees with their queer tilting walk. Whenever he could spare time he entered the swamp and tried to make friends with them, and they were the tinnest of all his unnumbered subjects. They ducked, dodged and aimed about him, over logs and bushes, and not even a near approach would drive them to flight.

For two weeks he had found them circling over the Lumberlost regularly, but one morning the female was missing, and only the big black chicken hung sentinel above the swamp. His mate did not reappear in the following days, and Freckles grew very anxious. He spoke of it to Mrs. Duncan, and she quieted his fears by raising a delightful hope in their stead.

"Why, Freckles, if it's the hen bird ye are missin' it's ten to me she's safe," she said. "She's laid and is settin', ye-silly. Watch him and mark when he lights. Then follow and find the nest. Some Sabbath we'll all gang see it."

Accepting this theory, Freckles began searching for the nest, but as he had no idea where to look and Duncan could offer no helpful suggestion the nest was no nearer being found.

Road Maintenance Real Problem.
Colonel R. A. Stevens, New Jersey state road commissioner, after four months' experience in his new office, finds that the annual cost of maintaining and repairing main trunk roads is from $600 to $800 a mile, or about $2,000,000 for the entire state. For repair work and unimproved his department has only $250,000 available, and this must be distributed in twenty-one counties. Having found that the figures on cost of upkeep are not very satisfactory, the commissioner is now experimenting on a four mile stretch of much traveled road at Mercerville, near Trenton, to determine just what the actual cost for a given period ought to be. "I find the work of unimprovement a much more difficult problem than that of construction," said Colonel Stevens.

THE PRECIOUS DAYS.

The days are ever divine. They come and go like muffled and veiled figures sent from a distant friendly party, but they say nothing, and if we do not use the gifts they bring they carry them as silently away. — Ralph Waldo Emerson.

TWO MINDEDNESS.

High mindedness and right mindedness may profitably be supplemented by "two mindedness," which has been defined as the habit of taking into account what is urged on both sides and trying to combine the essential parts of the two opposing arguments into one higher truth. Magnanimity, honesty, breadth, a trio of qualities worth possessing, and the last by no means the least.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY
REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D. D.

GOD IS!

Texts, "God is spirit"—John iv, 24 "God is love."—1 John iv, 8.
Man is a big interrogation point. He questions everything, even God. And man does not. The horse and the dog never ask "Whence came I?" "Whither am I going?" "Who is God?" "Where is he?" They go mately on with unquestioning eyes. We peer into rocks, but he is not there. We gaze toward the stars. He is not there. The limitations of knowledge blind us. The A, B, C of earthly alphabet is hard learned. We talk fearfully about conditions and theories, relations and modifications, conjectural hypotheses, fundamental propositions, philosophical principles and metaphysical speculations, but what do they mean? When we are done we have simply been juggling with words. The brain throbs in weariness, the body slinks in exhaustion, we soon drop into life's last sleep. When we say, Who is God? Let me see him, it is the futile calling on the infinite. The temporal momenting with the eternal. The shadow groping toward the substance.

God is Spirit.

Not "a" spirit, not one of many, not one of a class, but by himself. He is spirit! And when you have out "you enlarge your idea of God." "They that worship him must worship him in spirit"—that is, you cannot worship by simply kneeling or singing or beating on a tontoon; not even repeating words is worship. You may play an instrument without being a musician. Seneca was a moralist without being moral. A candle is but a stick of tallow until it is lit. God is spirit. No man can worship spirit until he uses his spiritual sense. But evidence is every where. "How do you know there's a God?" asks scoffers of Arab guide. "How do I know a camel passed in front in the darkness? I see his foot prints in the sand." Human soul is marked with divine footprints. See it in history—a reformation, discovery of a continent, revolution, abolition of slavery. I have stood on shores of far off Pacific island and picked up strange, shell, rare in color, marvelous in formation, and said, A creator has been here. It is not so much a question, is God knowable? As, do you have faith sense to know? As a rule, fish have eyes and see light. Should ocean fish debate with blind fish of Mammoth cave as to existence of light? As a rule men see and hear, but some are blind, others are deaf. Why argue with a man who denies color or sound? You give a quick look of pity. The poor fellow is deaf or blind!

Not Lo Here Nor Lo There.

We seem determined to know God, a spirit, through the senses. We must! We will know! The greatest glory of man must always be his ability to discover the unknown, to comprehend the uncomprehended. To be frozen in ice here, wrecked on strange shores, buried in volcanoes, smle in study, suffocate in laboratory is nothing to him if he can find the unknown. We are half frightened, however, if some scientist writes magazine articles saying he has taken geologist's hammer, astronomer's telescope, biologist's microscope, physicist's test tube and has found no God—at least if there is one he could not see him. Sure! And blind man might return from art gallery saying he had gone over a world reputed canvas with his thumb end and—to the best of his knowledge—there was no picture there. Trying to comprehend through the wrong sense! God meets humanity on a plane of human intelligence. If I wanted to reveal myself to colony of ants I would have to do it on plane of ant intelligence (which is considerable). Christ is God revealed in man's plane. No God cannot reveal himself fully. Self-revelation is part of key of revelation of higher to lower. I use smoked glass to look at sun. It admits so much of light as my optic nerve can endure. Christ is the translucent flesh through which we see the tender ness and love of God, for God is Love.

Only two definitions of God given, "God is spirit," "God is love." But how shall I explain the love of God in type as I would 2+2=4?—I won't attempt to. A woman wouldn't argue her affection for her lover. No writer, no poet, ever gets more than a reflection of her love in his lines. Theology comes nearer than geology or astronomy, for we are more nearly akin to the Almighty than to rocks or stars. His breath is in us. He whispers secrets like a lover. He hides from scorned and reviled to babes. A collier at his bench may know more than professor at seminary. Each gets his own concept of God. God approaches him on his own level. To one God is all mind, a great intellect; to another law, grinding, ceaseless law. Read the meaning of ruins by the Nile, crumbling Parthenon in Greece, dust of Nineveh and Babylon, pathetic with prayers of hungry and proud peoples. The great world's altar steps That slope through darkness up to God were covered with prayer dust of mighty nations, groping, clutching blindly at God's skirts, each with its own concept. "But it was a song bubble, a dream," flut bubbles burst, dreams vanish. They do not abide through the ages. To us God is heart. God is love.

And the love of God is broader Than the measure of man's mind And the heart of the Eternal Is most wonderfully kind.

life is largely destroyed by western birds, tell them that nowhere can such a valuable and extensive bird migration be found as in the country adjacent to the Great Lakes thus eliminating almost entirely the pernicious and destructive work of bugs, beetles, grasshoppers and kindred pests.

When the states bordering upon the Pacific ocean ask your citizenship because of their extensive coasts, tell them Michigan has more shore line than any other state in the union.

When they ask you to emigrate to inland territory, tell them that the great fresh water seas are imperative to the well being of a people and the maximum production of the soil.

When they tell you to go elsewhere in search of mineral wealth, tell them that Michigan leads the nations of the earth in the production of salt, iron and copper.

When they say that the physiological conditions of the west are conducive to the best result, tell them that the American Indians after having inspected the western continent, established their largest villages on the shores of Lake Michigan.

When they ask you to go to foreign lands in search of pleasure and contentment, tell them that over 200,000 prosperous citizens of the large cities of America come to Michigan every summer to enjoy its beautiful scenery, lovely landscapes and ideal climate.

When they ask you to leave the state to avoid the winter season, tell them that the cold weather of Michigan in winter is vastly superior to the rainy seasons of other states; that it annihilates the germ-carrying flies, and malaria-spreading mosquitoes, destroys low organic life, and furnishes the necessary ice crop for the summer months; that the abundant snowfall of the northern part of the state protects vegetation, and furnishes a means of carrying on the great lumber industry for which Michigan has become renowned throughout the civilized world.

Finally, when ANY people of ANY land comes to you like the apies of Israel, saying, "A cluster of grapes we bear between us upon a staff, the land floweth with milk and honey," tell them "It's the same in Michigan; this great commonwealth shall not be depopulated by high-sounding phrases, nor shall its people be deceived by the false eulogies of distant lands; we shall not sell our birthright for a mess of pottage, nor be alienated from these peerless peninsulas by the ignia-fatuus of the 'golden west'."

Heed not the alluring call—it is the voice of Jacob, but the hand of Esau!

HOW TO STUDY CHARACTER.

Interesting Use of Mental Powers in Close Observation of Faces.

Study the faces you see and try to form some idea of the characters of their owners. Notice ears, noses, mouths, eyes, chin. Observe how few beautiful mouths and ears you will find compared with other features. It is an interesting use of your mental powers, this study of faces, and will teach you sympathy, it nothing more. If you find yourself without faces to study, then memorize verses, phrases or numbers to retain your memory. Learn to recall the numbers of a dozen or a score of your acquaintances' homes, instead of always referring to an address book.

Commit the words of songs to memory even if you do not sing—it will make you popular with people who do—or memorize a dozen lines of prose from the daily paper if you have nothing else at hand, just for practice.

It is better than allowing your brain forces to become weak and slipshod from lack of direction.

Make the most of the odd ends of time, and you will make the most of yourself with little cost and no loss.

Oiled Roads a Success.

PREMIUM LIST OF THE POULTRY SHOW

Plans Under Way for a Larger Exhibition Next Year

THREE HUNDRED BIRDS ENTERED

Officers of Association Well Pleased With Showing Made

Many Exhibitors Deserve Special Mention—Next Year's Show will be Late in December—The Prize Winners.

The second annual exhibition of the Charlevoix Poultry association ended Saturday, and that the show was a success from all standpoints was the decision of the officers of the association as well as the patrons of the exhibition. Nearly three hundred birds were entered by fanciers from both Charlevoix and surrounding cities.

One of the best and largest exhibits was that of Dr. George Keycraft of Petoskey, who altogether had thirty birds on exhibition. Special mention should be made of the exhibition of Barred Rocks of O. J. Trask of Boyne Falls, and E. J. Hiller of this city. D. F. Meech had a fine lot of White Orpingtons, White Holland and Bronze Turkeys and Indian Runner Ducks, while the exhibition of B. L. Harrington and R. C. Korth and many others showed that the owners were breeding along the line that were producing fine exhibition birds.

Judge R. V. Otto of Middleton acted in his official capacity in a manner that was gratifying to all poultry breeders, who are well satisfied with his decisions.

Dr. George Keycraft was given the special premium of $500 for the largest and best exhibition, and the $300 special for the largest and best exhibition of any one variety.

The officers of the show are well satisfied with the success of the exhibition, and are already making plans for a bigger and better show next year, although it is the general opinion now that the show will take place not later than the third week in December.

Below is given the decision in detail:

S. C. Rhode Island Reds—L. S. Meech, Ellsworth, 1 cock, 2, 3 pullet. H. O. Johnson, Charlevoix, 1 cock, Chaire Cartier, Charlevoix 2 cockerel.

R. C. Rhode Island Reds—George Cook, Charlevoix, 2 cockerel, 1 pullet. Ed. Vought, Charlevoix, 1 cockerel, 2, 3 pullet. A. A. Swinton, Charlevoix, 1 hen. Henry Black, Charlevoix, 2 hen.

Barred Plymouth Rocks—E. J. Hiller, Charlevoix, 2, 3 cock, 1, 3 cockerel, 3 pullet, 2 pen. Ord J. Trask, Boyne Falls, 2 cockerel, 1 pullet, 1 hen. J. A. Auld, Charlevoix, 1 cock, 1 pen, 2, 3 hen, 2 pullet.

S. C. Brown Leghorns—Ray Ashdon, Charlevoix, 2 cock, 1, 2 hen.

R. C. Brown Leghorns—L. E. Benton, Charlevoix, 1 cock, 1, 2 cockerel, 1, 2 pullet, 1, 2 hen, 1 pen. S. C. Buff Leghorns—Will Shapton, Charlevoix, 1 cock, 1, 2 pullet, 1, 2 hen, 1 pen.

S. C. White Leghorns—H. C. McCartney, Charlevoix, 2 cockerel, 1, 2 pullet. George Cook, Charlevoix, 1 cock, 1, 2 hen, 1 cockerel, 3 pullet, 1 pen.

W. C. Black Polish—A. A. Swinton, Charlevoix, 1 cockerel, 1 pullet. Black Langshans—H. D. Marshall, Charlevoix, 1 cockerel, 1 pullet, 1 hen.

White Orpingtons—George Keycraft, Petoskey, 1 cock, Meech & Armstrong, 2 cock, 1, 2, 3 hen, 2 pullet, 2 cockerel, 1, 2 pen.

Buff Orpingtons—George E. Keycraft, Petoskey, 1, 2, 3 cockerel, 1, 2 hen, 1, 2, 3 pullet, 1, 2 pen.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Local Option Forces Getting Ready for the Spring Campaign.

The first meeting of the local option advocates was held at the Carnegie library Monday evening, and the following officers were elected: President—Fred Thomas. Vice Pres.—John Burns. Secretary—S. P. Brown. Treasurer—A. M. Burdick. The standing committees will be announced at the next meeting, which will be held in two weeks. The meeting was most interesting, and showed evidence that a vigorous campaign will be carried on this spring.

ORANGE COUNTY FAIR

Oranges and Grape Fruit in Wonderful Display

Strawberries Shown in all Stages of Growth—Automobile Parade.

Orlando, Feb. 3, 1912. Last week I attended the Orange County Fair. Seems like a queer time of year to hold a county fair doesn't it? While in Charlevoix county our long suit is apples, here in Orange county their long suit is the display of oranges and grape fruit. The main exhibition hall is used to display the fruit and it is displayed in about the same form as we display our apples, in the boxes and piled up in pyramids, etc. It makes a very beautiful display, but is not in it with the display of apples at East Jordan, or by the retail merchants association. A fine display of growing vegetables was made, showing the method of irrigation practiced, also strawberries. They claim to be able to produce strawberries nine months in the year. Plants were shown with ripe berries, green ones, and in the bloom. Some mammoth sweet potatoes were also shown. A curious exhibit was the baled hay, consisting of guinea grass, crab grass, and other grasses. It looked like good feed.

Another display which was very fine was the educational exhibit of the Orange county schools. The art and fancy work departments were fine. While the showing of live stock was a joke, the horses and cattle not being up to the average in northern eyes, a good showing was made of poultry. One feature of the fair which was worth going miles to see was the automobile parade. Orlando boasts of having more autos than any other place of equal size in the country, claiming 500. About 80 decorated autos were in line, each being a dream of beauty, and as they passed slowly along covered with flowers, etc., with their occupants dressed in fitting costume, one could imagine himself in fairyland.

The balance of the fair was the same as in the north. The speed contests, the shows and fairs, the good-natured crowds, the flying machine which didn't fly, although it did make one flight of about fifty feet, and then there was the politician with the glad hand. They have two primaries down here. The first one April 30, which is free for all who put up the entrance fee, and all candidates for every office are nominated by the primary method. After the first primary if no candidate receives a majority of all the votes cast, another primary is held in May between the two who receive the highest vote at the first primary. In my next I will try and write you something about Florida, as a place to live in, and the booming now going on to bring settlers into the state.

NEW ORLEANS, THE GREATEST COMMERCIAL CENTER OF SOUTH

Interesting Letter from Horton Bay Resident who is Spending Winter There—Climatic Conditions Very Changeable

New Orleans, La., Jan. 23, 1912. Editor of Charlevoix Courier.

Dear Sir:—Since coming south I have neglected to have your paper forwarded to me and I have missed it greatly. Kindly forward some to the above until further notified.

I arrived here on January the 7th, after spending three months in Memphis, Tennessee. In October we had the most delightful sunny weather, but November and December was very changeable.

When I arrived at New Orleans I found it very warm and at about 4 p. m. it began to rain with thunder and lightning and continued so until Monday evening when it cleared up and turned cold. Tuesday the sun shone brightly and Wednesday and Thursday it seemed like northern Michigan in the latter half of May. Early this morning it was 25 degrees above zero but owing to the low altitude it seemed much colder. However it is unusually cold for New Orleans and we hope to have settled weather very soon now. It seems like May weather one day and then like December the next.

The palm gardens with the green lawns are very attractive at this time of the year. On warm days these parks are fairly alive with people. Violets, pansies, roses, etc. are in blossom.

This is a most interesting old city in many respects. One meets people of nearly every nationality, but most of the laboring class are negroes and Mexicans. A good many of the restaurants are under French management.

As you are undoubtedly aware, New Orleans is the great commercial center of the south, and many of the ocean steamship lines make this port regularly. The wharves and warehouses are continuous for miles, and I am sure that not less than two hundred boats were anchored in the harbor at one time. One ocean liner, the Prince Berenger, was unloading a cargo of green coffee from Brazil. This cargo consisted of 65,000 sacks averaging 125 pounds each. This, however, was only two-thirds of the boats capacity. One can scarcely conceive what that means from figures, but when one sees these sacks actually piled and stored away in the warehouses, then you begin to realize the enormity of the situation. Then when we consider that one of these boats makes this port about every ten days during the picking season, we can form some idea of the amount of coffee that is consumed within the United States. The return cargo consisted mostly of farm implements and machinery, hardware, etc. I was also informed that these same articles could be purchased much cheaper in South America than they could be purchased here while they are manufactured. So many thanks to the trusts.

Another boat was unloading fruit from Honduras for the United Fruit Company, which has large warehouses here, and which distributes fruit to nearly every part of the United States. Its history alone would fill a small book.

Sugar, cotton, tobacco and molasses are the chief agricultural exports from this port. The middle of the river at this port reaches a depth of 150 feet, while at the sides it has been dredged to a depth of 50 feet. The river has been steadily rising since November and will yet rise from 20 to 30 feet. A bend in the river here helps to make a better harbor, which is a distance of 125 miles to the coast.

There are several ferries that convey both passengers and freight across the river and one can ride all day for ten cents and see and learn something new all the time.

The principal street here is Canal street which is very wide and contains all the street car lines. There are two car tracks on each side of the street with green lawns studied with palm trees and fern like trees between. Most of the other streets seem like alleys. The St. Charles hotel and the Grunewald hotel are the finest in the city. The Monteleone ranks next. The Grunewald hotel cost over a million dollars and ranks first. The people are friendly but do not boost the city as do the citizens of Memphis and other more energetic cities.

I will write later and describe to you the Monte Gras, a sort of carnival that takes place in February, if this proves interesting enough to publish.

An old subscriber from Horton Bay, Michigan, and one who always enjoys the home news and is willing to contribute her share to help the paper along.

Respectfully Yours,
Miss Fannie A. Bewell

COLD WAVE HITS ALL OF MICHIGAN

Upper and Lower Peninsula Experience Record Low Temperature

THIRTY BELOW HERE SUNDAY NIGHT

"The Coldest Weather in Thirteen Years" Says Old Settlers

Fruit Men Do Not Believe that Any Serious Damage Has Been Done to Trees—Much Suffering in State.

Thirty degrees below zero. Charlevoix has had its legitimate share of the cold wave which has swept the state during the last week. Dispatches from all over the state say that the weather has been the coldest experienced in many years.

Groups of the oldtimers gathered on the street corners and discuss the present conditions as compared with previous winters and agree that such cold weather has not been experienced since February 12, 1891, when the thermometer is said to have registered from 25 to 30 degrees below zero. One subject of much speculation was the fact that a cold February followed a cold January this year, which has been seldom the case.

Last week was warm compared to what is coming now, but this week opened with a cold blast which increased in intensity, until the climax was reached Monday morning with thirty degrees below zero, and on Tuesday morning from 15 to 20 below.

Fruit men do not believe any serious damage has been done to trees, with exception possibly of peach trees and smaller fruits.

Marine men believe that Lake Michigan is frozen from shore to shore. Pere Marquette steamer No. 4 and Car Ferry No. 15 are frozen in the ice between Ludington and Milwaukee, and reports from the upper peninsula state that Lake Superior is frozen out for miles.

DESTROYED BY FIRE

The Copping Home Bay Shore Burned to the Ground.

Last Thursday morning the handsome comfortable home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Copping at Bay Shore was totally destroyed by fire, together with part of its furnishings. The fire had gained such headway when discovered by Mrs. Copping, who was alone at home at the time, that nothing could be done to save it.

Mr. Copping was absent at the time of the fire, attending to his duties as rural carrier, and the two children were at school. The fire originated in the second story and was burning briskly when it was discovered.

A portion of the furniture was saved as the result of prompt work on the part of the neighbors. The home was partly insured, but no estimate of the loss has been made.

WILL BUY PIANO

Young People of Baptist Church Assume the Responsibility.

Last Wednesday the Ladies Aid of the Baptist church met at the home of Mrs. A. Edwards, the members going out in a sleigh load. A pot luck supper was served and all report a good time.

During the session in the afternoon it was proposed to buy a piano for the church, the soliciting of funds to be done by the young people of the church. Anyone wishing to help the young people are given a cordial invitation to do so as the smallest donation will be thankfully received. Those attending church will find a box at the top of the stairs marked "Piano fund," in which to drop donations upon entering the church. In the near future the young people will give an entertainment, the proceeds of which will go into the piano fund.

Will Take Treatment.

W. Earl Dodd, who has been ill for some time, was taken to Traverse City last week, where he will be given special treatment at the Traverse City Hospital. Mr. Dodd's illness is due to overwork and worry over financial matters, also during the haying season last summer he was nearly overcome by the extreme heat on two different occasions. He is a hard working, honest young man and has the sympathy of his many friends and neighbors.

CALLS SPECIAL SESSION

Legislature Summoned to Meet in Lansing February 26

Consideration of Presidential Primary Law is Prime Motive of Call

As has been predicted Governor Osborn issued a call for a special session of the legislature, fixing the date of convening February 26.

The prime reason for the call is that the legislature may, if it sees fit, issue a call for a presidential primary in the state. Presidential primary is especially desired by the Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson supporters of the state, while it is understood the Tall and Harmon followers would prefer to have the issues determined at the regular state conventions.

The call, besides putting the presidential primary to the legislature, states that the body may consider whatever other matters are brought before it in special messages from the governor.

The statute limits the period of a session, extraordinary to 20 days. It may be much less than this, but it cannot continue longer.

The call bears the date February 13. The Governor on issuing the call made the following statement:

"The question of a presidential preference primary law is not a partisan one. Nevertheless the complexity of the legislature is overwhelming Republican and that party will properly receive the credit for whatever prompt legislative work is done and all good results, and likewise there will attach to the Republican party all the blame for failure, omission, personal malice, undignified procedure and all or any unworthy actions."

"It is to be hoped that all of the members of the legislature will subordinate every personal feeling and only permit public patriotism and highest principles to occupy their minds during the session. If this is the rule, a short, effective session will be the result."

WILLIAM FERGUSON

Died Monday at Home of His Sister, Mrs. George Cook.

William Ferguson, brother of Mrs. George Cook of this city, died at her home Monday evening at about eight o'clock of heart trouble.

He was born in Hamilton county, New York, in the year of 1857, and came to Charlevoix about thirty-five years ago and has since farmed in this vicinity. The services were held today from the home of George Cook, and were conducted by Rev. H. A. Putnam.

Mr. Ferguson leaves one son, Grant, and one daughter, Myrtle Griffin, both who live on farms just north of Charlevoix, besides five sisters.

RED LETTER DAY IN ANNALS OF W. C. T. U.

Was Meeting Last Friday at Home of Mrs. A. Edwards

CROWD WENT OUT IN SLEIGH LOADS

Will Hold Annual Supper in M. E. Church February 28

Topic for Meeting Was "Purity"—Many Splendid Papers Read and Discussions Were Fine

Friday afternoon, February 3, proved to be a "red letter" day in the annals of the W. C. T. U., a day long to be remembered will be the meeting at the home of Mrs. A. Edwards, two miles or so out of town.

How did all get there? Mr. Edwards and his trusty man, each with a team and big, wide bunked sleighs, met those who wished to go near the postoffice, and all had a jolly ride to their hospitable home. It was not a warm afternoon, either, but the good cheer when the crowd reached the warm fires and the welcome of the genial hostess and daughters compensated greatly for all that had gone through to reach there.

After all had thawed out, the meeting was called to order by President Alcox and was followed by singing "By and By." The devotions were led by Rev. A. Atchison. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting by the secretary, the regular routine of business was taken up. It was decided to have a supper on the 28th of February, in the basement of the M. E. church, and a committee was appointed from the several churches to look after the details, and all interested in the temperance work are urged to attend and help swell the fund, which will be given to aid in the expenses of the spring campaign.

The topic for the meeting was "Purity." Slips containing scripture texts were read by those present. "Purity in the Home" was read and Rev. and Mrs. Atchison sang appropriate selections, which was followed by readings, "The Nation and the White Slave Traffic," "Purity in Literature and Art," and singing "Throw Out the Life Line." Rev. Atchison gave a short talk on mission work and facts concerning the white slave traffic, which were interesting and enjoyed by those present.

The picnic supper was delicious, abundant and well served. Shingles covered with white napkins were used in the place of tables, and the one presented to Mrs. Alcox was appropriately tied with white ribbon, the official badge of the organization.

The ride home was enjoyed by all, and the crowd departed, with expressions of thanks to the genial host and hostess for their kind and hospitable treatment.

DEATH CAME SUDDENLY

Well-Known Charlevoix Lady Passed Away at Midnight Tuesday.

The many friends of Mrs. Forrest S. Blanchard were shocked to learn of her death, which occurred at her home on Park avenue Friday night at twelve o'clock. Although she had been ill for several weeks it was not known of the seriousness of her condition up to about ten days previous to her death. The direct cause of her death was tumor.

Jennie Tillman was born in Chicago in 1863 and had lived there up to about four and one-half years ago, when she became the wife of F. S. Blanchard of this city. She was not altogether a stranger here at the time of her marriage, as a number of her summers were spent in this city, but since living here permanently she made a host of friends, through her loving disposition and thoughtfulness toward others.

Her mother, Mrs. Charles Tallman, also an aunt from Chicago, were here at the time of her death. A cousin, Mr. McE, of Chicago, who is an undertaker took charge of the remains.

Services were held at the home Sunday afternoon, and was largely attended by the many friends of the deceased. The body was taken to Chicago Monday morning for burial.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

Snow Has Protected Wheat in all Counties of State

Stock Reported to be in Good Condition Throughout the State.

In reply to the question, "Has wheat during January suffered injury from any cause?" Seventy-seven correspondents in the southern counties answer "yes" and 243 "no"; in the central counties 11 answer "yes" and 111 "no"; in the northern counties 2 answer "yes" and 121 "no"; in the upper peninsula 1 answer "yes" and 30 "no."

Snow protected wheat in the southern counties 27 days; in the central counties 20; in the northern counties 20; in the upper peninsula 31, and in the state 28 days.

The average depth of snow on the 15th in southern counties was 5.20 inches; in the central counties 6.70; in the northern counties 11.85; in the upper peninsula 17.05; and in the state 7.73 inches.

On the 31st the average depth in the southern counties was 7.48; in the central counties 8.88; in the northern counties 15.15; in the upper peninsula 22.10; and in the state 10.21 inches.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in January at 108 flouring mills was 291,956 and at 112 elevators and to grain dealers 350,091, or a total of 642,047 bushels.

Of this amount 484,809 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties; 138,000 in the central counties and 22,111 in the northern counties and upper peninsula.

The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the six months, August-January, is 8,500,000. Sixty-four mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in January. The average condition of live stock in the state is reported as follows, comparison being with stock in good, healthy and thrifty condition: Horses and swine 95, cattle 93, and sheep 91.

How to Open Lobster.

It is not difficult to open a lobster. First separate the tail from the main part of the lobster and sink out the tomalley. The tomalley, or liver, is green after boiling and is liked by some.

Next draw the body from the shell, freeing it from the stomach, which is situated near the head, by pressing the meat near the head close against the shell with the first and second fingers.

Now split the lobster through the center and take out the meat. Cut the underside of the tail shell open with a sharp knife or scissors and remove the meat in one of two large pieces.

On taking out this meat look on the upper part near where the tail joined the body proper and lift up the small piece of flesh. Under will be found a vein running the entire length. Remove this. Often this vein or cord is the same color as the meat itself. Again it may be green. In any case, it should not be eaten. Like the stomach, it is not edible.

The easiest way to remove the meat from the claws is to crack the shell with the broad side of a hammer. This does not crush the meat.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

How to Hang Curtains.

The mistake is too often made of hanging white curtains the full width of the window and from the top to the floor, says Suburban Life for December. This treatment is unsuitable except in very dainty or elaborate rooms. The mass of white is usually distracting and destroys the harmony of the room. Perhaps the most effective treatment is to let the curtains hang straight at the sides of the window, covering the woodwork, and have a platted valance across the top. Curtains made in this way keep out very little light and give a pretty, broad effect to a window. The curtains may still. If the curtains are dark and long, straight lines seem called for they should reach to the floor, but when in doubt stop at the sill.

URIA WYANT SKIPPED

Boyne City Bootlegger was on His Way to Upper Peninsula

Was Taken Sick at Levering and is Now in Hospital at Petoskey.

As we went to press last week the attention of the court was being given to the Bricker vs. Zess case, in which a verdict was ordered for the plaintiff.

In the Watson case for violation of the liquor law, the first case was nolle prossed, but Watson was immediately rearrested on the same charge and placed under $300 bonds to appear at the next term of court.

Anoine Ance changed his plea of guilty to not guilty, and was bound over to the next term of court under $100 bonds.

Uria Wyant, up for violating the liquor law and who had plead guilty to the charge and was to have been sentenced, failed to put in an appearance, and his bondsmen were compelled to pay the amount of his bonds, which was $300. Later it developed that he had skipped, and, while on his way to the upper peninsula, was taken sick at Levering. He was brought from there to Petoskey and placed in the hospital, where he was found to be suffering from a severe attack of appendicitis. He was operated upon, and is now in critical condition, with little hopes of recovery. Sheriff Robbins was informed of the fact that a man answering Wyant's description had been placed in the hospital, and soon learned that it was his man.

Jesse Sweet, who was a clerk of Wyant's and who plead guilty to the same charge, was sentenced by the court to ninety days in the Detroit House of Correction, and fined $25.

A decree of divorce was granted to the Freeman case, Mrs. Freeman being allowed the custody of the ten year old girl.

COMING FEBRUARY 26.

Monday, February 26th, is the date when J. Lealty, the Optometrist, will be at Baker's tin, one day only. Headache cured, crossed eyes straightened, fitting children's eyes a specialty. Glasses guaranteed to fit.

RULES FOR CURING MEAT.

Preparing in Brine Most Desirable For Average Farm Conditions.

All meat that is to go into the curing vessel must be thoroughly cooled before it is packed. It is also well to let it cool thoroughly before attempting to cut it into convenient pieces, because it is firmer and can be cut into much smoother pieces than when it is warm.

Pork may be dry salted, or cured in brine, the latter being the most desirable for average farm conditions, because it requires less attention and takes up less room. When pork is dry cured it is necessary to rehandle the meat and rub it several times with the curing materials used. With the brine process, the meat is put in the vessel, the brine poured over it, and it will not be necessary to handle it again until it is ready to be taken out and smoked.

In cutting the pork, trim all parts smoothly, and remove all seraggy portions, as they can be used to advantage for sausage meat while fresh, but are wasted if put through the curing process. In trimming the hams and shoulders, expose as little of the lean meat as is necessary, because the action of the salt while in process of curing will make the lean meat hard.

After all pieces of meat have been properly cooled and trimmed, take each piece separately and rub it all over with salt and lay it aside for twenty-four hours. After the salt has been absorbed, pack it into a vessel—straw barrel or any other barrel that has been properly cleaned. Pack the meat in lightly, putting the hams and shoulders at the bottom. Weigh out, for each 100 pounds of meat, ten pounds of salt, four pounds of brown sugar and two ounces of saltpeter. Dissolve this in four gallons of boiling water. Stir it well, so that all the salt and sugar will be dissolved. Let it stand until cool, and then pour over the meat. This amount of water should be sufficient to cover well the meat in the vessel.

Put a round wooden cover over the top and weight it down with a stone so, as to keep all the meat under the brine, but if not sufficient brine add enough to cover the meat. Put the vessel in some cool place and let it stand for from six to eight weeks, when the meat will be ready to be taken out of the brine and smoked or used. It may be left in the brine for a longer time if desired. The use of sugar in brine keeps the lean meat from getting hard and also adds a sweet flavor to the meat. The small amount of saltpeter is used to retain the natural color of the meat.—Colon's Rural World.

Wessner looked away, mumbling, "But I don't want to hurt you, Freckles."

"Oh, don't you," raged the boy. "Well, you don't resemble me none for I'm itchin' like death to get me fingers in the face of you."

He danced up and, as Wessner lunged out in self defense, ducked under his arm, like a bantam and punched him in the pit of the stomach, so that he doubled up with a groan. Before Wessner could straighten him self Freckles was on him, fighting like the wildest fury. The Hutchinson dealt thundering blows that sometimes landed and sent Freckles reeling and sometimes missed, while he went plunging him the while with the impetus of them. Freckles could not strike with half Wessner's force, but he could land three blows in Wessner's one. It was here that Freckles' days of alert watching on the line, the perpetual swishing of the heavy oar and the endurance of all weather about him in good stead, for he was as tough as a pine knot and as agile as a panther. He danced, ducked and dodged. For the first five minutes he endured fearful punishment. Then Wessner's breath commenced to whistle between his teeth, when Freckles had only just begun fighting. He sprang back with shrill laughter.

"Regolly, and will your honor be whistling the hornpipe for me to be dancing off?" he cried.

Spunk went his fist into Wessner's face, and he was past him into the swamp.

"And would you be pleased to time up a little livelier?" he gasped and clipped his ear as he sprang back. Wessner lunged at him in blind fury. Freckles, seeing an opening, forgot the laws of a gentleman's game and drove the toe of his heavy wading boot into Wessner's middle until he doubled up and fell heavily. In a flash Freckles was on him. For a time McLean could not see what was happening. "Go to him now," he commanded him self, but so intense was his desire to see the boy win alone that he could not stir.

At last Freckles sprang up and backed away. "Time," he yelled like a fury. "He getting up, Mr. Wessner, and don't be afraid of hurting me, I'll let you throw in an extra hand and tick you to me complete satisfaction, all the same. Did you hear me call the time? Will you get up and tick me?"

As Wessner struggled to his feet he resembled a battlefield, for his clothing was in ribbons and his face and hands streaming blood.

"I-I guess I got enough," he mumbled.

"Oh, do you?" roared Freckles. "Well, this ain't your say. You come on to me ground lying about me loss and intumescence. I'd state from his very pockets. Now, will you be standing up and taking your medicine like a man or getting it poured down the throat of you like a baby? I ain't got enough. This is only just the beginning with me. He looking out there?"

He sprang against Wessner and sent him rolling. He attacked the unconscious figure and fought him until he lay flat and still and Freckles but no strength left to lift an arm. Then he rose and stepped back, gasping for breath. With his first good lungful of air he shouted, "Time." But the figure of Wessner lay motionless.

Freckles watched him with regardful eye and saw at last that he was completely exhausted. "He bent over him and, catching him by the back of the neck, jerked him to his knees. Wessner lifted the face of a whipped cur and, fearing further punishment, burst into great shivering sobs, while the tears washed tiny rivulets through the blood and muck. Freckles stepped back, glaring at Wessner, but suddenly the sword of anger and the ugly, disgusting red faded from the boy's face. He dabbed at a cut on his temple, from which issued a tiny crimson stream, and faintly shook back his hair. His face took on the innocent look of a cherub, and his voice revealed that of a brooding dove, but into his eyes crept a look of diabolical mischief.

He glanced vaguely about him until he saw his club, seized and twirled it like a drum major, stuck it upright in the muck and marched on tiptoe over to Wessner mechanically, as a puppet worked by a string. Bending over, Freckles reached an arm about Wessner's wrist and helped him to his feet.

"Careful, now," he cautioned; "be careful, Freddy. There's danger of you hurting me."

Fishing a handkerchief from a back pocket, Freckles tenderly wiped Wessner's eyes and nose.

"Come, Freddy, me child," he admonished Wessner; "it's time little boys were getting home. I've me work to do and can't be entertaining you any more today. Come back tomorrow if you ain't through yet and we'll repeat the performance."

Again an awful wrenching seized McLean. Freckles stepped back as Wessner, uttering and reeling like a thoroughly drunken man, came toward the path, looking indeed as if wildcats had taken their fill of him.

The cudgel sprang into the air, and catching it with an expertness no other boy could have done, he lunged at Freckles on the line, the boy twirled it a second and, stepping out into the trail, followed Wessner. Freckles was Irish it was impossible to do it silently, and presently his clear tenor rang out, though there were bad catches where he was lured across for breath.

"It was the Dutch? It was the Dutch. To you think it was the Irish hollerer help? Not much."

Wessner turned and mumbled: "What you following me for? What are you going to do with me?"

Freckles called the lumberjack to witness. "How's that for the ingratitude of a beast? And me troubling myself to show him off the territory with the honors of war!"

Then he changed his tone completely and added: "Belike it's this, Freddy. You see, the boss ought come riding down this trail any minute, and the little mair's so wheelhouse that it she'd come on to you in your present state all of a sudden she'd stop that short she'd send Mr. McLean out over the ears of her. No disparagement intended to the slane of the mair," he added lastly.

Wessner belched a fearful oath, and Freckles laughed merrily.

"That's a sample of the thanks a generous act's always for getting," he continued. "Here's me neglectin' me work to escort you out proper, and you sayin' such awful words. Freddy," he demanded sternly, "do you want me to soap out your mouth? You don't seem to be realizing it, but if you was to huck into Mr. McLean in your present state without me there to explain matters the chance is he'd cut the liver out of you, and I shouldn't think you'd be wanting such a fine gentleman as him to see that it's white."

Wessner grew ghastly under his grime and broke into a staggering run. Freckles twisted the hunk and stood like a soldier at "attention" until Wessner left the clearing, but it was the last scene of that performance. When the last thrust there was a deathly illness in his face, and his legs wavered like reeds beneath his weight. He staggered back to the case, and opening it, he took out a piece of cloth. He dipped it into the water and, sitting on a bench, he wiped the blood and grime from his face, while his breath sucked between his clenched teeth. He was shivering with pain and excitement in spite of himself. He unbuttoned the band of his right sleeve, and, turning it back, exposed the blue fluid, calloused whiteness of his maimed arm, now vividly streaked with contusions, while in a series of circular dots the blood oozed slowly. Here Wessner had succeeded in setting his teeth. When Freckles saw what it was he forgave himself the kick in the pit of Wessner's stomach.

"Freckles, Freckles," said McLean's voice.

Freckles snatched down his sleeve and rose to his feet.

"Excuse me, sir," he said. "You'll surely be belayin' I thought myself alone."

McLean rushed him carefully to the seat and, bending over him, opened a pocket case that he carried as regularly as his revolver and watch, for cuts and bruises were of daily occurrence among the gang.

Taking the hurt arm, he turned back the sleeve and bathed and bound up the wounds. He examined Freckles' head and body and convinced himself that there was no permanent injury.

Then he sat down beside Freckles. All the indescribable beauty of the place was strong about him, but he saw only the bruised face of the suffering boy, who had hedged for the information he wanted like a diplomat, argued like a judge, fought like a shelm and triumphed like a devil.

As the pain lessened and breath caught up with Freckles' pounding heart he watched the boss from the tail of his eye. How long had he been there, and how long had he been there? Freckles did not dare ask. At last he arose and, going to the case, took out his revolver and the wire mending apparatus and locked the door. Then he turned to McLean.

"Have you any orders, sir?" he asked.

"Yes," said McLean. "I have, and you are to follow them to the letter. Turn over that apparatus to me and go straight home. Soak yourself in the hottest bath your skin will bear and go to bed at once. Now, hurry."

"Mr. McLean," said Freckles, "it's sorry I am to be telling you, but the afternoon's walking of the line ain't done. You see, I was just for getting to me feet to start, and I was on my way when you came a gentleman, and we got into a little heated argument. It's either settled or it's begun, but between us I'm that late I haven't started for the afternoon yet. I must be going at once, for there's a tree I must find before the day's over."

"You plucky little idiot," growled McLean, "you can't walk the line! I doubt if you can get to Duncan's. Don't you know when you are done up? You go to bed. I'll finish your work."

"Never!" protested Freckles. "I was just a little done up for the present a minute ago. I'm all right now. My legs feels as if they were ready for business. She and the boss laid Freckles in a trough and poured on hot water until he sprang. They soaked, rubbed and soaped him. They they set the hot water off and closed his pores with cold. Lastly they stretched him on the floor and chafed, rubbed and kneaded him until he cried out for mercy. As they rolled him into bed his eyes dropped shut, but a little later they flared open.

"Mr. McLean," he cried, "the tree? Oh, do be looking after the tree!"

McLean bent over him. "Which tree, Freckles?"

"I don't know exact, sir, but it's on the east line, and the wire is fastened to it. He bragged that you nailed it yourself, sir. You'll know it by the bark having been laid open to the grain somewhere low down, and it was $500 he offered me to be selling you out—sir!"

Freckles' head rolled over and his eyes dropped shut. McLean's mind traveled back to the night almost a year before when he had engaged Freckles, a stranger.

McLean bent, covering the hurt arm with one hand and laying the other with a carress on the boy's forehead. Freckles stirred at his touch and twined as softly as the swallows under the eaves.

"If you're coming this way tomorrow—be pleased to stop over—and we'll repeat the chorus softly."

"Bless the grifty devil," growled Mr. McLean.

Then he went out and told Mrs. Duncan to keep close watch on Freckles and send Duncan to him at the swamp the minute he came home. Following the trail down to the line and back to the scene of the fight, the boss entered Freckles' study softly, as if his spirit sleeping there might be roused, and gazed about with astonished eyes.

How had the boy concealed it? What a picture he had wrought in living colors! He had the heart of a gambler; he had the soul of a poet. The boss stepped carefully over the velvet carpet and touched the walls of crisp verdure with gentle fingers. He stood long beside the flower bed and gazed at the lashed wall of bright flowers as if he could never leave it.

How Cold Affects the Kidneys

Avoid taking cold if your kidneys are sensitive. Cold congests the kidneys, throws too much work upon them, and weakens their action. Serious kidney trouble and even Bright disease may result. Strengthen your kidneys, get rid of the pain and soreness, build them up by the timely use of Foley's Kidney Pills. Tonic in action, quick in results.

Foley's Kidney Pills will cure any case of kidney or bladder trouble not beyond the reach of medicine. No medicine can do more.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

How to Wear Your Jewels to Most Advantage.

While the average woman will spend little care over the choosing of her dress, her color, its texture, its fit and, above all, its suitability as regards her own complexion, there are few who are half as careful over the choice of jewelry they intend to wear.

Rubies should be worn only by dark haired, dark eyed women. They lose their beauty if accompanying a complexion of lilacs and roses and hair like spun gold. The woman whom the latter description fits will find the turquoise the stone par excellence for her. The fair complexioned woman who has dark eyes will find garnets becoming.

Every woman should study the color of her eyes when choosing jewelry. Thus a woman with light eyes should never wear emeralds, as these detract from the color and render the eyes almost lifeless looking. On the other hand, a woman with dark eyes will find if she wears corals that her eyes seem to have increased a hundred times in brilliancy. A fair woman may wear pearls, moonstones, sapphires, opals and the exquisitely colored beryl stone, while amethysts are becoming to the woman with warm lights of gold in her hair.

Dark women look best wearing rubies, emeralds, garnets, jacinths, topazes, amber and pink coral, but sapphires should be left to the fair women. Nearly all women can wear diamonds, but she who has a sallow skin will be well advised not to wear these stones unrelieved. Rubies and diamonds mingled with sapphires are a charming mixture for her whose skin is fair.

Now that earrings have again come into fashion women of all ages and of all ranks of life have taken to wearing them, quite regardless of the fact as to whether they are becoming or not. This, again, is an instance where woman's love of dandy has overcome her better judgment. Women with large, prominent or ill shaped ears should never don this style of ornament, and a long ear, even though it is exquisitely shaped, is not improved by the addition of earrings. On the other hand, a tiny, shell-like ear is beautified if dainty drops are worn. The oriental style of earring should be worn by that type of woman who can only be described as exotic, and diamonds give a harsh appearance if the skin is at all inclined to be sallow.

In the Art Gallery.

"Ah," exclaimed Mrs. Oldcastle, who was again enjoying the splendors of her new neighbor's art gallery, "Cor! I see!"

"Where?" asked her hostess, looking doubtfully at the canvas which seemed to claim the other's attention.

"There," answered Mrs. Oldcastle, pointing with her forefinger.

"Well, now, I declare. I can't see a single crow anywhere around. You don't mean them little black spots in the left hand corner, do you? Those 'clouds'?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.

Ironton Grange, No. 707, met in their rooms on Tuesday, February 6th, with a large attendance and three visitors, one from Marion and two from Wilson, the Wilson visitors being the delegates.

A good dinner was served, after which the meeting was called to order. Two applications were received for membership. Two candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

Bro. John Knudsen was reelected degree captain and a new degree team was started doing the work fine for the first time. A fine program was given for lecturer's hour. A report from the delegate was also very interesting. There will be a Leap Year dance at the hall on February 22.

The next meeting will be in two weeks in the day time to commence in the forenoon at 10 o'clock. Dinner at noon. Lecturer's program and visiting in the afternoon.

First LaGrippe, than Bronchitis

That was the case with Mrs. W. S. Bailey, McCreary, Ky. "My wife was taken down with a severe attack of la grippe, which runs into bronchitis. She coughed as though she had consumption and could not sleep at night. The first bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave her so much relief that she continued using it until she was permanently cured."

A Warning Against Wet Feet.

Wet and chilled feet usually affect the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, and la grippe, bronchitis or pneumonia may result. Watch carefully, particularly the children, and for the racking stubborn coughs give Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It soothes the inflamed membranes, and heals the cough quickly. Take no substitute.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange, No. 719 met in regular session Saturday, February 10, 1912.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Geo. Japnays. Owing to stormy weather and sickness only twenty members were present.

During the business session the dance committee reported $15.65 as receipts from last dance.

The master appointed as members of the executive committee—Robert Shepard, Jasper Warden and E. S. Hinton.

The secretary read a communication in regard to the postponement of Pomona grange at Rock Elm from February 1st to 15th.

It was suggested by the worthy master that in balloting for candidates we ballot according to the new ritual.

The lecturer's hour was taken up by songs, readings, recitations and an interesting account by the worthy master on what he saw while visiting the Cocon Cereal factory at Battle Creek.

Grange closed in form to meet in two weeks.

Charlevoix Grange No. 1526

Charlevoix Grange met in regular session at the I. O. O. F. hall Monday evening with an attendance of seventy. Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Hammond were received as charter members.

Our charter and new supplies have arrived and we are now ready for business. Ironton grange was present with the degree team, and exemplified the third and fourth degrees in a very pleasing manner. The members of the grange wish to express their thanks to the Marion grange members who assisted with the program.

Lecturer's hour consisted of the following: Instrumental music, Sister Martha Dutton. Recitation, Sister Paquette of Marion. Song, "The Scotch Roses," Brother Walter Black.

Unwritten work, Brother E. B. Ward. Address, Abraham Lincoln, R. W. Paddock. Instrumental music, Sister Martha Dutton.

Grange closed in due form, after which refreshments were served by Brothers Usher, Dutton and others. Visitors were present from Norwood, Marion, Ironton granges. Come again—visitors are always welcome.

The next meeting will be held February 26.

SOME GOOD ROAD POINTERS.

Suggestions to Supervisors on the Care of Highways.

SIMPLE BUT USEFUL DON'TS.

Expert Tells How to Keep a Road in Good Condition and Avoid Trouble. Don't Be Satisfied, He Says, With Anything but the Best.

Excellent advice on the care and construction of roads is contained in the following set of suggestions to road supervisors, which were compiled by Robert A. Meeker, state supervisor of roads in New Jersey.

Don't leave grass and weeds on the shoulders and in the gutters. Don't dig the mud out of the gutters and throw it upon the road. Don't leave dirt in piles on the road. Don't throw grass and weeds upon the road surface.

Don't dump stone or gravel on an old road without first preparing the surface to receive it, because you thereby cause willful waste and needless work. Don't place new material on the road without leveling and shaping it so that the grade and cross section of the road will be unchanged.

Don't expect travel to spread and roll the new material. One-half of the money spent is wasted by this method.

Don't put new material on an old hard road surface before first picking or loosening the old covering.

It is suggested by the worthy master that in balloting for candidates we ballot according to the new ritual.

The lecturer's hour was taken up by songs, readings, recitations and an interesting account by the worthy master on what he saw while visiting the Cocon Cereal factory at Battle Creek.

FINE FOR ODD JOBS.

Take Your Little House With You When You Work About the Farm.

For many jobs in the fall and winter a portable house to use as a shelter will be of great advantage. The same idea may be applied to a pea for use in a creel of a sow farrowing in the field or for a portable house for chickens or turkeys to be moved about the farm. In fact, the same building may be applied to all three purposes with success.

Build the floor the size you wish and make as strong as possible. Slightly back from the center an axle is placed, which can be made of a 4 by 4 scant.

PORTABLE HOUSE.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

Bag and fitted with two old wheels for moving the house. A short tongue is placed on one end, which is fastened behind a wagon when moving the building. Under the tongue a block is placed when it is desired to use the building upon wheels, as a husking corn in the fields in cold weather.

The building is erected above the floor, and if for corn husking alone the walls may be canvas, painted to keep out the rain, with a small bench built at one end for the stalks to lie upon, with hooks for strings. This makes it a comfortable working place as can be desired and with the advantage that it can be moved from one end of the field to the other as needed.

Where built for a threefold purpose the walls should be made of light boards or at least the lower part of walls and the roof of light lumber or canvas. When used as a pen for hogs or fowls it is moved to the proper place and the wheels removed, thus resting the building on the axle, and by replacing wheels it can again be moved to a new location, as desired.—American Agriculturist.

REP. PEARSON AS WE SEE HIM

Refreshing to Stumble Across a Man Who Knows Himself.

HE CALLS A SPADE A SPADE

Does Not Resort to Hypocrisy or Cant,
But States His Position.

Will Be Choice of People of Charlevoix County to Succeed Himself as Representative—
Where He Stands.

Deprived, quite mercifully of the power of seeing ourselves as other see us, we still retain the consolation of seeing ourselves as we see ourselves—which, in various circumstances, helps some.

At that, the extreme clarity of vision that enables us to diagnose our own disposition and the dispositions destiny has made of us, in exact accordance with the facts is given to few. Most of the race when estimating personal attributes, err on the side of complacency and congratulation. We think we are better and bigger and braver than we are really. We are pulled up, mistaken in detail, dishonest in deduction. We are no stern critics of ourselves, but pleasant back-patters rarely getting at the personal truth.

Bearing this in mind, how refreshing it is to stumble across a man who knows himself; a man who appreciates himself at his real worth, who sizes himself as he is, who modestly but comprehensively sets down his intimate attributes as he has found them, so that all the world may see; a man who is under no delusions, who has studied himself and who, without waste of language or striving for effect, says: "Have a look! This is myself as observed by myself. Here I am gentlemen, just as I am."

Modesty and greatness go hand in hand. Quibblers may say every modest man is not a great man, nor is every great man modest; but neither claim proves anything, for to be truly modest is to be great and to be truly great is to be modest.

And among the many men who go to make up our state legislature, there looms up one who has an adequate conception of himself, who reads himself as an open book, and having nothing to conceal, is not afraid to tell from a public platform what he has done, in what he has failed, and whether or not he would again do likewise if given an opportunity.

We call your attention to the Honorable William J. Pearson, representative in the state legislature from our county. Here is a man who knows himself, who speaks straight from the shoulder, and who is not afraid to call a spade a spade.

"Bill" as we call him, was given an invitation to address the Men's Bible class of this city, at its regular meeting last Sunday. He came, spoke. He made it clear to every man in the audience just where he stood on the leading question of the day—that of local option. In fact, he stated that he had to go to the legislature before he was convinced that he was a local option man. In a few words he told of the tactics used by the brewery interests to put through the Ormsby bill, and of the pressure brought to bear to influence him to vote for its passage. The history of this bill is known to all. And it carried, all liquor legislation passed since Michigan was admitted to statehood would have been completely wiped out. It was cleverly worded, its true meaning carefully concealed, and would have passed had it not been for the opposition of men of the character of our representative.

Next came the Warner-Crampton bill, upon which he voted favorably, and which is now a law upon our statute books. Again in an effort to regain lost ground, the liquor interests framed up what was called the Unit bill, which had the solid backing of the liquor forces of the state, together with a strong following of men supposed to be in favor of anti-liquor legislation. In fact, it was the final effort of the liquor interests to obliterate the whole state.

Had it passed it would have allowed a saloon in every township, village or city, in which there was a majority on the liquor side. Representative Pearson was on the liquor committee at the time this bill was brought out, and through his efforts it was forced back into the committee's hands, laid on the table, where it will never again be brought to light.

Representative Pearson is no extremist in his political or local option views. To him a public question always has two—or several—sides, and instead of arbitrarily taking one side or the other, thereby making clear the assumption that those who have taken the other side may be wrong, he has always refrained from hurrying the feelings of any citizen. It has always been his contention that there is virtue in each angle of a public discussion. If a man is against local option he believes, not in making no enemy of him, but in helping him overcome his prejudices and educate him to view the question in the right light.

He said in part: "You cannot legislate a man's appetite, nor can you abolish all liquor traffic in the state until we have the moral support of all citizens, but we can educate them to realize that the open saloon is a menace to public safety, and when the time arrives for state wide local option, I assure you I am with you, and pledge my support for the utter abolition of all liquor traffic in the state."

This is where Representative Pearson stands on the liquor question. He does not resort to the hypocrisy, cant and humbuggery that a lot of his associates in the legislature resort to, either to cover up what they really are or to force themselves in where they do not belong. He is exactly the kind of a legislator we want, and we believe us, will send him back this fall for a third term. He is ambitious; too, and you can never tell where an ambitious man, backed by brains and individuality, will land.

LECTURE HOUR WAS INSTRUCTIVE

Topic One Which Should be Thoroughly Discussed by All

Sixteen Granges in the County With a Membership of Nearly One Thousand.

On February 15 Charlevoix Pomona Grange held a very successful meeting with Rock Elm Grange. After a short business session in the forenoon, a very fine dinner was served the ladies of the grange.

After dinner the several committees reported. The committee on subordinate granges reported that there were sixteen granges in Charlevoix county with a membership of nearly 1,000.

The afternoon was largely taken up with the lecturer's program, which was one of the most instructive and entertaining ever given at a pomona meeting. The subject, "Is it Profitable to Buy or Traveling Peddlers," was discussed at some length. W. C. Spring of East Jordan, gave a very interesting talk on the subject.

The music for the afternoon session was furnished by the Ironton Grange. In the evening the Marion Center degree team initiated a class of ten into the fifth degree.

The next meeting will be held with Wilson Grange.

PROGRAM WAS A PERFECT ONE

Fourth Annual Banquet of the Charlevoix
Historical Society

Dining Room Gracefully Decorated With English
Ivy and Carnations.

The fourth annual banquet of the Charlevoix Historical society was given at the Baker's Inn last Friday evening, February 16. At eight o'clock the doors of the dining room were opened, displaying tables most beautifully decorated with sprays of English ivy, alternating with the leaves prettily scattered in between, while vases of bright carnations adorned the center. At each plate a sentinel in form of a pink carnation guarded the menu and program card.

Prayer was offered by Rev. H. A. Putnam, after which all was ready for the fine supper, and a happier assemblage was never seen.

Under the efficient supervision of Mrs. Beaubien and assistants, with the sons and young friends of the members of the society, who so beautifully served, the program opened at nine o'clock.

The program was in honor of the great men of February—our presidents—Washington and Lincoln, and poets Longfellow, Lowell and Poe. To make the program a perfect one, a noble woman, Susan B. Anthony, was introduced to complete the number. The president of the society, Mr. R. W. Kane gave the address of welcome in a few happy remarks, and introduced the toastmistress of the evening, Mrs. H. S. Harsha, who most gracefully presided. With wit and humor she introduced the speakers.

George Washington was finely responded to by Mr. Lisle Shanahan.

Music—Vocal selection by the male quartette, Messrs. Wilkinson and Hines, was greatly enjoyed, and the hearty applause brought an added pleasure in a second selection.

Susan B. Anthony was splendidly responded to by Mrs. R. B. Armstrong.

Abraham Lincoln, by Rev. H. A. Putnam, was responded to in a forceful and inspiring way, greatly to the pleasure of all.

To the toastmistress fell the honor of responding to the poets, Longfellow, Lowell and Poe, which she did in a few brief and appropriate words, giving a short sketch of each.

President R. W. Kane expressed the appreciation of all to the chairman of the executive committee, and to those who had contributed to the evening's entertainment, and also to Mr. and Mrs. Beaubien for their fine banquet.

For the bright, spirited music of the evening, all are indebted to the City Orchestra, who opened the banquet and furnished the evening's music.

With the singing of "America," the audience dispersed.

STATE ROUND-UP INSTITUTE

Will be Held at State Agricultural College February 27 to March 1st.

The Michigan State Round-Up Farmers' Institute will be held at the Agricultural College in Lansing from February 27 to March 1st. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend and the program will be one of unusual interest, and no farmer should miss hearing the addresses. Particular attention will be given to the soil and its improvement. The lectures of Professors Jeffrey, Marshall and Shoemaker deal exclusively with this subject and Dr. C. G. Hopkins, the soil expert of Illinois, will give three addresses along this line. If the teaching of the institute will be followed out by farmers throughout the state, it will do much to solve the question of farm labor, as by the use of better methods, farmers will be able to grow as much on 40 acres as they now obtain from 80 acres, with but little more than one-half the labor. Arrangements have also been made for exhibitions of spraying machines and supplies, which will be the largest ever held in Michigan.

HAS NO FEAR AS TO THE RESULTS

Congressman Francis H. Dodds Not Worrying Over Political Outlook

What the People Like Best About Mr. Dodds Is That He is Dependable and Honest.

The following interview given out by Congressman Francis H. Dodds has appeared in several of the metropolitan papers:

"Yes, I have learned of the candidacy of Mr. Alward, and while it is a surprise to me—as I have considered him a friend politically and otherwise—I have no fear as to what the results will be in the primary. It is known throughout my district that I am a candidate for renomination, and I know the sentiment therein, and I know there is no general demand nor any considerable demand for the candidacy of any one against me. What I have accomplished for my district is an open book; and few, knowing the facts, would try to disparage either my efforts or their results. I have worked hard and faithfully. I have at all times given strict attention to my duties as congressman, and feel sure that I have been right upon the great questions that have been considered during my brief service. The soldiers of my district know this, the farmers of my district know this, and the other good people of my district know this. They also know that I have had their welfare in mind at all times, and that I have always done what I have believed to be for their best interests, and knowing this, I am satisfied that they will not forget me when they go in the primary in August."

It is a good record—an unusually excellent record—that F. H. Dodds has made in congress. He has not been loafing on the job down there—that's not his nature; but he works, everlastingly busy in the service of his constituents. He is capable and is surely recognized as one of the strong men of the Michigan delegation.

But what our people like best about Mr. Dodds is the fact that he is dependable and honest. He is worthy of our absolute confidence. He is a man, four square to the whole world, respectable and respected in the estimation of all people. To support such a man in a political contest will never give cause for regret.

CALLED TO HER MAKER

Mrs. Charles H. Stevens Passes Away After Extended Illness.

Mrs. Charles H. Stevens, a well known resident of Marion township died at her home Saturday, February 17, after an illness of about two months.

Barbara Coleman was born in New York city, November 12, 1853. When still a child she moved with her parents to their home near Elk Rapids, where she lived until her marriage to Charles H. Stevens in 1873, when they settled on a farm near Phelps, where she lived until her death. She was the mother of seven children, six of whom together with the husband live to mourn their loss, Mabel, Hazel, Lela, Charles, Mrs. John McElroy of Phelps, and Mrs. R. Maddock of East Jordan. Besides these she leaves her aged father and three brothers.

In 1905 she became a member of the Apostolic Holiness church of Phelps and since baptized has been a consecrated Christian worker in the church and community.

The services were held from the home, Rev. C. Spear of Ellsworth officiating. The text was taken from the Revelation 11: "Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Will Put on a Play.

The members of Ironton Grange are making great preparations for a play, which will be put on Friday evening, March 1, in their hall at Ironton. The title of the play is "Arthur's Justice," or "A Mother's Love." All members taking part have worked hard to make it an interesting and enjoyable crowd.

MET AT EAST JORDAN

Local Option Meeting Last Wednesday Was Well Attended.

The local option meeting held at East Jordan last Wednesday was well attended, all parts of the county being represented. The meeting showed good organization and the perfect harmony that is only apparent when all are working for a single purpose.

Politics and outside help will not enter into the contest. The fight will be supported and carried on entirely by the people of Charlevoix county.

At the executive session plans were devised for carrying on an aggressive campaign against the brewery interests, and also methods of raising the necessary money for the campaign. At the public meeting in the afternoon, addresses were made by men from all parts of the county, and many amusing incidents were related illustrating the underhanded methods used by the saloon adherents in securing signatures to their petition to the board of supervisors.

Those attending from this city were R. W. Kane, E. H. Thomas, John Burns, B. P. and Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, E. S. Stacks and A. B. Clark.

MONUMENT TO ITS ORIGINATORS

Men's Bible Class Has Grown Beyond
All Expectations.

Ninety-nine Present at Second Banquet Held at
M. E. Church Tuesday Evening.

Ninety-nine men of the city of Charlevoix, some members, others who intend to become members, but all interested in the work of the class and the welfare of the community, gathered last evening, in the parlors of the M. E. Church, to attend the second banquet given under the auspices of the Men's Bible class.

After all had done justice to the tempting viands set before them, President F. J. Neech introduced as toast master, A. L. Conter, who in a few brief remarks, stated that the class had grown greatly beyond the expectations of those who are responsible for its organization, also that the class will stand as a monument to its originators. He spoke of the good work accomplished and of the interest shown by men who before never took an interest in the welfare of the community. Then followed the opening number of the evening program:

Song, by the Wilkinson Quartette.
"To What Extent is it Advisable to Discuss Political, Economical and Sociological Topics Before the Class," Hon. A. Butters.

"The Church," S. A. Brown.

"Religion and the Church," Floyd Bettes.

"What True Socialism is and How it Should be Attained," J. S. Felt.

"Civic Righteousness," R. W. Pad.

dock.

"If Local Option is a Failure, What Remedy Will Apply," R. W. Kane.

At the conclusion, Judge J. M. Harris commended the work being accomplished by the class, and stated that in his home city they had organized a class of the same nature.

BOOSTERS WILL FEED

Loosing Side in K. of P. Attendance Contest to Serve Supper.

According to the terms of the attendance contest recently closed in the K. of P. lodge, the "Boosters" will banquet the winning side, the "Boasters," at their hall Thursday evening, February 22. The Boosters will kill the fatted calf and do all in their power to satisfy the ravenous appetites of their victorious opponents.

A special invitation is extended to all members to be present, especially the new candidates. Bring along your wives, sweethearts, mother-in-laws, etc., and do not eat your supper before you come—there will be a great plenty for all.

Our People Are Progressive in Thought, Progressive in Mode of Life, and Progressive

The unpeopled deserts of distant lands are calling for settlers to redeem the unfracked wilderness. Their cry for pioneers echoes all through the advertising columns of current journalism with a persistence that bespeaks their dire necessity for men—a necessity which has been capitalized by the conscienceless land shark into greed-glutted promises that are alluring in their baseless optimism and that are as empty as they are seductive. No wonder that this plea for Yankee patriots to become expatriated should be impressively presented with particular emphasis to the farmers of Michigan! No wonder, we say, because Michigan's farm citizenship is of that splendid, stalwart calibre that would help give any distant state an ultimate supremacy; that would draw from any sombre soil such crops as Michigan's progressive agriculturists have already coaxed, for a century, from the fruitful lands of God's richly blessed peninsula.

But before you respond to the call of the wild, reader, take faithful inventory of what you leave behind, and ask for proof from any claim that claims superiority to Michigan—superiority in commerce, superiority in equipment, superiority in happy living.

Before you conclude to step back one hundred years, remember that the fruits of pioneer ship go to the generations of tomorrow and that no new land can progress in the single century of the future, beyond the splendid development of Michigan today.

If you are honest with yourself and with your state—with full credit to the glories of those kingdoms under other suns, but with no less credit to the beloved empire of mighty Michigan—you will join the chorus of home conservation.

"Remain in Michigan!"

You will—in the fullness of appreciation for opportunity no longer latent—send the tidings of Wolverine supremacy of "Citizenship beyond our borders; and with the enthusiasm of the missionary who knows the virtue in his message of redemption, you will support the invitation which we send to others in the American brotherhood who may be tempted by these mythical tales of distant impossibilities.

"Come to Michigan!"

What land could offer more?

Where grows such fruit as here? Never did luscious Michigan peach want for immediate market. Never did it fail to challenge the admiration of the connoisseur. Never did it fail to outbid all competitors in the affections of the world. Where and how could a finer peach spring from man-tilled soil? Here is the modern Garden of Hesperides—home of the golden apple—more fit today to challenge the labors of Hercules than in the mythology of a thousand centuries ago!

More than the lurid prophecy of a self-seeking advertisement must be in evidence to prove a richer harvest field!

Where spring more consistent and glorious crops? Consult the census bureau for your demonstration. Michigan stands out as a Colossus among the leaders in a

Wm. S. Morse has opened up a meat market in connection with the Corner Grocer, and has a good supply of meats of all kinds always on hand. A trial order will convince you that his meats are of the highest class. He asks for a share of your patronage. All orders will be promptly delivered.

YOUR DRUGGIST STOPS THAT ITCH

If you are suffering from Eczema, Psoriasis or any other kind of skin trouble, drop into our store for instant relief. We will guarantee you to stop that itch in two seconds.

A one trial bottle will prove it.

We have sold other remedies for skin troubles, but none that we could recommend more highly than the well-known compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol and a few other ingredients that have wrought such wonderful cures all over the country.

This compound, known as D. D. D. Prescription, will cool and beat the itching, burning skin as nothing else can. Get a regular bottle and see—on our no-pay offer.

FOR DYSPEPSIA

You Risk No Money if You Try This Remedy.

We want everyone troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia to come to our store and obtain a box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. They contain Bismuth Subnitrate and Pepsin carefully combined so as to develop their greatest power to overcome digestive disturbance.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are very pleasant to take. They tend to soothe the irritable weak stomach, to strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, to relieve nausea and indigestion, thus promoting nutrition and bringing about a feeling of comfort.

If you give Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets a reasonable trial we will return your money if you are not satisfied with the result. Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

FREE IF IT FAILS

You Money Back if You are Not Satisfied With the Medicine We Recommend.

We are so positive that our medicine will permanently relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine at our expense should it fail to produce satisfactory results.

It is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartics. Cathartics or purgatives do much harm. They once a reaction, irritate and weaken the bowels and tend to make constipation more chronic. Besides, their use becomes a habit that is dangerous.

Constipation is caused by a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or descending colon. To expect permanent relief you must therefore tone up and strengthen these organs and restore them to healthier activity.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our recommendation. They are exceedingly pleasant to take being eaten like candy, and are ideal for children, delicate persons, and old folks, as well as for the robust. They act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels. They, apparently have a neutral action on other associate organs or glands. They do not purge, cause excessive looseness, nor create any inconvenience whatever. They may be taken at any time, day or night. They will positively relieve chronic or habitual constipation, if not of surgical variety, and the myriad of associate or dependent chronic ailments, if taken with regularity for a reasonable length of time. 12 tablets, 10 cents; 24 tablets, 25 cents; 50 tablets, 50 cents. Sold in Charlevoix only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Home endorsement, the public expression of Charlevoix people, should be evidence beyond dispute for every Charlevoix reader, of the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. Surely the experience of friends and neighbors, cheerfully given by them, will carry more weight than the utterances of strangers residing in faraway places. Read the following:

"Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Huriburt Avenue, Charlevoix, Michigan says: 'I have used Doan's Kidney Pills, and consider them a very valuable remedy. I have taken them on several occasions for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Other members of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills for lame back and pains in the kidneys and they have received good results. Doan's Kidney Pills were obtained from the Ivy Drug Store, and we highly recommend them.'

HOW TO CARE FOR PLANTS.

Water is Essential, but It Should Be Used Carefully.

Water is both food and drink to plant life and should be given intelligently—that is, when the plant needs it. There can be no hard and fast rule laid down as to how often or how much water to give a plant, for conditions vary. Evaporation may be much greater at one time than at another. The best rule to follow for nearly all plants, except ferns, is to give a thorough watering and then allow the surface soil to become dry before watering thoroughly again. Ferns require more water than most plants, and the earth should never be allowed to become entirely dry.

Never water with very cold water. Temper the water before pouring it on to the plants so as not to chill them. In growing plants in the house one must try to carry out as far as possible the conditions of a greenhouse—warm, moist air—and for this reason a kettle of water should remain at all times on the radiator, register or stove to keep the air moist. And it is not amiss to say that this is a good sanitary precaution even if there are no plants in the room, for most of our steam and furnace heated city houses and apartments are kept far too hot and dry for health.

Dust is an enemy to plant life. Plants breathe through their leaves. Therefore it is necessary to keep them free from dust. At least once a week, and oftener if the room is very warm or dusty the plants should be put in the bathroom on their side and gently sprinkled with a bath spray.

Remember that rain never falls upon plant life at the temperature and force it comes from a city hydrant. Therefore give them a gentle shower, but see that all parts of the leaves are thoroughly washed. It is also a good idea to spray the plants daily with a lamp roomer. If this is not accessible a whiskbroom dipped in water and shaken over the plants answers the same purpose and may even take the place of the bath spray if used vigorously and thoroughly.

Never water a plant with the sun shining upon it or put it in the sun while the leaves are wet. The best time for watering is early in the morning or about sundown.

Some plants need watering twice a day, but most plants require wetting but once a day and under certain conditions not more than once in two or three days. It is best to judge by the conditions of the soil.

A little household ammonia, well diluted, a teaspoonful of ammonia in a half pint of water, poured on the earth about once a month is beneficial, but remember it is only to be put on the soil and not on the leaves.

The Main Point.

"Say, dad, blame a dime." "Your words are abrupt and even coarse, my son. You should say, 'Father, will you oblige me with 10 cents?' That sounds very much better."

"Well, do I get it?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

flon Ami club dressed up as little boys, who not having been invited took it upon themselves to intrude. They were given a "hand out" and then proceeded to show the girls a lively time. Everybody had a good time and the girls admitted they were glad they didn't have to go home alone.

THE CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF DIRT ROADS

The Fundamentals Must Be Mastered First, Says Major Thomas.

The desirability of good roads needs in this day no extended advocacy. Say Major T. C. Thomas in Good Roads. The desirability, if not their necessity, is generally acknowledged. The subject during recent years has called forth from various sources full and convincing exposures of the advantages of good roads to the citizen, to the state and to the nation.

I shall therefore proceed at once to my immediate subject, "Earth Roads, Construction and Maintenance."

In regard to good roads, as to most good things, there are obviously the grees of excellence.

While it is to be hoped that the roads over which there is heavy traffic in the vicinity of the cities and towns of the state will be macadamized, graveled or otherwise improved in the not distant future, it is evident that in the main the public roads of the state must of necessity be composed of earth for many years to come.

Such being the case, it is fortunate that under favorable conditions, when well drained and free from mud, the earth road is the most satisfactory for pleasure and for light traffic.

The statement that an earth road is as good as any other kind of road, kept well drained and free from mud, reminds one of the old saying, "It is a good thing to have a good horse, but it is better to have a good driver."

The writer holds that the statements are true in both cases, but the conditions are equally impossible of fulfillment. No, the claim is not made that under all conditions the earth road is as good as any other type of road. It is held that with proper construction and maintenance the earth road is a good road, and it may serve a community well until the increase of traffic makes a more unyielding surface imperatively necessary.

It is to be remembered that when the time comes to build a macadam or other pavement it will have to be built upon an earth bed, so that much of the work of making an earth road may be utilized in the future when it becomes necessary and practicable to have a paved surface to the road. The condition of the common roads is so bad that it is desirable that every interested citizen should know something about the location, construction, drainage and maintenance of earth roads, and under the term earth roads are included those with an admixture of sand and clay.

Everything connected with the construction, use and maintenance of roads was in times past before the introduction of railways the subject of exact observations and experiments, many and varied in character. On this account old engineering works, that treat of road-making are excellent reading today. This is true not only of the construction, but of the need of better legislation.

It is held that many of the evils to be had common roads that we suffer from at the present time are inherited from the antiquated legislation of the past.

Now that we have the results of a great number of years of experience in other countries, it seems that there is little to be learned, but much to learn in this branch of construction.

Yet there have been improvements in roadmaking and especially in road making machinery and tools, notably the stone crusher and the steam roller.

It must be acknowledged that conditions in this country are in many respects different from those that obtain in the older and more thickly settled countries of the old world. Nevertheless the fundamental principles of good road construction are the same everywhere, and once they are understood can hardly be forgotten.

Unthrifty Hogs.

If the hogs are not doing well notice whether they have lice and, if so, dip grease, preferably kerosene and lard, well mixed half and half, about their ears and along their backs once a week. The lice always congregate in these places and are easily exterminated. Also see that the hogs have grit in abundance. Corn ashes and charcoal are good.

Italy's Salt.

Italy, the cradle of the salt industry, has been manufacturing salt commercially for 2,500 years.

DIRT ROADS, WELLS, DRAINAGE AND GRADED, BUT NEED A DRAGON.

At certain times that it is desirable that every interested citizen should know something about the location, construction, drainage and maintenance of earth roads, and under the term earth roads are included those with an admixture of sand and clay.

Everything connected with the construction, use and maintenance of roads was in times past before the introduction of railways the subject of exact observations and experiments, many and varied in character. On this account old engineering works, that treat of road-making are excellent reading today. This is true not only of the construction, but of the need of better legislation.

It is held that many of the evils to be had common roads that we suffer from at the present time are inherited from the antiquated legislation of the past.

Now that we have the results of a great number of years of experience in other countries, it seems that there is little to be learned, but much to learn in this branch of construction.

Yet there have been improvements in roadmaking and especially in road making machinery and tools, notably the stone crusher and the steam roller.

It must be acknowledged that conditions in this country are in many respects different from those that obtain in the older and more thickly settled countries of the old world. Nevertheless the fundamental principles of good road construction are the same everywhere, and once they are understood can hardly be forgotten.

Unthrifty Hogs.

If the hogs are not doing well notice whether they have lice and, if so, dip grease, preferably kerosene and lard, well mixed half and half, about their ears and along their backs once a week. The lice always congregate in these places and are easily exterminated. Also see that the hogs have grit in abundance. Corn ashes and charcoal are good.

Italy's Salt.

Italy, the cradle of the salt industry, has been manufacturing salt commercially for 2,500 years.

LEAVES FOR THE SOUTH

A. B. Nicholas, Jr., Will Locate at Meriden, Mississippi.

Allen Burlin Nicholas, who for several years has been associate with his father in the law firm of Nicholas & Nicholas of East Jordan, will leave this week for Meriden, Mississippi, where he will open an office for the practice of his chosen profession. In his departure, the Charlevoix county bar loses one of its leading members.

Saturday evening Mr. Nicholas was tendered a farewell banquet at Taylor's Inn, in that city, at which covers were laid for fifty. Many toasts were given for his success in his new field, and at the close H. I. McMillan, who acted as master of ceremonies, presented him with a handsome ring in behalf of the friends there assembled, in token of the high esteem in which he is held.

Mr. Nicholas has a host of friends in this city who wish him the greatest success in his new location.

Will Hold Banquet.

Plans are rapidly going ahead for the big Republican Club banquet to be held at Central Lake on the evening of April 26. Lieutenant Governor John D. Ross will be present, as also will be A. H. Vandenberg, editor of the Grand Rapids Herald. An invitation has also been sent to Senator William Alden Smith to be present and act as toast master. Other prominent state politicians will be present, and all who attend will enjoy a flow of oratory seldom equaled.

W. C. T. U. Supper.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. will hold a twenty-five cent supper at the M. E. church parlors on the evening of February 28. From all we can learn the supper will be especially good one, and the ladies deserve a good attendance. A special invitation has been extended to the Men's Bible class to attend in a body, as reserved seats will be held for them. The object of these suppers is to raise a fund to help out in the expenses of the temperance campaign to be made this spring.

Won at Basket Ball.

Charlevoix won from Boyne City last Friday night by a score of 25 to 20, and two weeks ago by a score of 25 to 31.

Next Friday the boys play Bellaire. Every one is invited to come out and see the boys win.

For Sale.

A few choice breeding pens of Barred Plymouth Rocks for breeding purposes at common prices. Also eggs for hatching. Enquire of J. A. Anbl.

For Sale or Rent.

Four acres land, good house and cement building 50x18 feet in city limits and will sell on E. Z. terms. 5041 O. W. POWERS.

A Curiosity in Nomenclature.

The negroes in the British West Indian Island of Grenada find it very difficult to keep track of their descent and their relatives because of a custom which they follow in naming children. The father's Christian name is given to the son for his surname. Thus if a man is named John Jones his son may be called James John and that son's son Robert James, and so on to the end of the chapter. Naturally in a few generations families get into a hopeless muddle, and nobody knows exactly to whom he is related.

FRECKLES

CHAPTER VII.

AN ANGEL MATERIALIZES.

W HEN Freckles ever found—and how had he transported such ferns? As McLean turned from them he stopped suddenly. He had reached the door of the cathedral. That which Freckles had attempted would have been patent to any one. What had been in the heart of the shy, silent boy when he had found that long, thin stretch of forest, found the entrance, cleared and smoothed its aisle and carpeted its altar? What earnest work of God was in these misty flying pillars and the arched dome of granite? How like stained cathedral windows were the long openings between the trees, filled with rifts of blue, rays of gold and the shifting emerald of leaves? Where could he find mosses to match this blue, green, white, yellow and glowing lights? Was Freckles a devout Christian and did he worship here? Or was he an untutored heathen and down this vista of entrancing loveliness did he come playing and dancing, nymphs and faeries dance for him?

Who can fathom the heart of a boy? McLean had been thinking of Freckles as a creature of unswerving honesty, courage and faithfulness. There was evidence of a heart reaching for beauty, art, companionship, worship. It was writ large all over the face, hands and clothing of that little timberlost clearing.

When Duncan came McLean told him the story of the fight, and they laughed until they cried. Then they started around the line to search of the tree.

Said Duncan, "Now the boy is in for sore trouble."

"I hope not," answered McLean.

"You never in all your life saw a cur whipped so completely. He won't come back for the repetition of the chorus. We can surely find the tree. If we can't Freckles can. I will bring enough of the crop to take it out at once. That will insure peace for a time at least, and I am hoping that in a month more the whole gang can be moved here. It will soon be fall, and then, if he will go, I intend to send Freckles to my mother to be educated. With his quickness of mind and body and a few years' good help he can do anything. Why, Duncan, I'd give a hundred dollar bill if you could have been here and seen for yourself."

Locating the tree was an easy task because it was so well identified. When the rumble of the lumber wagons passing the cabin on the way to the swamp awakened Freckles next morning he sprang up and was soon following them. The tree was a giant maple and so precious that they almost dug it out by the roots.

McLean had told Freckles to ride on a section of the maple with him, but now the boy begged to go into the swamp with Duncan.

"I don't see why you want to go," said McLean. "I have no business to let you out today at all."

"It's me chickens, sir," answered Freckles.

Freckles hurried into the swamp. He was some little distance behind. But he could still see the men. Before he overtook them they had turned from the west road and had entered the swamp toward the east. The underbrush was almost impenetrable. As they plunged into it a great black bird swept over their heads.

Freckles danced wildly. "It's me chickens! Oh, it's me chickens!" he shouted. "Oh, Duncan, come quick! You've found the nest of me precious chickens!"

"It's chickens!" he yelled. "Oh, me big chicken has hatched out me little chicken, and there's another egg. I can see it plain, and, oh, the funny little white baby! I mean, can you see me little white chicken?"

Duncan could easily see it, and so could every one else. Freckles tenderly carried the blushing, blinking little thing out to the light in a leafy bush. The men found it so little and so wonderful in its beauty, even Freckles, who had forgotten he was ever so small, and coddled over it with every blushing term of endearment he knew.

Duncan gathered up his tools. "Deal's off, boys!" he said cheerfully. "The big mama he touched (and Freckles' hankles have finished with it) we might as well game. Ketch it! It's back, Freckles. It's just out, and it may still. Ye will probably have two the morn'."

Freckles deposited the baby beside the egg. When he came back he said: "I made a big mistake not to be bringing the egg out with the baby, but I was fearing to touch it. It's shaped like a hen's egg, and it's big as a turkey's, and the headfinest blue—just splattered with big brown blotches, like me book said, prease. But you never saw such a sight as it made on the yellow of the rotten wood beside that funny leathery faced little white baby."

"Tell you what, Freckles," said one of the teamsters. "Have you ever heard of this bird woman that goes all over the country with a camera and makes pictures? She made some on my brother that place last summer, and Jim's so wild about them he quits plowing and goes after her about every week he finds—He helps her all he can to get them, and then she gives him a picture. Jim's so proud of it he has her keeps them in the little. He shows them to everybody that comes and brags about how he helped to take them. If you're smart you'll send for her and she'll come and make a picture just like life. If you help her she will give you one. It would be uncommon pretty to keep after your birds are gone. I dunno what they are. I never see their like before. They must be something rare. Any you fellows ever see a bird like that hereabouts?"

No one ever had.

"Well," said the teamster, "falling to get this log lets me off till noon, and I'm going to town. If I was making a living taking bird pictures seems to me I'd be mighty glad for a chance to take one like that."

"Then you be sure to tell her to come," said Freckles.

The next morning Freckles hurried about the trail, and on his way down the east side he slipped in to see the chickens.

The mother bird was on the nest. He was afraid the other egg might just be hatching, so he did not venture to disturb her. He made the round and reached his study early. He had his tush along and did not need to start on the second trip until the middle of the afternoon. He would have long hours to work on his dinner, improve his study and learn about his chickens.

The heat became more insistent. Upon came, and Freckles ate his dinner and settled for an hour or two on a bench with a book.

Perhaps there was a breath of sound, Freckles could never afterward remember, but for some reason he lifted his head just as the bushes parted and the face of an angel looked through. Saluts, nymphs and fairies had floated down his cathedral aisle for him many times, with forms and voices of exquisite beauty.

Parting the wild roses by the entrance was beauty of which Freckles had never dreamed. Was it real or would it vanish as the other dreams had done? He took a step nearer, gazing intently. This was real flesh and blood! And it was in every way kin of the timberlost, for no bird of its branches swung with easier grace than this dainty young thing rocked on the bit of moss on which she stood. A sapling beside her was not straighter nor rounder than her slender form. Her soft, waving hair clung about her face with the heat, and carried over her shoulders. It was all of one piece with the gold of the sun which filtered through the branches. Her eyes were just the deepest blue of the iris, her lips the reddest of the foxfire, and her cheeks exactly of the same taint as the wild rose petals caressing them. She was smiling at Freckles in perfect confidence, and she cried: "Oh, I'm so delighted that I've found you!"

"An' me was you looking for me?" quavered the boy, incredulous.

"I hoped I might find you," said the angel. "You see, I didn't do as I was told, and I'm lost. The Bird Woman said I should stay in the carriage until she came back. She's been gone hours. It's a perfect Turkish bath in there, and I'm all tingly with mosquito bites. Just when I thought that I couldn't bear it, another minute, along comes the biggest Papilio Ajax you ever saw. I knew you pleased she'd be, so I ran after it. It flew so slow and so low that I thought a dozen times I had it. Then all at once it went out of sight over the trees, and I couldn't find no way back to save me. I think I've walked over an hour. I have been mired to my knees. A thorn raked my arm, and it is bleeding, and I'm so tired and worn."

She pointed the bushes still further. Freckles saw that her little blue out-ton took him to her, thup with perspiration. It was torn across the throat. One sleeve hung from the shoulder to elbow. A thorn had raked the arm and it was covered with blood and the cuts and abrasures were oozing about it. Her feet were in low shoes. He could see the yellow of the rotten wood beside that funny leathery faced little white baby.

"Get out here where I can see where you are stopping. Quick, for the life of you!" she ordered.

She smiled at him indulgently. "Why?" she inquired.

"Did anybody tell you come here and not to tell you of the snakes?" asked Freckles.

"We met Mr. McLean on the corduroy, and he did say something about snakes, I believe. The Bird Woman put on leather leggings, and a wire, paraboloid time she must be having. Worst dose I ever had, and I'd nothing to do but sweeter."

"Will you be coming out of there?" growled Freckles.

She laughed as if it were a fine joke. "Maybe I'd be telling you I killed a rattler curled up on that same place you're standing as long as me foot, and the thickness of me arm you'd be moving where I can see your footing," he urged insistently.

"What a perfectly delightful little brogue you speak," she said. "My father is Irish, and half ought to be enough to entitle me to do that much. Maybe—if I'd be telling you," she imitated, rounding and accenting each word carefully.

"If you was understanding the danger," he continued desperately.

"Oh, I don't think there is much!" She tilted on the morass.

"If you killed one snake here it's probably all there is near, and any way, the Bird Woman says a rattlesnake is a gentleman and always gives warning before he strikes. I don't hear any rattling. Do you?"

"Would you be knowing it if you did?" asked Freckles almost impatiently.

How the laugh of the young thing rippled!

"Would I be knowing it?" she mocked. "Well, you should see the swamps of Michigan where they dump rattlers out of the mari dredges three and four at a time."

Freckles stood astounded. She did know. She was not in the least afraid. She was depending on a rattlesnake to live up to his share of the contract and rattle to time for her to move. The one characteristic an Irishman admires in a woman above all others is courage. Freckles worshipped anew. He changed his tactics.

"I'd be pleased to be receiving you at me front door," he said, "but as you have arrived at the back, will you come in and be seated?"

He waved toward a bench. The angel came instantly.

"Oh, how lovely and cool!" she cried. As she moved across his room Freckles had hard work to keep from falling on his knees, for they were very weak, and he was hard driven by an impulse to worship.

"Did you arrange this?" she asked.

"Yes," said Freckles simply.

"Some one must come with a big canvas and copy each side of it," she said. "I never saw anything so beautiful. How I wish I might stay here with you! I will, some day, if you will let me; but now, if you can spare the time, will you help me look for the carriage? If the Bird Woman comes back and finds me gone she will be almost distracted."

"Did you come in on the west road?" asked Freckles.

"I didn't so," she said. "The man who told the Bird Woman that was the only place where the wires were down. We drove away in, and it was dreadful—over stumps and logs, and in to the hole. I suppose you know, though. I should have stayed in the carriage, but I was so tired. I never dreamed of getting lost. I suspect I will get scolded finely. I go with the Bird Woman half the time during the summer vacations. My father says I learn a lot more than I do at school, and get it straight. I never came within a smell of getting lost before. I thought, at first, it was going to be horrid, but since I've found you, maybe it will be good fun after all."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE BIRD WOMAN.

FRECKLES was amazed to hear himself exclaiming, "It was so hot in there. You couldn't be expected to hear it for hours and not be moving. I can take you back around the trail almost to where you were. Then you can get up in the carriage, and I will go find the Bird Woman."

"You'll get killed if you do! When she says this long, it means that she and a focus on something. You see, when she gets a focus, and lies in the weeds and water for hours, and the sun takes her, and things crawl over her, and then some one comes along and scares her bird away just as she has it coaxed up—why, she kills them. If I melt, you won't go after her. She's probably blistered and half eaten up, but she will never quit until she is satisfied.

"Then it will be safer to be taking care of you," suggested Freckles.

"Now you're talking sense," said the angel.

"May I try to help your arm?" he asked.

"Have you any idea how it hurts?" she purred.

"A little," said Freckles.

"Well, Mr. McLean said we'd probably find his son here—"

"His son?" cried Freckles.

"That's what he said. And that you would do anything you could for us, and that we could trust you with our lives. But I wouldn't have trusted you anyway, if I hadn't known a thing about you. Say, your father is rambling about you, isn't he?"

"I don't know," answered the dazed Freckles.

"He's so proud of you he is awfully up like the load in Aesop's fables. If you have ever had an arm hurt like this and can do anything why, for pity sake do it!"

She turned back her sleeve, holding out to Freckles an arm of palest canvas.

Freckles unlocked his case and handed the ugly, ragged wound. He worked with trembling fingers and a face tense with earnestness.

"Is it feeling any better?" he asked.

"Oh, it's well now," cried the angel.

"It doesn't hurt at all any more."

The velvet touch of her warm arm was thrilling in Freckles' finger tips. Dainty lines and fine white stuffs peeped through her torn dress. There were beautiful rings on her fingers. Every article about her was of the finest material and in excellent taste. There was the trembling Lumberjost guard in his coarse clothing, with his cotton rags and his old pair of swamp water. Freckles was sufficiently accustomed to contrasts to notice them and sufficiently true to be hurt by them always.

He lifted his eyes to hers with a shadowy pain in them and found them of serene, unconscious purity.

"We must go and find the carriage," said the angel, rising.

Freckles led the way, sharply watching every step. He went as near the log as he felt the bare and with a little searching found the carriage.

"This is a shame!" said Freckles.

"You'll never be coming here again."

"Oh, yes, I shall!" said the angel.

"The Bird Woman says that these birds stay over a month in the nest and she would like to make a picture every few days for seven or eight weeks perhaps."

Freckles barely escaped crying out for joy.

"Then don't you ever be torturing yourself and your horse to be coming in here again," he said. "I'll show you a way to drive almost to the nest on the east trail, and then you can come around to my room and stay while the Bird Woman works. It's nearly always cold there, and there's comfortable seats and water."

"Oh! Did you have drinking water there?" she cried. "I was never so thirsty or so hungry in my life, but I thought I wouldn't mention it."

"And I had not the wit to be seeing!" wailed Freckles. "I can be getting you a good drink in no time."

He turned to the trail.

"Please wait a minute," called the angel. "What's your name? I want to think about you while you are gone."

Freckles smiled quizzically.

"Freckles," she guessed, with a pen of laughter. "And mine is—"

"I'm knowing yours," interrupted Freckles.

"I don't believe you do. What is it?" asked the girl.

"You won't be getting angry?"

"Not until I've had the water at least."

It was Freckles' turn to laugh. He whipped off his big, floppy straw hat, stood uncovered before her and said in the sweetest of all the sweet tones of his voice, "There's, nothing you could be but the Swamp Angel."

The girl laughed merrily.

Once out of her sight Freckles ran every step of the way to the cabin. Mrs. Duncan gave him a small bucket of water, cool from the well. He carried it in the crook of his right arm and a basket filled with bread and butter, cold meat, apple pie and pickles in his left hand.

"Pickles are kind o' coolin'," said Mrs. Duncan.

The angel was on her knees reaching for the bucket as he came up.

"No drinking stew," he cautioned her.

Freckles stood blinking in the dazzling glory of her smile.

"Mercy!" she exclaimed. "I think I had best be naming you 'the angel'—my darling angel."

"Yes," said Freckles. "I look the character every day, but today most emphatic!"

"Angels don't go by looks," laughed the girl. "You father told us you had been scrapping. But he told us why I'd gladly wear all your cuts and bruises if I could do anything that would make my father feel as peaceably as yours did. He craved about proper. I never saw any one look proper."

"Did he say he was proud of me?" marveled Freckles.

"He didn't need to," answered the angel. "He was radiating pride from every pore."

The angel spread the linen on the carriage seat. The daintiest parts she could select she carefully put back into the basket. The rest she ate. As he watched her with fascinated eyes Freckles told her of his birds, flowers and logs.

Suddenly the angel cried, "There comes the Bird Woman!"

She was staggering under a load of cameras and paraphernalia. Freckles took all he could carry and helped her into the carriage.

Soon they were out of the swamp. Then he showed them how to reach the chicken roost from the outside, indicated a cooler place for the nest, and told them how the next time they came the angel could find his room while she waited.

"Were you forgetting Little Chick's picture?" Freckles asked the Bird Woman.

"Why do you call the baby chicken 'Little Chick'?" she asked.

"Twas Duncan began it," said Freckles. "You see, through the fierce cold of winter the birds of the swamp were almost starving. It is mighty lonely here, and they were all the company I was having. I got to carrying scraps and grain down to them. Duncan was that generous he was giving me of his wheat and corn from his chickens' feed, and he called the birds one swamp chickens. Then when these big black fellows came, Mr. McLean said they were our nearest kind to some in the old world that they called 'Parrot's Chickens,' and he called mine 'Freckles' Chickens."

"Good enough!" cried the Bird Woman. "You must shoot something for them occasionally, and I'll bring them food when I come. If you will help me keep them until I get my series, I'll give you a copy of each study I make, mounted in a book."

"I'll be doing me very best," promised the boy, and from the deeps he meant it.

"I wonder if that other egg is going to hatch?" mused the Bird Woman.

"I am afraid not. It should have been out today. Isn't it a beauty? I never saw either an egg or the young before. They are rare this far north."

"So Mr. McLean said," answered Freckles.

The Bird Woman gave him her hand at parting, and Freckles joyfully realized that here was going to be another person for him to love. Freckles couldn't remember, after they had driven away, that they had even noticed his missing hand, and for the first time in his life he had forgotten it.

When the Bird Woman and the angel were well on the home road the angel told of the little corner of paradise into which she had strayed and of her new name.

"Did you know Mr. McLean had a son?" asked the angel. "Isn't the little accent he has and the way he twists a sentence too dear? And isn't it too old fashioned and funny to hear him call his father 'mister'?"

"It sounds too good to be true," said the Bird Woman, answering the last question first. "I am so tired with these present day young men that patronizingly call their fathers 'dad,' 'governor,' 'old man' and 'old chap' that the boy's attitude of respect and deference struck me as being as fine as silk. There must be something rare about that young man."

But she did not find it necessary to tell the angel that for several years she had known the man who so proudly proclaimed himself Freckles' father to be a bachelor and a Scotchman. The Bird Woman had a fine way of attending strictly to her own business.

Freckles turned back to the trail, but stopped at every wild infer and looked at the pink satin of the petals. She was not of his world, and better than any other he knew it; but she might be his angel, and he was dreaming of naught but blind, silent worship. He finished the happiest day of his life. Wessner would try for his revenge he knew. That he would be abetted by Black Jack was almost certain, but fear had died the happy heart of Freckles. He had kept his trust. He had won the respect of the boss. Nobody could ever wipe from his heart the flood of holy adoration that had welled up with the coming of his angel.

At the edge of the clearing he came out into the bright moonlight, and there sat McLean on his wren. Freckles hurried up to him.

"Is there trouble?" he asked anxiously.

"That's what I wanted to ask you," said the boss. "I stopped at the cabin to see you a minute before I turned in, and they said you had come down here. You must not do it, Freckles."

Freckles stood combing his fingers through Nellie's mane, and the dainty creature was rubbing her head around to his caresses. He pushed back his hat and looked up into McLean's face.

"It's come to the sleep with one eye open," said McLean. "I'm not looking for anything to be happening for a week or two, but it's bound to come, and now if I'm to keep me trust as I've promised you and myself, I've to live here mostly until the gang comes. You must be knowing that, sir."

"I'm afraid it's true, Freckles," said McLean. "And I've decided to doubt the guard until we get here. It will only be a few weeks now, and I'm so anxious for you that you must not be left alone further. It anything should happen to you, Freckles, it would spoil one of the dearest plans of my life."

Freckles bowed with dismay the proposition to make a second guard.

"Oh, no, no, Mr. McLean," he cried. "Not for the world! I wouldn't be having a stranger around, scaring the birds and tramping up the study and disturbing all the ways for my money. I am all the guard you need. I will be faithful. I will turn over the lease with no more fussing on my life. I will. Oh, I'll be sending another man to get them saying I turned cow and asked for help. It will just kill the heart of me heart if you do it. The one thing I want is another gun."

McLean looked at a shining his head for down to Freckles, who slipped it beside the one already in his belt.

"Freckles," he said at last, "we never know the throb of a man's soul until something cuts into him deeply and brings the grain out strong. You've the making of a mighty fine piece of furniture, my boy, and you shall have your own way these few weeks yet. Then if you will go I am going to take you to the city and educate you, and you are to be my son, my lad—my own son."

Freckles twisted his fingers in Nellie's mane to steady himself.

"But why should you be doing that, sir?" he faltered.

McLean slid his arm down about the boy's shoulders and gathered him close to him.

"Because I love you, Freckles," he said simply.

McLean tightened his clasp a second longer, then he rode away down the trail.

Freckles lifted his hat and faced the sky. The harvest moon looked down, sheeting the swamp in silver glory. The Lumberjost sang her night song. The swale softly rustled in the wind. Winged things of night brushed his face, and still Freckles gazed upward trying to fathom these things which had come to him. To one above the sky he must make acknowledgment for these miracles. His lips moved and he began softly:

"Thank you for each separate good thing that has come to me," he said, "and, please, for the falling of the feather, for if it didn't really fall from an angel's falling brought an angel, and it's in the great heart of you to exercise yourself any further about me. Oh, please to be taking good care of her!"

TUBERCULOSIS.

Black Bucks of India.

The black buck of India is a very graceful animal, weighing between thirty and fifty pounds. The hide of the male when full grown is ofinky blackness on the back, while the belly is as white as snow, the contrast being very striking. The horns are black and spiral in shape and in length average about eighteen inches, although they have been known to reach twenty-six inches. The animals are usually found in herds and are difficult to approach on foot, as the bucks toss their heads in the air from time to time in a very graceful manner, and some of them are almost sure to detect any attempt at stalking.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY REV. SAMUEL W. PUGH, D.D.

THE MAN WITH THE MASK.

Text: "Why feignest thou thyself to be another?"—1 Kings xiv, 8.

There's grief up at the palace of wicked King Jeroboam. His child is sick—very sick. Medicines have failed; still he is exhausted. Death, with shivering foot, has come up the broad marble stairs of the palace. He's looking his last look toward little Adah, the sick prince. No one can save the boy but God. Jeroboam knows that, but he's defied God all his life and now hasn't right to ask favors. He orders his queen lay aside her royal robe, disguise as peasant woman and go see the prophet of God at Shiloh. She goes, not with gifts of gems and gold, but with gifts of tears and love. The prophet pene- trates her outer disguise and inner de- velt at a glance. "Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam! Why feignest thou thy- self to be another? I have evil tidings for thee. Get thee back to thy house, and when thy feet touch the gate of the city the child shall die." She had right to ask recovery, but none to practice imposture. Her tears fall all the way home from Shiloh to Tirzah. God hates deception. Years before Samuel proclaimed penally on King Saul when the lowing oxen and bleat- ing sheep of Amalekites proclaimed he was deceiving God. Years after Peter said to Ananias, deceiving about the price of the land, "Thou hast not lied unto man, but unto God."

"Sincerely Yours."

A hypocrite is one who pretends to be what he is not. We like sincerity. That's a rare word, by the way, com- posed of two Latin words, sine and cera, "without wax." Ancient potters filled out imperfections with wax. When the work was perfected no de- ception needed. It was sold to be she- cera. Englishman closing formal let- ter writes: "Your humble, obedient servant," the Frenchman, "With espe- cial sentiments of the highest consid- eration," a Chaldean will say, "Fare- well, favored of heaven—may the gods preserve your honorable teeth;" we are accustomed to write, "Sincerely yours," without wax, no duplicity, sincerely. But many of us are some- what insincere. We are like the Bo- man god Janus, which had two faces. We like to be popular. A preacher, lawyer, politician—any one dependent on public favor—likes to be known as a "good mixer," grateful smile, pleas- ant word, gracious manner, feebly in- quiry—often as hollow as soap-bell. We praise the dinner, compliment the speech, gush over the plank, use superlatives over the singer. After the reception we get behind the palms, shrug our shoulders at the hostess and shoot poisoned arrows at the guests. Janus! There are hypocrites in the church—lots of them—more's the pity. But the parlor's the place. There they breed like germs in gelatin.

"All That Glitters is Not Gold."

I met an old classmate last week. He stands high in legal and political circles. I felt pleased when he in- quired if my baby was over the whoop- ing cough and assured me a nation awaited my recognition. I would have invited him out to lunch but for a painful personal reason. But his polit- est assurance assured me when I quoted him later that he has about as many virtues as a fox and can take on as many colors as a chameleon. This apparent said as for himself, like Henry Clay, he would rather be right than be president. But I remember now how easy to give him a vaca- tion at the state's expense. "Busi- ness is business," quoth a young man when I remonstrated with him about a tricky deal. "You have to do that in business, preacher. Might as well beckon for the sheriff as follow your Golden Rule." Much that passes as shrewd chicanery is nothing but highway robbery. When I addressed the board of trade in our town the chairman facetiously said, "There are tricks in all trades but ours," and quoted Barnum that "Americans like to be humbugged." But it's mighty expen- sive. It compels safeguards, bonding companies, detectives, commercial agencies, lawsuits and about every disaster known in business.

Kisses That Sting.

The man with the mask of deceit is to be particularly dreaded in religion, even though to one hypocrite in the church there are 999 outside. The deid being wider. Of the twelve disciples one was insincere. Judas is still kiss- ing his Lord. Each kiss stings worse than a scorpion's lash in Herod's palace. Many come into the church with wrong motives. "Sir, you sing to the pres- dent," said a visitor to a socialist in a Washington church. "No, I sing to the Lord, and the president has the privi- lege of listening." "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hy- poocrisy," said Christ. Some "pillars" in the church are hollow logs. Dr. McKay and Mr. Hyde. It is wrong to speak of a converted church member as "a good man gone wrong." He is a bad man found out. Don't let them frighten you from church. I threw a five dollar bag down to the paying teller one day. It had some of good gold, paid widows, sent, bought food for hungry, made my church treasurer happy, paid preacher back salary, and, in the telling, there, I down, "Counterfeit!" All its good deeds didn't let it pass the bank. I'm thinking of another day yet to come when we who have passed for good shall be rejected. "I never saw you."

Harmony Grange, No. 1451.

Harmony Grange, No. 1451 met in regular session, February 13. The master being absent, the meeting was presided over by the Worthy Overseer, H. L. Willson. Arrange- ments were made for holding an open meeting on Tuesday evening, February 20, when all who are in- terested in farming are invited to be present.

The newly elected secretary, treas- urer, gatekeeper and chaplain were installed, they being absent from the regular installation. H. L. Willson acted as installing officer, assisted by Miss Mildred Keller. The women's work committee will meet on Wednesday, February 21, with Mrs. Myrtle Willson. The meeting was closed with several select readings and songs by the grange.

First LaGrippe, than Bronchitis
That was the case with Mrs. W. S. Bailey, McCreary, Ky. "My wife was taken down with a severe at- tack of la grippe, which runs into bronchitis. She coughed as though she had consumption and could not sleep at night. The first bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Com- pound gave her so much relief that she continued using it until she was permanently cured."

HOW TO COOK RICE.

Plenty of Water Should Be Used to Get Best Results.

In order that rice when cooked should be snowy white, with every grain separate, it must first be thor- oughly washed after picking it clean from every foreign substance, wash- ing through three or four cold, clear waters and rubbing the grains well be- tween the hands to remove all the dust and discoloration.

When well cleaned it must be put over the fire in a quart of boiling wa- ter to each cup of rice, adding a tea- spoonful of salt to the water. The water must be boiling when the rice is put into it, as the boiling of the water will toss the grains of rice, sepa- rating them and preventing their clumping together.

Shake the vessel occasionally until the grains begin to soften, but after this do not touch the rice, but con- tinue the boiling until it swells and appears to thicken. Then take off the cover, pour off any water there is and set the vessel in the oven in order that the dry heat may swell the grains, leaving it for about ten min- utes, but by no means until the grains brown.

Then take out of the oven, let stand a few minutes and turn out into a dish. Every grain should stand apart, beautifully white, soft and perfectly dry.

A Warning Against Wet Feet.

Wet and chilled feet usually affect the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, and la grippe, bronchitis or pneumonia may re- sult. Watch carefully, particularly the children, and for the racking, stubborn coughs of the early Spring and the racking coughs of the late Winter. It cures the inflamed membrane, and heals the cough quickly. Take no sub- stitute.

An Ice Poultice.

In many cases of inflammation an ice poultice is a very useful applica- tion. It is made in this way: Spread a layer of flannel three-quarters of an inch thick on a piece of cloth and upon the meat put at intervals lumps of ice about the size of a mar- ble. Sprinkle meal over the ice and cover all with the cloth, turning the edges over. In this way the ice will last much longer than it otherwise would, and the poultice will be quite comfortable.

SELECTING THE BULL.

Importance of Using a Pure Bred Sire in the Dairy Herd.

The skillful breeder of any kind of stock does not need to have it pointed out to him how important it is that the sire be properly selected. writes Professor C. H. Eckles in the Kansas Farmer. If he is a skillful breeder it is largely because he realizes the im- portance of the sire and knows how to select him. While the skilled breeder realizes the importance of this in breeding, the average dairyman does not give the question of selection of the sire one-tenth the attention the im- portance of the question demands.

Thousands of men make use of a scrub or grade sire on account of his taken economy in cost rather than pay a few dollars more for an animal that is almost certain to transmit desirable qualities. It is not surprising that we have so many worthless cows. They come by their worthlessness in the ma- jority of cases from sires worse than worthless. Some of these scrub bulls are registered in the herd books.

I am a believer in selecting a breed that is bred for the purpose for which it is to be used. If the farmer intends to milk cows and make that an im- portant part of his business he is not working to the best advantage unless he selects a breed that has been de- veloped with that object in view. In purchasing the sire a good general rule to follow is to get one whose fe- male ancestry is of the type that it is desired to raise. If the animal in question is pure bred the chances are reasonably good that these qualities will be transmitted to a large extent at least. The head of the herd should be a better bred animal than the cows if it is possible to get one.

The Ayrshire is probably the youngest of the pure bred dairy breeds and had its origin in the southwest of Scotland. The Ayr- shire cow in general is a handsome, sprightly cow of medium size, weighing at maturity about 1,000 pounds, and is red and white in color. She is tough and hardy, with a vigorous appetite and not too par- ticular as to what she eats. A very persistent milker, giving a uniform quantity well up toward evening, and is particularly adapted to pro- ducing milk for table use. Roch- all's Showdown II, whose portrait is shown, has been a winner of grand championship honors.

A Missouri farmer gives me the fol- lowing interesting figures showing the effect in milk production of a dairy sire as compared with one not of dairy breeding: He owned a western herd grade cow. Her first heifer was sired by a grade beef bred sire, her second by a pure bred Jersey. The other averaged 3,085 pounds of milk and 11 pounds of fat per year. The daughter by the grade beef sire averaged 3,775 pounds of milk and 123 pounds of fat. The daughter by the Jersey averaged 6,000 pounds of milk and 210 pounds of fat. Counting fat at 25 cents per pound, the income of the dam was $24.10 per year, that of the daughter by the grade beef bred sire $38.85 and that by the dairy bred $70.

Washing Milk Vessels.

It is quite a common practice to wash milk vessels to start with hot water. This is not the best meth- od. In boiling milk a skin forms on it. The hot water likewise hardens this on to the sides of the milk vessel making it hard to remove. The better way is to first rinse the utensils in cold water, and it should be rinsed as soon as it is emptied of milk or else the milk will dry, and then rinsing it will not so thoroughly remove it.

PEOPLE ARE BEING EDUCATED

For Eventual Elimination of the Saloon as a Licensed Institution.

STATISTICS LEAVE NO DOUBT

They Show That the End of the Michigan Saloon is Assured.

Local Option May Not Absolutely Prohibit, But it Decreases Crime and Drunkenness—The Saloon in Politics.

That the people of Michigan are being educated for the eventual elimination of the saloon as a licensed institution is the logical conclusion to be drawn from local option statistics of the state. These statistics have been gathered from the police, jail and prosecuting attorney records of those counties now, or formerly "dry." A personal investigation of those records, and a multitude of interviews with all manner of men in the localities covered by them leaves small room for doubt on this point.

As the truth of these records become known, a new estimate of the possibilities of getting along without the saloon, and the benefits to be derived from its absence, must be found in the public mind; and if local option results continue to prove as fruitful in the future as they have during recent years, the end of the Michigan saloon seems assured.

By the "public mind" is meant more than the minds of ministers and church members; more than the mind of professional prohibitionists, temperance reformers and teetotalers. These have been the leading agents of the movement. They are still in the van, but in these latter days it is gradually becoming a movement that includes men who occasionally take a drink, and a few who take a drink more than occasionally. The prejudice against the old leadership is wearing off with the growing desire to extend or solidify the beneficent results. The saloon has in other words, ceased to be a theological or religious problem, and has come to be a sociological, a political, an economic one.

Masses of men who never enter a church, and hear none but funeral sermons, and are as far from being prohibitionist as the east is from the west, are voting "dry" on local option merely because it removes the "tempting force"—makes sobriety easier and drunkenness more inconvenient, it is no longer deemed necessary to look through some sectarian telescope, or to don the spectacles of a doctor of divinity in order to detect the cause of a red nose.

It is conceded that local option prohibition does not absolutely prohibit. If it did, there would be no drunkenness at all in "dry" territory. But there is. The "boot-legger" and the "blind pigger" are not of the sort to retire to limbo simply because their licensed competitor has lost out. In spite of the vigilance of the police and county officers, they ply their trade the same when there are no saloons as when there are—only, perhaps, a little more cautiously. And then there are the mail order liquor houses too, who, it is said, thrive when county prohibition takes hold. Yet, regardless of the "boot-legger" and the "blind pigger," and the "mail order houses," and the alleged making of "bottle drunkards" and "whisky drinkers" thrown in—yes, with these supplemented, by the determination of practically all police forces to make "dry" drunk records, and "wet" drunk records small—the system still seems to prohibit sufficiently to leave a considerable margin of sobriety in favor of the "drys."

When a "wet" man complains of the violations of the local option laws here is a logical answer: According to the attorney general's report for the year ending June, 1910 (complete statistics for the year ending June, 1911, not being available), there were 231 prosecutions for violation of the local option law in 37 "dry" counties, and 101 prosecutions for violation of the saloon law in 47 counties "wet."

The old story that prohibition does not prohibit in local option territory, that there is more liquor consumed in dry territory than when the same territory is wet, is losing its force. Men are compelled to believe their own eyes. Some men cannot turn a deaf ear to such facts as these:

The city of Battle Creek had 77 more arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct (and disorderlies are proverbially drunkards who have run amuck) during the first eight months of her present wet regime (May 1, 1911, to January 1, 1912), than she had during her entire previous two years (May 1, 1909, to May 1, 1911), which were dry.

Local prohibition may not absolutely prohibit, but it decreases drunkenness and crime as the records show, and to an extent that is decidedly helpful.

Men are conjuring up no inclination to get rid and keep rid of the saloon, even if there's some drinking in spite of its absence, logically concluding that little drinking is less dangerous than a lot more.

There are those who would even go so far as to eliminate the saloon but let the local brewery go on and manufacture and sell at wholesale, in not less than case lots, to be delivered at the patron's home, provided they can eliminate the saloon.

Beer in the home is not one-half as dangerous as in the licensed

SERVICE TO BE IMPROVED

Michigan State Telephone Company Purchase Swaverly Property.

No Room for Two Companies—Business Will Be Under One Management.

The Michigan State Telephone company has recently completed plans for the purchase of the Swaverly Telephone company property between Pellston and Nanton, including exchanges at Pellston, Petoskey, Boyne Falls, Mancelona, Kalkaska, South Boardman and Fife Lake.

The principal stockholders in the Swaverly company, and the men who have directed the affairs of that company during the last few years, have found that carrying on this business was burdensome to them, as their own business interests required their time, and they therefore decided to dispose of the property. In selling to the Michigan State Telephone company, they have considered that they were acting for the best interests of their subscribers and customers.

This deal will enable these subscribers to secure connection with a large number of exchanges and subscribers of the Bell system that they have not had in the past, including a large development in Antrim county, Charlevoix county, Cheboygan county and Emmet county. Heretofore these subscribers have not been in connection with the Antrim county system, and Boyne City, Charlevoix, East Jordan, Cheboygan and other important tributary points. It will also relieve them of the necessity of maintaining two telephone systems at Petoskey and other points.

LOST VALUABLE TEAM

Broke Through the Ice Near Central Lake While Hauling Wood.

A line span of heavy draft horses owned by the Lake Superior Iron & Chemical Company, while drawing cord wood across Interim Lake on the ice, were drowned last week. For some weeks teams have been hauling cord wood from near Fisk's Lodge on the north side of the lake from Central Lake to the railroad. On account of the warm weather for the past few days the work was stopped as the ice was considered unsafe. Tuesday night was cold, and ice appeared safe for the work which was recommenced with the above results.

HANDS OFF LAKE MICHIGAN WATER

Vigorous Protests Being Made Against Chicago Drainage Canal.

Lowering of Lake Level Would Change Climatic Conditions and Injure Shipping Facilities.

"Hands off Lake Michigan Water" is the message being sent to the United States War Department regarding the proposed increase flowage from Lake Michigan. The secretary of war has fixed today, Feb. 28, as the date, and Chicago as the place for hearing from those who are entering objections to the proposed plan. The fruit growers and manufacturers of Michigan have for two or three years been entering protests against the projected gull canal. Exhaustive arguments have been presented to show that the vast fruit interests of Michigan would be vitally affected by the diversion of the Lake Michigan current through the Chicago canal to the Mississippi river by reason of the change in climatic conditions, which investigation indicates would be the result. In addition to this is the lowering of the lake level.

It has been shown conclusively that since the construction of the canal, the lake levels have been perceptibly lowered, in fact to such an extent that dredging has been necessary in lake ports to permit the docking of large vessels. Right here in Charlevoix this condition has been shown. At any point on Pine Lake, Round Lake and the channel the water level has been lowered to such an extent that where vessels formerly were able to dock, it is now an impossibility.

Michigan was the first to enter a protest against the proposed waterway and nearly every lake port has protested against the movement. Two years ago the state grange took a like action, emphasizing the detriment the proposed canal would work to Michigan's interests. Monday Mayor Hampton sent the following telegram to the secretary of war:

"On behalf of Charlevoix county's entire population, I protest against further concessions to Chicago drainage canal. Water levels already seriously affected, and our immense fruit interests jeopardized through climatic changes due to diversion of natural water flow."

Mayor Hampton also wrote Gov. Osborn, asking him to do all in his power to prevent further concessions along the proposed lines. Yesterday he received a telegram from the governor, authorizing him to attend the hearing at Washington.

KEEP ROADS OPEN

Rural Carriers Not Expected to Wade Snow to Reach Box.

The opening of the highways means more than simply making a track through the drifts. The following is an extract from Fourth Assistant Postmaster General DeGraw's famous speech at Milwaukee before the National Rural Carriers' convention:

"When service is suspended by a rural route complaint is sometimes made by those who are thus deprived of the delivery of mail by rural carriers that the road is being traveled and if others can get over it why not the carriers, but such complaint lose sight of the fact that the carrier is required to travel his route varying from fifteen to thirty miles in length without regard to climatic conditions, while some people may by dint of floundering get through. Rural carriers cannot be or are not expected to travel roads half deep in mud and snow or in such condition as to cause great hardship to the carrier's team and loss and time to the carrier."

In after a fall of snow a patron sees the carrier drive past his mail box and not deliver mail he should see if the track to the mail box is open, as the carrier is not expected to wade snow to reach the box.

DRILL TO LET THE WATER OUT

Land of Sunshine, Sand, Buzzards, Boosters and Blasted Hopes.

State of Florida from the View Point of Glenn M. DuBois.

When the year 1912 was born I crossed the line into the most remarkable state in the union—Florida. The state of sunshine and sand, buzzards, boosters and blasted hopes. Where everything is different than anywhere else; where people from the north flock by the thousands, thinking to escape the cold, and suffer as they never suffered before from the cold, as they hover over the excises for stoves in the flimsy constructed houses.

As I stated before, Florida is different than any other place on earth. The land, so far as I have seen it, is absolutely worthless except as a holder for the fertilizer needed to raise the crops, and they raise some immense crops, but of farming later.

In some places they drill and have flowing wells, and in other places drill to let the water out. In the morning you look in the door-ways and see roses, emblems of purity, and on the roof lizzards, emblems of all that is vile and repulsive, the best protected bird in the state.

All through the south, grits, a coarse meal ground out of white corn, is a national dish and one time in Kissimmee a snow storm occurred and the children ran out, thinking of the days when the children of Israel were fed on manna, and exclaimed, "it's raining grits."

The whole of Florida is for sale. Real estate is the principal business and auction sales of city lots, located out in the country, is one of the amusements of the winter.

Florida is a joke alright, thousands flock here for its glorious climate, and find themselves where the cold goes through their lungs, worse than anywhere else on earth, then go home and tell what a glorious climate they have.

Within its borders is the oldest white settlement on this continent, and in the everglades the Seminoles, the only tribe of Indians who have never been conquered. Within her borders are located modern palaces which rival all the beautiful palaces we read of in history, and also some of the poorest and most primitive huts known to civilization. It is a comedy and a tragedy, a land of contrasts, with some good points, but ask anyone what under Heavens he would do if dropped off here and forced to make his livelihood from the soil, and the answer is—starry.

But this is too long. I will write the good points next time.

HANDSOME GIFTS

Made by Mrs. Charles Tallman to Carnegie Free Library.

Before her return to Chicago last week, Mrs. Charles Tallman presented the Public Library with a fine collection of books and pictures. The series consists of the following:

Wild Flowers of America with Colored Plates.

The complete works of Shakespeare, pearle, illustrated with steel engravings.

World Fair pictures. Rights and scenes of the World.

America from the Gulf of Mexico to Alaska.

Types of the Nation.

Ancient Missionary Churches of America.

One set of Kiplings works and about one hundred volumes of old fiction, and a box of geological specimens.

Besides all these Mrs. Tallman gave a very beautiful rug made from pelican skins and leathers.

H. P. Pyramide is going to present the library with his collection of geological specimens, which are as fine as any in the state of Michigan. In all, this will make 3,500 books in the library, the original number having doubled in the past year.

SOON TO BUILD

J. A. Vought Will Erect Fine Two Story Building at Present Quarters.

It is with a great deal of satisfaction that the Courier is able to announce to its readers that, even though at present everything in the building line is at a standstill, still there is a considerable preparation being made for building and improvements this spring.

The one we are about to mention, J. A. Vought, has found his present quarters too small for the rapidly increasing business, and will as soon as the weather will permit, start the erection of a fine concrete building on his present location. The olden wooden building now used as a blacksmith shop will be placed lengthwise at the north end of the lot, and a 70 foot front, two story building will be erected. The additional floor space will be used for a work shop, paint shop and other work in connection with the line of work conducted. Part of this floor space will also be used for storing purposes and during the resort season as an automobile garage. Mr. Vought stated to a Courier representative that although he did not intend to go into the garage business, there would be space enough to accommodate some of the summer tourists.

JUDGE ALDEN LAST NUMBER

Closing Number of Citizens' Lecture Course on Evening of March 8.

Will Be the Most Universally Popular Lecture Ever given in Charlevoix.

The closing number of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course will be given by Judge Alden Friday evening, March 8, 8 p.m. at the Charlevoix theatre.

To the majority of patrons of the lecture course Judge Alden needs no introduction of special words of commendation. His lecture of last year, "The Needs of the Hour," pronounced by all the most universally popular lecture ever given in Charlevoix, won for him a large place in the hearts of the people of Charlevoix.

The committee was authorized by the board to refund the admission to any one expressing dissatisfaction. The only words of dissatisfaction expressed were those of people who failed to attend, heaving their heads for not suggesting their attending.

When the people of Charlevoix have the opportunity to hear a lecturer of Judge Alden's ability, a lecturer with a message, and with a manner of delivering it which produces a lasting impression, not a single vacant seat should be found in the theatre at the beginning of his lecture.

"The ideal Chautauqua address," "Hitting the nail squarely on the head," "Worth a hundred discourses on special reforms," "Witty, logical, humorous, winning, practical, intense," "Touches living vital topics in a manner compelling attention,"

"The conclusions of a hard headed lawyer and business man," are some of the expressions taken from the comments of his listeners.

His lecture to be given here "The Powder and the Match" is his latest development, and promises to relieve any of his previous lectures. It has been given elsewhere with even stronger words of commendation than given for "The Seed of the Hour."

Reserved seats will be on sale Tuesday evening, March 5, at Central Drug Store at 7 p.m.

Social and Sleigh-ride.

The young people of the Baptist church and their friends will be entertained at a social next Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwards in the country. All desiring to go are requested to meet at the post-office at seven o'clock, ten cents will be charged for the sleigh-ride, which will be turned over to the "piano-tune."

For Sale.

Pair of colts, age 3 and 1. Bred from Iron Duke. Also a year old stallion.

WILL HOLD CITY PRIMARY

Republican Party Will Nominate Candidates Under General Primary System.

PEOPLE TO MAKE THEIR CHOICE

City Committee Will Act as Canvassing Board to Determine Nominees.

No Person Will Be Allowed to Take Part Unless He Has Enrolled As a Republican—All Parties Invited to Take Part.

Inspired by the spirit manifested throughout the state as to the direct nomination of all candidates for public offices, by the people, the Republican city committee has decided to hold a primary election this spring for the election of candidates to fill the various city offices. All will be given an equal chance for getting the office they desire, if they should desire one. The primary will be conducted along the same lines as the law governing state primaries, as will also be the ballots. Each year there has been considerable grumbling as to the methods pursued in the election of the various city officers, and this year those who were the leaders in the dissatisfied element will have a chance to use their influence along the lines they have desired. The council has sanctioned the move, and all parties are invited to take part in the primary.

Below is given the resolutions passed by the city committee:

Resolved, That the republican party of the city of Charlevoix nominate as candidates for the various city and ward offices at a primary election to be held on the 3rd Monday in March, 1912, from one o'clock in the afternoon until eight o'clock in the evening. Candidates desiring their names placed upon the ticket shall file with the secretary of the republican city committee on or before the second Monday in March, written applications stating the office for which they desire to be a candidate, which application will be signed by at least twenty-five republican electors, for the office of mayor, clerk, treasurer, and justice of the peace, and by at least ten republican electors for the office of supervisor, alderman, and constable.

Be it further resolved, That no person shall be allowed to take part in the above election unless he shall have been enrolled as a republican at the last enrollment day or the one next preceding.

And be it further resolved, That the two republican committeemen from each ward shall act as inspectors of election, and in case they shall be disqualified by reason of being a candidate, or are absent from the city, or for any other reason are not able to act as such inspectors, then the republican committee for the city of Charlevoix shall appoint some republican elector to act as inspector, to fill such vacancy.

And be it further resolved, That the republican committee for the city of Charlevoix shall act as a canvassing board to determine who shall be the nominees of the republican party for the various city and ward offices, which said committee shall meet on Tuesday following said primary election.

And be it further resolved, That the said primary election shall be conducted in accordance with the laws governing primary elections, unless otherwise changed by this resolution.

And be it further resolved, That all other political parties be and are hereby invited to take similar action in nominating their candidates.

Adopted at a meeting of the republican city committee held Tuesday the 27th day of February 1912.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS

Many Cathartics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. This preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are purging, soothing and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless, and colorless. Combined with other well-known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge, nor cause nausea. They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons, and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in three size packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 30 tablets, 25 cents; 50 tablets, 50 cents. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store, The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

MARION.

Birthday parties seem to be the order of the day.

Miss Lucy Brazelle of Chebnygan is visiting Mrs. Mike O'Brien.

Ed. Newman of South Charlevoix visited at the Graham brothers Sunday.

There will be a dance at Marion Center grange Friday evening, March 8.

G. E. Dutton and wife of Charlevoix were looking over their farm Sunday.

James Cook was pleasantly surprised by several of his friends last Friday evening.

Mrs. Harrison, an old pioneer, highly respected by all passed away last Saturday noon.

David Alexander, having recently moved into the neighborhood, about thirty-six friends gathered at his home Tuesday evening, to help him celebrate his birthday. Music and games were the main features of the evening, after which refreshments were served. The party was a complete surprise on Mr. Alexander.

How Cold Affects the Kidneys

How Cold Affects the Kidneys. Cold congests the kidneys, throws too much work upon them, and weakens their action. Serious kidney trouble and even Bright's disease may result. Strengthen your kidneys, get rid of the pain and soreness, build them up by the timely use of Foley's Kidney Pills. Tonic in action, quick in results.

Foley's Kidney Pills will cure any case of kidney or bladder trouble and beyond the reach of medicine. No medicine can do more.

WOOD.

To log handling is nearly over now.

The McGough School gave a program Friday afternoon.

Glenn Cummings has been handling logs on N. H. Long haul, the past two weeks.

COUNTY NORMAL.

The training room children celebrated Washington's birthday Friday afternoon with an appropriate program. The normal class was present and its members took part in the exercises.

Marguerite Munger has begun her practice teaching in the chart class.

Ellie Rasmussen, who has been teaching her sister's school near Cross Village for the past five weeks, returned Monday morning.

Comptess Mason was absent three days of last week because of the death of her aunt, Mrs. Charles Stevens, of Phelps.

Georgia Adams substituted in the fifth grade room last Tuesday during the absence of Miss Lewis, who attended the funeral of Mrs. Stevens.

The normal class attended the very interesting debate held in the High School room Friday afternoon. Miss Whiting has resumed her work in the training room after a two week's absence due to the death of her mother. She returned Monday from her home in Monticello, Iowa.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Mr. DeVoe and Mr. Craig took charge of Mr. Carpenter's classes during the latter's absence last week. He left as a Mason to become a Sturmer. Notice should be given to the proper authorities that he was a carpenter.

The Rotary classes have begun laboratory work.

Charlevoix was from Bellare, Iowa.

Last Friday the Bellare H. S. basketball team came to this city with the expectation of adding another scalp to its belt, but was defeated by the local team by a score of 14 to 12.

The visitors were however, not our boys, but lacked the speed and endurance which characterize a winning team. The game was started out with a snap that would have done credit to much more experienced players. The visitors put up a strong defense, but the local team was especially exciting. Our center, Pauline, and forwards Hart and Durango showing excellent work.

This was the last game of the season on the home floor, but the boys are looking forward to a game at Harbor Springs next Friday to decide the championship of North-western Michigan. No better team ever represented the red and white, and we wish the boys the best of success in their last game.

The seniors entertained the juniors Saturday evening at the high school building. Everyone had a jolly time and the juniors are unanimous in saying that the seniors are royal entertainers.

Friday afternoon a program celebrating the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln was rendered in the high school room, and enjoyed by the students and a number of visitors. Besides the singing of patriotic songs by the student body, the following numbers were given:

Essay, "The Mission of Two Great Men," by Mabel Danlop.

Essay, "Lincoln the Humorist," by Paul Harsha.

Story, "The Perfect Tribute," by Pauline Margham.

Declaration, "Gettysburg Address," by Hazel Mills.

Debate, Resolved "That hero worship is detrimental to a country."

Affirmative, Margaret MacNeill, Loren Hart, Earl Lyon, Negative, Will Mitchell, Helen Armstrong, and Candice Volker. The debate was very interesting, and the contestants showed enthusiasm and good work. The question was decided in favor of the negative.

BACK GIVES OUT

Plenty of Charlevoix Readers Have This Experience.

You tax the kidneys overwork them.

They can't keep up the continual strain.

The back gives out, it aches and pains.

Urinary troubles set in.

Don't wait longer take Doan's Kidney Pills.

Residents of this vicinity endorse them.

Can Charlevoix people doubt the following evidence?

G. E. Bristol, 51 N. East St., Boyne City, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at Watson's Drug Store, and have found them to be a remedy of merit. I have been annoyed for some time by a persistent ache and pain in the small of my back. My kidneys did not act as they should. I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and used them as directed. I recommend them, for I am feeling so much better in every way since I used them."

A GREAT DISCOVERY

Certain Ingredients That Really Promote Hair Growth When Properly Combined.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Naphthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germs which rob the hair of its natural nourishment, and also creates a clean, healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Pilocarpine, although not a coloring matter or dye, is a well-known ingredient for restoring the hair to its natural color, when the loss of hair has been caused by a disease of the scalp.

These ingredients in proper combination, with alcohol added as a stimulant and for its well-defined nourishing properties, perfect perhaps the most effective remedy that is known for scalp and hair troubles.

We have a remedy which is entirely composed of these ingredients, in combination with other extremely valuable medicinal agents. We guarantee it to positively cure dandruff and to grow hair, even though the scalp in spots is bare of hair. If there is any vitality left in the roots, it will positively cure baldness, or we will refund your money. If the scalp has a glazed, shiny appearance, it's an indication that dandruff is present, and in other instances we believe baldness is curable.

We want everyone troubled with scalp disease to use our hair restorer. It does not cure dandruff, but grows hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will refund your money if it fails to give you a positive cure in 100 days. We print this guarantee on every bottle. It has effected a positive cure in 100 per cent of cases where put to a practical test.

Reveal Hair Tonic is entirely natural, and is not a fancy preparation, but is anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is prescribed. We urge you to try this preparation at our entire risk. Certainly we know of no better guarantee to give you. Remember, you can obtain Reveal Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store, The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Proprietor, Charlevoix, Michigan.

ORGANIZE LEAGUE

Will Be conducted Along Same Lines as Men's Bible Class.

James, Allan and Frank Wilkinson, R. W. Kane, A. R. Clark, E. S. Stacks and Gabe Hines attended the organization of the Good Fellowship League at Boye City last Sunday. This, the first meeting, was very successful, there being about ninety attendance.

R. W. Kane and Dr. Allen Wilkinson gave an outline of the work as done in Charlevoix, which will be used nearly the same in that city.

They were all entertained at the Wolverine Hotel, and to say that this was greatly appreciated is putting it mildly.

After this meeting, the local option executive committee of the county met in the hotel parlors and went through the usual routine of work, arranging for speakers for the coming campaign.

To the Farmers of Charlevoix and Vicinity.

We have decided to put out a limited acreage of sweet corn to be delivered in Charlevoix. If you wish any at same it would be well to communicate with us at once.

TITO

A Satire on the Advantages For Adoption of a Dog Over a Child

By Mrs. Martha Burgess

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

John Douglas and his wife, Maria, were not blessed with children. They determined to adopt a boy and after waiting some time the resolution came to the most convenient age the little fellow should be.

"I think," said John, "you'll find that a baby will be a good deal of care. There's a college period, and the child would have to be brought up on some kind of artificial baby food, and there's only a certain proportion of babies that live through their babyhood. If your boy dies you've had all your trouble for nothing. I think we'd better take a child seven or eight years old."

"It seems to me," replied Maria, "that unless we begin at the beginning and progress with the child we won't be used to him when he reaches that age. He'll be ready for the whooping cough and the measles and such diseases, and we won't be ready for him to have them."

The matter was discussed between them for a long while, Maria holding to the baby plan, John desiring to make the short cut. Maria yielded since she saw no way of getting a child at all unless she did, for John had seen comic pictures of men walking the floor at midnight with colicky babies and did not propose to submit to any such strain.

So they went to an orphan asylum, and asked for a six-year-old boy. The matron, who had brought up a family, tried to induce them to select a stolid, slow-moving little fellow who would sit all day playing with toys. But John preferred a bright boy with an intelligent eye. So they took the latter home with them and congratulated themselves that they were now a family. They called the boy Robert.

The next morning after breakfast, when Maria had finished her household duties, she remembered Robert and made a search for him. He was nowhere to be found. She called for him not only in the house, but out of doors. Thinking he had strayed away, she telephoned John, who was at business, and John reported the fact to the police. When her mental tea pot had reached the boiling point Maria heard a call from the top of the tallest tree in the yard and, going out there, saw her adopted son on the topmost branch. Calling for him to come down, she held her breath while he did so, every moment expecting to see him fall and lie a corpse at her feet. But he landed safely. He had been in the tree all the while, and when his foster mother asked him why he had not answered her call he fixed a pair of mischievous eyes on her and said he had been "hidin'."

SAW HER ADOPTED SON ON THE TOPMOST BRANCH.

When John came home from business that evening the couple talked the matter over and concluded that the short cut in raising children was in the very beginning a failure. Both agreed that the morning's experience would be repeated indefinitely and in a thousand varieties.

"I think," said John, "that a child will be too much trouble for us. We'd better try a dog."

Robert's place was taken in the Douglas home by a little terrier, to whom the couple gave the name of Tito. This was as much of a success as his predecessor was a failure, so far as adoption was concerned. The dog had no desire to climb trees and need not be left to run about all the while, for he readily submitted to be tied to a table leg or a newel post.

One winter night when John had left an unusually hot fire in the furnace he and Maria were awakened by Tito's jumping on their bed and barking vigorously. Smelling smoke, they arose and went downstairs. John opened the door leading to the cellar, but quickly closed it again to shut off a flame that leaped forward to consume him. Huddling on their clothes, the couple got out of the house just in time to save their lives.

"How much more valuable is a dog than a child!" exclaimed John. "No child would have saved us as Tito has done."

Maria made no reply.

There were many ways in which Tito proved himself more adaptable to the wants of the Douglases than a child would have been. Their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Keweenaw, never could go out in the evening for their little daughter Bessie must be put to bed at 8 o'clock and could not be left alone in the house. The Douglases did all the visiting, for they could take Tito with them, chain him to a sofa leg and take him home with them at midnight if they chose to stay so long.

John was a hard working man and gradually accumulated a little fortune, on the income of which he and Maria could live when they came to old age. One day John had trouble with a safety deposit company where he kept his securities and took them home with him, intending to rent another box the next day. He also drew his account, amounting to $250, from the banking department of the concern and took that home too. Whether some evil disposed person saw him draw the money and followed him, certain it is that the same night the house was robbed. Tito, the securities and the money disappearing at the same time.

This, of course, was a terrible blow to the couple. In one thing they were disappointed. They had always supposed that Tito would warn them against burglars. Instead of that he had been captured. But a strange smell indicated that the dog had been put to sleep by the robbers before looting the house and carried away with the booty.

Maria endeavored to comfort her husband as well as she could, though the sorrow she gave him was very thin. "Well, dear," she said, "we have no one but ourselves to provide for, and we don't need much. If we had a child to leave behind us we would have something to worry about. If we only had Tito back I would willingly give up the securities and the money."

John made no reply. He had struggled for twenty years to accumulate a property that would support him and his wife in their old age or that he might feel that in case of his death she would be provided for, and he saw no comfort in his loss, especially since he had passed up age when a man usually finds himself indispensed to begin again.

Of course he reported the matter to the police. The sergeant at the desk questioned him closely and when John said that Tito had disappeared the sergeant said that it was possible the robber had made a mistake in carrying the dog off alive instead of dead. He might be identified by Tito in case the latter was recovered. He took John's address and promised to notify him if any clue were discovered, but since nothing had been left behind by which to track him the chances of recovering the property were slight.

John was very much discouraged. "If they hadn't got ahead of the dog," he said, "two would have been alarmed by his bark."

"Oh, a burglar never thinks of entering a house where there is a dog," said the sergeant, "without first eliminating the beast."

Then he took down a minute description of Tito. When John told Maria what the sergeant had said she declared that if Tito were alive she was sure he would lead to the discovery of the lost property.

"That's just like a woman," said John. "She's always considering probable what she wishes to come to pass. My opinion is that the robber or robbers killed Tito and took his body away with them."

Months passed and nothing was heard of Tito or the lost property. Then one day a telephone message came to the Douglases that a dog had come into the possession of the police which answered to Tito's description. Would either Mr. or Mrs. Douglas come to the station and identify him? Maria lost no time in reaching the station, expecting to find Tito there. She was disappointed. The sergeant asked her to be seated and, taking up the desk telephone receiver, called up a police office in a distant city. When the party he wished to speak with replied the sergeant asked him to "bring the dog" to the phone and place the receiver near his ear. When the dog was reported in position Mrs. Douglas was asked to call Tito through the phone.

"Tito," she said in an affectionate tone, "Tito. Did they take Tito away from us?"

A series of joyful barks came back to her that removed all doubt as to the identity of the dog.

Nothing would satisfy the woman but that her husband, who was at business, should be connected by the wire with Tito that he might call the dog and hear his bark. This was done, and when Tito heard his master's voice he went wild with joy.

"The way we got on to the dog," said the sergeant, "was this: A man who committed a burglary was tracked to his room, where he was arrested, and this dog was found there. His collar, on which you told us his name was cut, had been replaced by a cheap one. A large amount of property of different kinds has been recovered, and it is quite probable that yours may be among the rest."

And so it proved. All the missing securities were recovered and a part of the money.

"I told you so," said Maria to John. "I knew Tito would be the means of recovering our fortune."

"How did you know it?" asked John. "I just knew it, that's how."

"I know one thing," replied the husband, "a dog for adoption beats a child all hollow."

At the time when the help of Tito was secured, the dog was found in a stable in the city. The dog was found in a stable in the city.

On Tuesday a jolly crowd of sixteen drove to the farm of John Cooper, located near Tronton, the sleigh-ride was given for M. Alcock and A. E. Widdifield and sister who are visiting here.

E. S. Stacks is attending a meeting of the Michigan Sunday Association at Lansing this week. He will also attend the roundup of the Farmers' Institute and visit our boys at the M. A. C. while there. From Lansing he will go to Albion on business and make his daughter, Mayfred, a short visit.

Last Sunday the pastor of the Congregational church gave the introductory address in the series of addresses on Al. Pidd's new book, "Through the Mill." Next Sunday evening he will give the second address. The subject will be "Visions and First Impressions of the Wonderland—America."

On Monday evening Chas. Carey and wife entertained a large number of relatives and friends to a sumptuous six o'clock dinner, in honor of M. Alcock, brother of Mrs. Carey and A. E. Widdifield and sister Esther, brother and sister of Harry Widdifield. Those outside of the family were Hon. J. M. Harris and Dr. A. M. Wilkinson and wife.

E. S. Stacks has prepared a speakers' check map of Charlevoix county to be used in the local option campaign, which is similar to the railroad train dispatchers. It was referred to the executive committee at Boyne City last week and met with such approval that several copies have been made for use in the instance of the well as campaign work.

The late Bishop Williams of Connecticut was setting in a box in an open house where collegiate commencement exercises were being held. The ladies of the ladies were extremely decollete. After looking around the house with an opera glass one of the ladies exclaimed: "Honestly, Bishop Williams, did you ever see anything like it in all your life?" "Never," gravely replied the Bishop, "never, madam, since I was wedded."

Are you an advertiser and receiving a good trade, or are you the fellow who wonders why your business is "bunk"? If advertising doesn't pay, why do progressive merchants do it? Every bit of advertising of whatever nature helps every merchant in town, and also helps the town. Now are you keeping your end up or is the other merchant practically giving you what you get? The Corner covers the territory and the rates of ads are modern. As a man said the other day, "What's the sense of standing on the corner and freezing your ears off when you can set by the stove at home and read it in the Courier."

saloon. The backbone of the liquor traffic, its most dangerous element, is the licensed bar.

Brewers who see the handwriting on the wall are now spending large sums in advertising to build up the home trade in case the saloon is finally driven out.

The licensed saloon forces the liquor interests into politics—or rather drags them in; it is human nature for men to look out for themselves.

It is not a question of choice, but of coal business necessity. The saloonist has certain rights granted him by law. Now, that law with us is the result of political action, of party victory. The liquor dealer must watch parties, assist parties, reward parties, punish parties, corrupt parties; just as his business interests demand.

Smash the saloon and you have smashed a powerful political machine.

Smash the saloon and you have smashed one of the most dangerous elements in local society, and national as well—an element that is not only corrupting the morals, degrading the voter, robbing the purse, impoverishing the home, polluting politics and bullying the police, but oftentimes muzzling both press and pulpit.

The elimination of the saloon has shown, results in the election of better men to office in score of cities. Michigan men are accordingly developing a deeper desire to get rid of the saloon for the good of politics. They have heard the saloon's "clarion voice" all too frequently.

It says to ambition: "Have a care how you injure our business. We can put you out of job."

It says to the statesman: "You hold your high office at our pleasure. We have the power to say whether you shall be retired if you go against our welfare."

It says to the public official: "Do our bidding or take the consequences."

It says to the law-abiding, decency-loving man: "What are you going to do about it?"

HAPPILY WED

Well Known Charlevoix Young Lady Marries Almont Man.

On Wednesday, February 21 at six p. m. occurred the marriage of Magdalene Rae Mitchell, eldest daughter of John Mitchell and wife of this city, and Charles H. Wilson of Almont, Michigan, at the home of the bride's parents.

The home was very prettily decorated, the ceremony being performed by Rev. H. A. Putnam. Only the relatives and a few friends attended, those from out of town being Mrs. Wilson, mother of the groom, and Frank Darling of Almont, Miss Eva Lewis of East Jordan and John Mitchell, Jr., and family of Boyne City.

Although the groom is a stranger here, the bride is well known and her many friends join in wishing them success in their new home at Almont, they having left for there Thursday.

his breath. Her eyes were black and her face a deeper rose than usual. "It felt that his own was white as death." "Did I shoot high enough?" she asked sweetly. "I really forgot about my leg down."

"Freckles winced. Did the child know how near she had come? Surely she could not. Or was it possible that she had the nerve and skill to fire like that purposefully?"

"I will send the first reliable man I meet for McLean," said the Bird Woman, gathering up the lines. "If I don't meet one when we reach town we will send a messenger. If it wasn't for having the gun, say me I would go myself."

Round eyed, Freckles watched the Bird Woman and the angel drive away. After they were out of sight and he was safely hidden among the branches of a small tree, he remembered that he had neither thanked them nor said good-by. Would the Bird Woman and the angel come again? No other women that he had ever known would. But were they like any other women he had ever known?

He thought of the Bird Woman's untroubled face and the angel's reverent practice and knew that he was not so sure that they would not come back. "What were the people in the town?" he asked himself. "There had been people at the lodge who exchanged a stern, perfunctory sort of greeting but that was all. The others that came on receiving days he had divided into three classes. The first class, the kind that came with a heart in the eye and sympathy in every feature of their faces, the kind that said, 'Poor little fellow, how hard it must be for you, little one, that hungry stomach won't let you sleep, little one, no longer care for it, in every the same spirit in which they pitched biscuits to the monkeys at the zoo, and for the same reason to see how they would take them and be amazed by what they would do, and the third class, that he considered real people who made him feel they cared that he was there and would have been glad to see him elsewhere."

Now, here was another class that had met him as a son and brother. With them he could be the only one in his life forget the lost hand that every day tortured him with a new pang. What sort of people were they and where did they belong among the classes he knew? He had to give it up because he had never known others like them, but how he loved them. Out in the world where he was soon going were the majority like them or were they of the hyperic and him throwing classes? Freckles did not know, but he reached the intimate conclusion that people like the Bird Woman, the angel, McLean and the Duncans were very rare, hence their exceeding preciousness.

He had forgotten the excitement of the morning and the passing of time when distant voices aroused him, and he softly lifted his head. Nearer and nearer they came, and as the heavy wagons rumbled down the cart trail he could hear their planks. The engine were shouting themselves hoarse for the lumbering guard, Freckles didn't feel that he observed it. He would have given much to be able to go out to the men and explain how it was, but only to McLean could he tell his story.

At the sight of Freckles the men threw up their hats and cheered. McLean shook hands with him warmly, but the Duncans pulled him into their arms and hugged him like a bear and chided over a few words of praise. The gang drove in and finished following the trail.

When the last wagon rolled away McLean sat down on the stump and Freckles and the story he was telling to tell. The boss could scarcely believe his senses. Also he was greatly disappointed.

"I have been almost praying all the way over, Freckles," he said, "that you would have some evidence by which we could arrest those fellows and get them out of our way, but this will never do. We can't mix those women up in it. They have helped you save me the tree and my anger as well. Going about the country as she does, the Bird Woman could never be expected to testify against them."

"No, indeed, not the angel either," said Freckles.

"The angel?" queried the astonished McLean.

The boss listened in silence while Freckles told of the coming and christening of the angel.

"I know her father well," said McLean at last, "but I have often seen her. You are right, she is a beautiful young girl. I do not understand why her father risks such a jewel in this place."

"He's doing it because she is such a jewel," said Freckles eagerly. "Why, she's trusting a rattlesnake to rattle before it strikes her, and, of course, she thinks she can trust man kind as well. The man isn't made that wouldn't lay down the life of him for her. She don't need any eyes. Her face and the pretty ways of her are all the protection she would need in a land of howling savages."

"Did you say she handled one of the revolvers?" asked McLean.

"She started at the breath out of me body," admitted Freckles. "Seems that her father has taught her to shoot. The Bird Woman told her distinctly to lie low and blaze away high just to help scare them. The spunky little thing followed them right on into the west road, spitting lead like hail and clipping all about the heels and heads of them."

"Now, will they come back?" asked McLean.

"Of course," said Freckles. "At least Black Jack will. Wessner might not have the pluck. And the next time—Freckles hesitated."

"What?"

"It will just be a question of who shoots first and straightest."

"Then the only thing for me to do is to double the guard and get the gang here the first minute possible."

As soon as he felt that the guard was on the alert, he set out for the town. The fact is, in many cases, it is better to be sure than to be right. It would do to leave you here long of alone. Jack has been shooting twenty years to you and it stands to reason that you are no match for him. Which of the gang would you like best to leave with you?"

"No one, sir," said Freckles emphatically. "Next time is where I am. I won't try to fight them alone. I'll just be getting wind of them and then make tracks for you. I'll need to come like lightning, and Duncan has no extra horse, so I'm thinking you'd better get one, or perhaps a whole wagon for the horse doctor, and he would let me take his bicycle to ride about the place. And at times the head nurse would lead me his for an hour. A wheel would cost less and be faster than a horse and would take less care."

As they walked up to the cabin together, McLean insisted on another guard, but Freckles was stubbornly set on fighting his battle alone. The made one mental condition. If the Bird Woman was going to give up the life to him, he would give up the life to her, and the life to the second guard, so that the second guard would be the only one left in the neighborhood.

With McLean it was a case of being his soldier, better perhaps to be overthrown. The boy he was growing so to love that he could not fear to cross him, and to have Freckles keep his trust and who alone meant to him more than any money he might lose.

The next morning McLean brought the wagon, and Freckles took it down to the trail to test it. It was new, clean, with as little as possible to catch in hurried riding, and in every way the best of its kind. Freckles went skimming around the trail on it on a preliminary trip before he loaded it in his case and started his minute examination of his line of foot. He glanced around his room as he left it. On the moss in front of his untried seat lay the angel's hat.

"IT WILL JUST BE A QUESTION OF WHO SHOTS FIRST."

He went and picked it up, oh, so carefully, gazing at it with hungry eyes, but touching it only to carry it over to his case, where he hung it on the shining handle bar of the new wagon and looked it in among his treasures. Then he went out to the trail with a new look on his face. He was not in the least afraid of anything that morning. He felt he was the veriest Daniel, and all his fears seemed weak and harmless.

Black Jack was not a man to give up his purpose or to have the hat swept from his head by a bullet and bear it meekly. Moreover, Wessner would, cling to his revenge.

When Freckles roused his room he tenderly and the hat upon his book shelf and, to ward off his awkwardness, mounted his wheel and went spinning about the line again.

"Well, I've drawn out," exclaimed Mrs. Duncan at four later.

Freckles stood before her, holding the angel's hat.

"I've been thinking this long time that ye or Duncan would see that sun bonnets weren't law enough for a woman of my standing, and ye're a gold boddy to bring me this beautiful hat."

She turned it about, examining the weave of the straw and the foliage trimmings, passing her rough fingers over the satin ties delightfully. "As she held it up, admiring it, Freckles' astonished eyes saw a new side of Sarah Duncan. She was jesting, but under the jest the fact loomed strong that there was something in her soul crying out after that bit of feminine luxury. He resolved that when he rescued her, he would send her as fine a hat as the angel's if it took $50 to do it.

She gingerly handed it back to him.

"It's more gold of ye to think of me," she said lightly, "but I mean question your taste a wee. Dye no think ye had best return this and get a woman with half her hair gray a little plainer bonnet?" Seems like that's far over gay for me. I'm no saying that it's no' exactly what I'd like to me, but I mean to think myself ridiculous. Ye'd best give this to somebody young and pretty, say about sixteen. Where dy ye come by it, Freckles? If there's anything been dropping lately ye had forgotten to mention it."

"Do you see anything heavenly about that hat?" queried Freckles, holding it up.

The morning breeze waved the ribbons gracefully, blinding one about Freckles' shaven and the other across his chest, where they caught and clung as if magnetized.

"Yes," said Sarah Duncan. "It's exactly what I'd call a heavenly hat."

"Sure," said Freckles, "for it's be-coming to an angel."

Then he told her about the hat and asked her what he should do with it.

"Take it to her, of course," said Sarah Duncan.

"You think I should be taking it home?" he said.

"Of course ye must," said Mrs. Duncan. "Ye gave away and take the blessed little angel her beautiful hat."

"Are you sure it will be all right?" urged Freckles. "Do you think Mr. McLean would care?"

"No," said Mrs. Duncan. "I don't. If ye and me agree that a thing ought to be done, and I want in your place, why, it's bound to be all right with McLean. I ought ye put on your Sabbath day clothes?"

Freckles shook his head. He knew what he had to do, but there was no use in taking time to try to explain it to Mrs. Duncan while he was so hurried. He explained his wedding boots for steps, ye her his suit and went spinning toward town. He knew very well where the angel lived. He had passed her many times, and he passed a man without even taking his eyes from the street, steering straight for her father's place of business.

Carrying the hat, Freckles passed a long line of clerks and at the door of the private office asked to see the proprietor. When he had waited a moment a tall, spare, keen eyed man faced him and in brisk, nervous tones asked, "How can I serve you, sir?"

Freckles handed him the package and answered, "By delivering to your daughter this hat, which she was after leaving at my place the other day when she went off in a hurry. And by saying to her and the Bird Woman that I'm more thankful than I'll be saying words to express for the brave thing they was done for me. I'm McLean's lumbering guard, sir."

Grange Column

Rock Elm Grange, No. 705.

Regular session of Rock Elm grange called to order February 17, 1912 by Worthy Master, Fred VanGorder. The vacant office of gatekeeper was filled by Brother Levi Metz. Grange opened in form and minutes of last meeting read.

The Pontonia committee reported and were discharged. The following bills were allowed on motion: Levi Metz, for ham, $3.45; D. S. Kison, for bread, butter and hay, $4.20; Joe Whitfield for hams, sugar and coffee, $2.06. Brother Boyd Hipp was appointed to purchase tying rings for horse shed and to put up same.

The literary program consisted of a reading by Leon VanGorder, a song by the grange choir; a reading by Mrs. Hinton; a recitation by Miss Maddalgh; a reading by the Worthy Master; stories by Joe Whitfield and the W. M.; a reading by Abe Stevenson and another song by the choir.

It was moved and supported to have a dance here on March 8, and that the committee in charge have power to postpone it if necessary. A committee was appointed consisting of Joe Whitfield and Boyd Hipp. Several brothers and sisters volunteered to wash the dishes.

A finance committee for the ensuing year was appointed as follows: James Whitfield, Fred VanGorder, and Boyd Hipp. Also an executive committee as follows: Abe Stevenson, Levi Metz, and Daniel Kison. Two Marion Centre members were present. Grange closed in form.

The worthy lecturer wishes to announce the following lecture hour program for the next regular meeting to be held March 2.

Discussion on local option led by Mr. H. E. Hinton.

Temperance recitations by Misses Majorie Cleland, Winnie Maddalgh and Mildred Hinton.

Song by grange choir.

Reading by Leon VanGorder.

Current events by other members.

Song by grange.

Ironton Grange, No. 707.

Ironton grange, No. 707 met February 20 with Master E. H. Clark in the chair.

Grange was called to order at 11:00 a. m. Two applications were presented for membership. They then balloted for candidates, after which a recess was declared until after dinner. The dinner was enjoyed by all.

Called to order again at 1:30 p. m. The lecturer's program consisted of songs, recitations and readings. It was then decided to have another degree team for the first and second degrees. Mr. Neil Kemp was appointed captain. Two candidates were obligated in the first and second degrees and initiated in the third and fourth degrees by the old degree team.

For good of the order there were stories and readings given. A motion was made to invite Wilson degree team to the next meeting, March 5, 1912, to initiate. A motion was also made and carried that we give them supper on their arrival as they would have a long drive, and then give them some more after the initiation.

Sister Hammond then announced that the play "Arthur Brisbane," or "A Mother's Love," would be given March 1, 1912. Everybody come and see the best play of the season.

Grange was then closed with 30 members present.

We would like to see visitors from different granges at our next meeting or any time.

Next meeting will be held the evening of March 5, as some of the members cannot come to the day meetings.

A Warning Against Wet Feet.

Wet and chilled feet usually affect the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, and in grippe, bronchitis or pneumonia may result. Watch carefully, particularly the children, and for the racking, stubborn coughs give Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It soothes the inflamed membranes, and heals the cough quickly. Bay Shore Grange.

Meeting called to order by the Worthy Master. All officers were present. Regular order of business taken up. The by-laws prepared by the by-law committee were read and adopted.

Lecture hour was in charge of the Lecturer, O. C. Atwood.

Song, "Stay on the Farm," by Ray Karcher.

Roll call was responded to by each one stating in a few words a good point of the grange.

Recitation, "The First Snow Fall," by Helen Hand.

Discussion, "Farm Fences," by I.

C. Wallace, and was ably discussed by several.

Reading, "Shan'te, In The Country," by Mrs. George Lange.

Recitation, "Little Looks About the Farm," by J. Karcher.

Song, "I've Grown So Used to You," by Allen Bowman and daughter.

Discussion, "Which Does it Pay Best to Buy, the Cheapest Articles or the Best?" Discussed by Minnie Jones and others.

Oration by Samuel Long.

Song, "Yankle Doodle Housewives."

Recitation by Mariel Brecheisen.

Song, by Agnes and Marion Worth.

Worthy lecturer requested all to respond to roll-call at next meeting with a current event expressed in a few words.

In honor of Brother Samuel Long's 74th birthday, he was presented with a cane and umbrella by the members of the grange.

The grange voted to have Brother McClure give a lecture here in the near future.

A committee of five members were appointed to state at next meeting what they thought best for the interest of the grange in regard to having dancing at the regular grange meetings.

Forty-nine members present. Six visitors from Maple Grove; two from Horton Bay.

Next regular meeting March 8.

FUR COAT

FUR COATS

The only coat made for these cold winters—that's your opinion as well as mine. The prices are high in the fall, but now you can buy all that are left at most any old price. We do not want to carry any over until next year; we're going to close them out. Just one or two of a few kinds. If you want one—now is the time to buy, and if you are short of cash, I will sell you on easy terms.

It means money in your pocket and a good fur coat on your back to buy now. Give me an opportunity to save you money.

Ordinance No. 109

An Ordinance to amend section one, section three, section nine, section ten and section eleven of Ordinance No. 66 of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, being an Ordinance regulating the keeping of dogs within the City of Charlevoix and providing for the licensing and taxing thereof, are hereby amended to read as follows:

SECTION I. Sections one, three, nine, ten and eleven of Ordinance No. 66 of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, being an Ordinance regulating the keeping of dogs within the City of Charlevoix and providing for the licensing and taxing thereof, are hereby amended to read as follows:

SECTION II. It shall be unlawful for any person to own, possess or harbor any dog within the corporate limits of the City of Charlevoix, without first obtaining a license therefor, from the City Clerk and complying with the provisions hereinafter set forth. Provided that during the months of June, July, August and September in each year and such other months as the common council of the City of Charlevoix may designate by resolution, from time to time, as the public health and safety may require, which said resolution shall be published for one week in a newspaper circulating in the City of Charlevoix before said resolution takes effect. No person shall permit any dog to go at large or be upon the streets, sidewalks, parks or other public places within the city without being provided with a good and sufficient muzzle, to be approved by the common council of the city, rendering it impossible for such dog to bite or snap.

SECTION III. The clerk shall deliver to each person to whom a license is issued, at the time of issuing the same, a metal check bearing the number of the license, duly stamped thereon, and the year when issued, together with the words "Dog license, Charlevoix, Michigan." For each license said clerk shall at the time and before issuing the same, and for each renewal thereof, collect of each applicant and pay into the city treasury three dollars for each male dog and five dollars for each bitch. All licenses under this ordinance shall expire the first day of May following their issue, when issued for a period less than one year the clerk shall collect only pro-rata of said license fees, but the minimum fee for any part of the year shall be one dollar. The shape and style of said check shall be uniform for each year but shall be changed each year on the first day of May.

SECTION IV. No such dog shall be released from the pound unless the owner or person entitled to demand the same shall pay to the poundmaster three dollars for a male dog and five dollars for a female. Provided, however, that any owner of an impounded dog who shall exhibit a license, exhibiting the licensing of such dog, and that he duly provided the same with the collar and tag as herein required, shall be entitled to have such dog surrendered to him upon payment of a releasing fee of twenty-five cents. The poundmaster shall keep a careful record of all dogs received by him with a description thereof and the disposition of the same. He shall weekly pay into the treasury all money received by him for the impounding, release or sale of dogs, and shall weekly file with the city clerk a report showing the number and sex of all dogs impounded during the week, the disposition of the same, and containing the treasurer's receipt for all money paid into the treasury.

SECTION V. All dogs not chained and released within twenty-four hours after being impounded shall at noon next following the expiration of said twenty-four hours be offered for sale by the poundmaster, at the pound, by public outcry to the highest bidder, and if such dog shall not then be sold, it shall be killed the evening succeeding, unless released by some person claiming it as above provided.

SECTION VI. The city clerk subject to the approval of the common council shall yearly enter into a contract with some person or persons for the destruction without the city limits of the bodies of all dogs that shall have been killed by the poundmaster in accordance with section ten of this ordinance.

This ordinance shall take effect twenty days from the date of its adoption. Adopted at a meeting of the common council held February 22, 1912.

W. E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

ERNEST J. UTLEER, City Clerk.

The manufacture of grape juice as a business is growing very rapidly. It supplies a good outlet for the sweet grapes whenever the fruit market is unsatisfactory. One grape producer made 450 gallons of grape juice from the product of less than one acre of land. This grape juice put up in pint bottles, and sold at retail at 25 cents each would amount to $1,500, a big value to be obtained from land that was producing hardly anything as a part of the farm.

TALE OF THE APPLE SELLER

St. Petersburg Huckster Tried to Reduce High Cost of Living.

ISSUED APPEAL TO TOURISTS

To Protect Him from Persecution of Merchants in Same Business.

Dignity of Mayor Tarned by Demands of Hucksters' Friends—Interesting Story From Pen of Glenn M. Oubois.

Of peculiar interest to Charlevoix citizens on account of the similarity of the two cities, one entertaining visitors in the winter the other in the summer, will be this tale of the apple seller of St. Petersburg.

A week or so ago an apple seller came to the city and took out a hucksters license for selling fruit. Not content with driving through the street selling his fruit, he established himself on one of the principal streets and commenced selling at a price below what was being asked by the regular dealers, claiming that an outrageous price was being asked for apples, etc. After a few days he was arrested on a charge of obstructing the streets in violation of the city ordinances, the city officials claiming that the streets were obstructed by the empty boxes and barrels which he left scattered around, while he claimed that his arrest was a deep laid plot of the regular dealers to persecute him, and that he was a martyr to the cause of trying to reduce the high cost of living of the tourists in the city. This martyr then issued an appeal to all tourists to rally to his standard and appear at his trial in the police court, (the mayor is police judge in this state,) and help protect him from the persecution he was undergoing.

Time hangs heavy on the tourists' hands and something new gives promise of developing. Working themselves into a fine frenzy, the police court was crowded when the case was called for trial, and an attempt was made to butt into the orderly process of the court, when the mayor got on his dignity, and stated that all batters in would be fined for contempt of court. The huckster pleaded guilty and his fine was paid by the band of protectors, who called a mass-meeting and appointed a committee to wait on the mayor and state their side of the case. The mayor, clothing himself again in his official dignity, replied that it would be beneath the dignity of his office to meet such a committee. The committee reported back the mayor's reply and the floodgates of oratory were opened and resolutions adopted, relating how they, (the tourists), were being robbed, not being allowed to have the martyr sell them apples, and the meeting adjourned after another committee was appointed to devise a method to reduce the alleged high cost of living in the city.

In the meantime the newspapers had seen the funny side of the whole proceedings and published some rather raw editorials on the subject. The second meeting was held and resolutions were adopted roasting the newspapers and expressing the regret of the assembled tourists, on their part that they would have to abandon St. Petersburg and find another place for a winter's residence, where apples, etc. could be bought cheaper. The floodgates of oratory were again opened, and a very amusing and entertaining afternoon was spent. Another meeting will be held in a short time.

While the whole affair, the seriousness of the tourists over the price of a sack of apples and the dignity of the mayor, reminds one of a comic opera. Many tourists things have been said and every body regrets that they allowed themselves to go so far in their efforts to do something to help kill time. The apple seller has established himself on a vacant lot, and is selling apples as fast as he can hand them out to his "protectors" who, having enlisted as crusaders in his cause, feel themselves in duty bound to purchase apples, and are reaping a fine harvest from what looks to an outsider as a mighty clever advertising stunt.

DEATH WAS FORETOLD

Miss Wally Ecklund Was a Student at Apostolic Holiness Seminary.

Miss Wally Ecklund, aged 30 years, daughter of Adolph Ecklund, died at Owosso last Wednesday, where she was a student in the Apostolic Holiness seminary. Her remains were brought here Friday, and laid to rest Sunday in the Bernard cemetery.

Miss Ecklund's death was foretold in a dramatic manner by one of the instructors at the seminary, Rev. P. F. Elliott, who while conducting the morning chapel services, found himself unable to continue. He walked over to the piano, crossed his hand on the keys and burst into tears. When he could control his voice, he said:

"I hear the clatter of horses' hoofs. I see the hearse backing up to the door of our school to claim its first subject."

After the benediction, Miss Ecklund said: "I believe that the person to whom Mr. Elliott refers, is myself."

She went to her room, was taken ill very shortly afterwards of pneumonia, and never left her bed. She also wrote a letter to her relatives, shortly after being taken sick, declaring she would never get better.

PEOPLE MISLED BY STATEMENT

Less Liquor Drank by Students Than Under Wet Regime.

Saloonist Made Illegal Selling of Liquor a Feature of the Business.

It is objected to local option that it encourages boys to drink liquor, since under this arrangement so many orders are sent directly to wholesalers. It is claimed that boys receive liquor by express who, before the country went dry, did not use intoxicants. We do not doubt that some very conscientious people are misled by this statement. We do not hesitate to say that the statement of the objector is not true.

If one will take the pains to go over to the court house, he will find the records that will show that one of the troubles during the wet regime was with saloonists who sold to minors. The superintendent of the public schools will tell you that the amount of drinking among the boys in those days was very much greater than at the present time. Boys could get liquor with less difficulty during the wet period than at any time since the order changed.

Illegal liquor selling is a notable feature of the business. With the open saloon here there were always men to help the boys get what they wanted from the bar. The chief agent in making boys drunkards is the saloon, and there is no body of men in the community more ready to violate the law than the saloonists. They are flagrant violators of the law touching their relations with minors.

LOCAL OPTION RALLY

Big Rally at Charlevoix Opera House Sunday Afternoon at Three O'clock.

The first of a series of local option meetings will be held at the Opera house Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m. A. L. Coniter, R. W. Kane and other will discuss the question with reference to its effects as follows:

Its effect upon the rate of taxation by the record.

Its effect upon industrial growth of cities and villages.

Its effect upon the laboring man.

Its effect upon crimes and misde-means.

Its effect upon the young man.

We have lived three years without saloons, now it is up to us to look over the record without prejudice and determine the effect. Everyone is urged to turn out and voice their sentiment.

CHARLEVOIX ROCK PRODUCT CO. MAKING MANY IMPROVEMENTS

Most Modern and Efficient Electrical Power Plant in This Section of the State to Be Installed at Cost of $25,000—Present Capacity of Lime Plant to Be Doubled—Year Round Industry.

A trip to the plant of the Charlevoix Rock Product Company, and some investigation as to what is being done by that company, reveals a condition which is possibly known to few of our people. One feature of their operations, here has been that very little has been made public regarding their plans until they were thoroughly matured, and in fact, put into execution. It is a fact that for some time they have planned and been working to, eventually, a very large plant, which is to be constructed in units as trade conditions justify. The machinery being put in at the present time represents the most modern and efficient electrical power plant, in this section of the state. The electrical equipment is now part on the ground and the balance in transit. The boiler installation will be that of the most modern safety water-tube type, and the engine a cross-compound Allis engine, recognized as one of the most efficient type.

The completion of this power plant, which is planned for early in May, will represent a cost of approximately $25,000, and the power generated therein will be used for all departments of the industry. The mammoth crusher will be roughly familiar with his duties has widely extended his circle of friends and acquaintances, and is now in a position to do even better justice to himself and his district. Were a successor elected, Mr. Dodds would not only be deprived of the fruits of his labor, but the new representative would have to begin all over again, and it would be unreasonable not to expect that the interests of the district would suffer for some time, at least.

IS ENTITLED TO HIS PLACE AGAIN

Because of His Earnest Application in the Interests of His District

Representative Dodds is Just at the Point Where He Can Serve Most Effectively

Most of the papers over the district are speaking enthusiastically of Hon. F. H. Dodds as candidate for re-election to congress. They think he is entitled to the place again, because of his earnest application in the interest of his district, and the excellent results he has accomplished. The St. Louis Independent last week contained this article.

Today, Hon. F. H. Dodds, representative from the eleventh district of Michigan to the Congress of the United States, is a guest of St. Louis and we consider it a fitting time to call attention to his claims for re-nomination and re-election to the House of Representatives. The first and best reason why he should be returned is because he has made good. He has stood right on all of the great questions which congress has been called upon to settle. He stood with the farmers of Michigan during the fight against reciprocity, his attitude toward the tariff is that of his constituents, in fact, he has made it his business to represent his district, rather than any special interests in a thoroughly business like, effective, telling manner. He has secured what he wanted, he has made friends in Washington, he has won committee appointments which give him an unusual influence, and on the judiciary committee especially, he has a very high ranking.

Moreover, Mr. Dodds is just at the point where he can serve his constituency most effectively. During his two terms, he has become tho-

GONE TO REST

Mrs. Anna Harrison Was an Example of Patience in Time of Affliction

Mrs. Anna Harrison, was born in Laneshire, England, January 16, 1811, and died February 23, 1912, at the age of 71 years, 1 month and 7 days. She was the mother of three children, Mrs. Alice Simpson, who departed this life, March 11, 1904, age 43 years, James Harrison of Toronto, Canada, and Thomas Harrison of Phelps, Michigan. The two latter still survive. She came from England to Canada in 1874 and from there to Charlevoix in 1894, where she has resided till the time of her death.

She was a faithful mother and neighbor, and was loved by all those who knew her. She was afflicted for several years previous to her death. She leaves as an exceptional example of "patience in time of affliction, and was faithful in her life as a Christian. Those who knew her best will miss her most.

The funeral was held in the Holiness house of worship of Phelps, where many neighbors and friends gathered in respect to the deceased and remaining relatives. Her body was interred in the Charlevoix Cemetery. The funeral was conducted by A. G. Pontius, pastor of the Church of God. Funeral text, Jas. 1:12 and 2 Tim. 4:7.

CONTRACT TO BE CANCELLED

No More Prisoners Can Be Sent to Detroit After September First.

The Question is Now, How Are we to Employ Prisoners in the County Jail

County Clerk Payton received word last week that owing to the overcrowded condition of the Detroit House of Correction, the contract between this county and that institution for the care and confinement of prisoners would be cancelled and that no more prisoners could be received from this county after September. Under the law, six months notice must be given for the termination of the contract between a county and the Detroit institution.

Under this condition, after September 1, sentences heretofore served at Detroit must be served at the county jail. This will be good news to offenders who fear the Detroit House of Correction, as life in a county jail is more attractive than the rigid discipline imposed in Detroit. It is said by prisoners who have tried both places that they would rather serve a term in the Jackson penitentiary than in Detroit, because of the increased severity of discipline and more arduous labor.

This brings us to the proposition as to how to employ prisoners in the county jail. In some counties the stone pile has been found to be a prolific means by which to keep prisoners busy and make them earn their living while serving their sentence. It is the general opinion that if this county cannot use the House of Correction, the number of prisoners will be considerably multiplied, and it has been shown that where counties have no agreement to send prisoners to Detroit, there is an increased number of vagrants and offenders who draw 30 days or more. However, if the stone pile is provided, and these prisoners are compelled to work on the county roads, there will be a tendency to shun this county, particularly by outside disorderly characters in search of free subsistence. In any event, the county is up against it for a place to keep these classes of prisoners. Emmet, Grand Traverse, and several other counties are up against the same proposition. Hard work would be a preventative of crime among a certain class of indigent characters who would rather commit a jail offense than not, if it would bring them board and lodging without expense or labor.

CITY POLITICS WARMING UP

Who Will Head the Republican Ticket is the Leading Question.

TWO CANDIDATES FOR MAYOR

Alderman Oluf Nordrum and A. F. Bridge in the Race for this Office.

Considerable Casting Around for Aldermanic Member in the Wards—Clerk and Treasurer to Be Given Another Term.

With the spring election only a month away, city politics is beginning to come out from under cover and to manifest itself in street gossip and office conjecture. Who will it be for the head of the republican ticket? That is the leading question.

The republicans, in casting about for suitable candidates, have brought out two of our leading citizens, Oluf Nordrum and A. F. Bridge, and petitions are being circulated for both with satisfactory results. Mr. Bridge at first declined to make an effort to land the nomination, stating that he had never been very much obsessed with office holding, but on being urged by his friends, decided to get into the fight, which gives all promise of being a warm one. Both of these gentlemen are good citizens, heavy taxpayers, and the city's interests will be carefully and conscientiously looked after, no matter which of the two is selected by the enrolled republicans at the primary.

For clerk, Ernest J. Miller, the present incumbent, will probably have the field all to himself, unless other aspirants get busy and make their appearance within the next few days. John Cook is the only republican who has made an effort to get into the office of city treasurer, and from what we can learn he is the people's choice, even before going into the primary.

In the wards there has been considerable casting around for proper aldermanic timber. So far the name of George W. Priest has been mentioned in the first ward, Dr. W. R. Barney in the second ward, and in the third, their present alderman, Geik C. Geiken. Other candidates may appear, but so far have kept out of the limelight.

For supervisors, the first and second wards, from all accounts up to the present, seem satisfied with the work done by the present incumbents, F. J. Neesh and Charles J. Zetter and this honor will be again loaded to them. In the third ward the name of E. B. Ward will be presented to the voters for the office. Mr. Ward has served this ward in the capacity of alderman for several years, and is fully qualified to fill the office of supervisor. Unfortunately W. H. Miller saw fit to enroll as a democrat, thus making it impossible for him to be a candidate on the republican ticket.

BOTTLING WORKS BURNS

Totally Destroyed By Fire Tuesday Afternoon—
Loss $2,500.

Thursday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock fire was discovered in the Charlevoix Bottling Works, which totally destroyed the building and contents. The plant was owned by Ed. Seaman, who gives his loss at $5,000, with $2,000 insurance.

Mr. Seaman and helpers had been working in the building part of the afternoon and were out on Round lake bringing ashore a fish shanty, when the fire was discovered. The only way he can figure out the fire started was from the stove exploding, or sparks from the chimney in the second floor. Mr. Seaman says he will rebuild at once.

Mr. Mossogion is well known in the city and will undoubtedly carry on the business in the same successful manner as formerly. Mr. Ashdon will accept a position with Ben Vettari during the summer months.

CHAPTER XI

THE MAN OF AFFAIRS.

"W"hy don't you take it yourself?" questioned the man of affairs.

Freckles' clear gray eyes met those of the angel's father squarely, and he said, "If you were in my place would you take it to her yourself?"

"No, I would not," said that gentleman quickly.

"Then why ask why I did not?"
came Freckles' lamblike query.

"Hess me!" said the angel's father.
He stared at the package, then at the lifted chin of the boy and then at the package again and muttered, "Excuse me."

Freckles bowed.

"It would be favoring me greatly if you would deliver the hat and the message. Good morning, sir," and he turned away.

"One minute," said the angel's father.
"Suppose I give you permission to return this hat to person and make your own acknowledgments."

Freckles stood one moment thinking intently, and then he lifted those eyes of wondering truth and asked:

"Why should you, sir? You are kind indeed to mention it, and it's thinking you I am for your good intentions, but my wanting to go or your being willing to have me ain't proving that your daughter would be wanting me or care to bother with me."

The angel's father looked keenly into the face of this extraordinary young man, and he found it to his liking.

"There's one other thing I meant to say," said Freckles. "Every day I see something and at times a lot of things that I think the Bird Woman would be wanting pictures of badly if she knew. You might be speaking of it to her, and if she'd want me to I can send her word when I find things she wouldn't likely get elsewhere."

"If that's the case," said the angel's father, "and you feel under obligations for her assistance the other day you can discharge them in that way.
She is spending all her time in the fields and woods searching for subjects. By all means let her know if you find subjects you think she could use, and we will do anything we can for you if you will give her what help you can and see that she is as safe as possible."

"It's hungry for human beings I get," said Freckles. "And it's like heaven to me to have them come.
When it comes to protecting them I'd risk my life, to be sure, but even that mightn't do any good in some cases.
There's a good many dangers to be reckoned with in the swamp, sir."

The angel turned on him with impulsing eyes. She was highly stirring and not unreasoned to being thoroughly.

"Now are you satisfied? Will you come?" Freckles went.

On every side were kept busy giving and receiving the cheerful greetings. She walked into the parlor exactly as if she owned them. A long row of people stared with varying degrees of interest and curiosity as Freckles and he went. He glanced at the angel. Now would she see?

"On my soul!" he muttered under his breath. "They don't even touch her!"

She turned the full battery of her eyes on the attendant.

"I want to mix a drink for my friend," she said. "He has a long and tired drive home, and I don't want him starting off with one of those old pharmacy sweetmeats that you mix just on purpose to drive a man back in ten minutes. I want a clear, cool, spurting drink that has a tang of acid in it."

The angel commanded the drink and carried the brimming glass to Freckles.

He said to the mellowest of all the mellow-voices-of-his-voice, "I'll be drinking it to the Swamp Angel."

And as he had said to her that first day the angel now cautioned him, "It drinking slowly."

As the screen door swung behind them one of the men at the counter asked of the attendant, "Now, what did that mean?"

"Exactly what you saw," replied he rather curtly. "We're accustomed to it here. Hardly a day passes that some poor, God-forsaken mortal and bringing him in. Then she comes behind the counter herself and fixes up a drink to suit the occasion."

"Mighty queer specimen she had this time," volunteered another. "Wonder how he is?"

"I think," said a third, "that he's McLennan's Lumberlost guard, and I suspect she's gone to the swamp with the Bird Woman for pictures and knows him that way."

Out on the street the angel walked beside Freckles to the first crossing and there she stopped.

"Did you insist on taking that drink because you knew how intoxicating it would be?" asked Freckles.

"No," said Freckles, "you did not."

"Oh, I just enjoyed that," she cried.

"Those hateful, stinking old things! I had a big notion to pluck one of them, but I thought maybe some way it would be best for you that I shouldn't.

They needed it. That didn't scare me, and, as for the Bird Woman, she's accustomed to finding snakes, tramps, cross dogs, sheep, cattle and goodness knows what. You can't frighten her
